DIRECT APPROPRIATIONS TO REPLACE MILLAGE TAXES

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—The senate passed the appropriation committee bill making a direct appropriation of $825,000 for new buildings at the institutions under the state board of control. This appropriation is a substitute for the former millage tax of one mill, which, on the present valuation, would yield about $1,000,00.

The committe proposes to act similarly in regard to appropriations for the educational institutions.

Direct appropriations are in contradiction to recommendations made by Governor Clarke. He advised a millage tax for every expense of all the institutions.

WOMAN'S BODY NOT PART OF BANKRUPT'S ASSETS

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—The body of Miss Dollie Morgan, after her death, would be of no value and should not be considered an asset or liability in the settlement of the bankrupt Mose Levich business, according to M. H. Whittaker, referee in bankruptcy.

This is the answer to the question of Levich asking whether the bill of sale that he holds over Miss Morgan's body after her death should be considered in the settlement of his business.

Levich came into possession of the bill of sale in January, 1907, when the young woman entered his pawnshop and for $10 gave him the right to it after her death.

TUBERCULAR PATIENTS NOW MUST BE SEGREGATED.

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—The senate passed the board of control committee bill, which will require all counties of the state to segregate and provide for all indigent tuberculosis patients. The measure passed the house and will now go to the governor.

SAYS DRIVER NEGLIGENT; SUES GARAGE PROPRIETOR

Ida Grove, Ia., April 10.—Chris Gebers, administrator of the estate of William J. Gebers, who was killed at Cherokee on August 6, 1914, when an auto ran off the Little Sioux bridge has brought suit for damages against Charles Van Patton, [illegible]stein garage man, in the sum of $[illegible]. The plaintiff claims that Van [illegible]on permitted an employe named Charles Mace to run the car, and that the latter did not attend to his business in the proper manner nor exercise usual diligence.

FATALLY SHOOTS HUSBAND; CLAIMED ACCIDENTAL

Council Bluffs, Ia., April 10.—Blanche Frantz, 22, is being detained by the police pending the outcome of probably a fatal shot which, she says, was inflicted accidentally when her husband, Will F. Frantz, 25, stood beside her as she was fooling with a revolver in her home in Omaha last night.

In a lucid moment Frantz corroborated his wife. Surgeons say Frantz cannot live.

MUSCATINE—William Huttig, pioneer lumberman died at his home here yesterday following an attack of pneumonia. He was the founder of sash and door factories in Muscatine, Kansas City, St. Louis and Billings, Mont., and also organized the Muscatine News company. At the outbreak of the civil war he organized the first regimental band west of the Mississippi.

SENATE WILL NOT REPEAL NONPARTISAN JUDICIARY LAW

Des Moines, Ia., April 8.—The Iowa nonpartisan judiciary election law will not be repealed at this session of the legislature. The senate adopted the committee's report for indefinite postponement of the Klinker repeal bill by a vote of 29 to 13.

Senator Darrah, for the elections committee, asked that the bill go on the calendar on request of Senator Helmer. On a roll call this was defeated, 20 to 23.

TANGLED HOME TIES BROUGHT TO SURFACE IN FIGHT FOR CHILD

Plaintiff's Second Husband and His Three Wives Appear to Give Testimony.

Ottumwa, Ia., April 10.—While Judge Hunter was hearing a case involving the custody of a child which was in dispute between the parents, who are divorced, parties interested in the action sat in the court room who presented one of the queerest relationship entanglements ever presented here or perhaps any other place.

The title of the case was Emma Lough vs. George Lough. The contention was over the possession of their minor son, Emmet Lough. On January 27, 1913, a divorce decree signed by the local court gave the boy to the father, who lives near Ollie, on the grounds that the mother was unable to take care of him. In the testimony it was shown that Emma Lough was the daughter of Frank Lough and wife, who have been divorced. Frank Lough was in court, as was his first wife, the mother of the plaintiff. His second wife was at home ill.

When Mrs. Frank Lough, No. 1, mother of plaintiff, entered the court room she met her son by a former marriage, a man named Carter. She also met her second husband, Frank Lough, and her present or third husband, named Hux, was with her.

Emma Lough, plaintiff in the case, met her first husband, George Lough, whom she divorced two years ago to marry Robert Leahy.

Leahy was there and met his first wife, Emma Lough Leahy, from whom he is now divorced, and he had with him his second wife. After the divorce of Emma Lough Leahy she married Frank Ryan, who also had been formerly married, and his first wife was within two blocks of the court house during the trial.

The plaintiff is but 18 years old, has been married three times, her mother the same number of times, her father twice, but her first husband found once sufficient. Her second husband was married twice and his wives were present at the trial as were her three husbands.

HOUSE GIVES APPROVAL TO INITITIAVE AND REFERENDUM

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—The initiative and referendum amendment to the constitution was approved by the lower house of the legislature yesterday, the vote being 57 to 32. If the senate concurs in the house action the amendment will go to the voters at the next general election.

The joint resolution carrying this amendment was started on its legislative course two years ago when both houses of the 35th assembly voted their approval. Considerable opposition developed to the measure in the two years intervening, fostered by special interest, and early in the present session the house committee on constitutional amendments voted the bill for indefinite postponement, which was approved by the house.

Representative Shaeffer then filed a motion to reconsider and finally secured favorable action.

GOLD BULLION IS SHIPPED TO NEW YORK AS SILK

Council Bluffs, Ia., April 10.—A large amount of gold crossed the state of Iowa yesterday guarded by a small army of railroad detectives. The gold cargo was billed as a silk consignment.

Eight carloads of bullion passed through Council Bluffs late yesterday en route to New York city. It came from the Pacific coast. Railroad detectives fairly swarmed about the train while it traveled over the 15 mile stretch between South Omaha and the Council Bluffs yard limits. The train was delivered to the Rock Island railroad here by the Union Pacific. The bill of lading at the local freight offices indicated a shipment of silk.

About four weeks ago another so-called special trainload of silk was sent east through here.

SENATE MEMBERS BLOCK ALL EFFORTS AT REPEAL

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—Although a large number of legislators were chosen on the distinct platform of repealing some of the objectionable legislation enacted at the previous session, it seems doubtful whether they will "get by" with very much of their program. This shows the difficulty of making a state legislature responsive to the wishes of its constituency when opposed to a few "scientists" on the other side of the program.

Here are some of the measures of the Thirty-fifth general assembly against which there has been very strong objection, but which now seem destined to survive. Capitol extension, taking state and county superintendents away from popular vote, state highway commission, nonpartisan judiciary. The repeal movement on all of these laws got through the house, but the senate has blocked completed action.

MINIMUM WAGE PLAN FOR WOMEN IS DEFEATED

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—The senate yesterday killed the Greene-Thomas maximum hour and minimum wage bill. The vote was 15 to 32.

If the bill had been passed female labor would have been limited to 54 hours a week and nine hours a day and would have received a minimum wage of $1.40 a day. Miners also were taken care of in the bill.

Similar bills are pending in the house, but even though that body pass them there is no chance of getting such a measure through the senate at this session.

SECTION FOREMAN ADMITS WRECKING ROCK ISLAND TRAINS

Mason City, Ia., April 10.—Ross B. Johnson, a section foreman of the Rock Island here, has confessed to derailing through train No. 56 Sunday night, by half throwing a switch. He also confessed to derailing three other trains in the past four months. He was the first man to assist in cleaning up the wreck and pretended to be giving assistance in looking for the persons who threw the switches. His wife is prostrated and threatens to commit suicide. She has been taken to a hospital.

VEILED WOMAN THROWS ACID IN GIRL'S FACE

Dubuque, Ia., April 9.—Appearing at the home of Mrs. A. M. Geary late last evening, a heavily veiled woman, wearing blue glasses, called for Miss Ella Geary, aged 21, and, after a few words, hurled acid into the young woman's face, destroying the sight of the right eye. The other eye also may be lost. The acid frightfully burned the victim's face. Mystery surrounds the author of the crime, although she is believed to be a married woman, prompted to the act by jealousy.

AUTO CONFISCATION BILL HELD DRASTIC

Some "Drys" In Iowa House to Balk on Supporting This Part of Program.

Des Moines, Ia., April 9.—Conservative members of the house will make a stand against what they term to be an absurd program to enforce prohibition in Iowa when the most drastic of 10 regulatory measures comes up for final disposition on Friday of this week. It is the bill by Senator Whitmore, which provides for the confiscation of automobiles used in transporting liquor for illegal purposes. Present indications are that the entire lineup of 10 bills offered by Senators Whitmore and Allen, and passed in the senate with scarcely a change, will go through both branches of the general assembly. The house passed eight of the 10 bills in one day.

The main argument relied upon by the more conservative representatives, men who voted in favor of statewide prohibition, is that too drastic laws will react at the next election. The warning was made upon the floor of the house that if the measures were all passed as presented, the republican party will suffer at the polls in 1916.

While opposition was met on practically all of the measures, probably the strongest will be against the automobile law. It is claimed that such a law would be taken advantage of, that a person driving across country in an auto might be subjected to a great embarassment without being guilty of any infraction of the prohibition laws.

Another of the more drastic measures which met with considerable opposition was what is known as the suitcase bill. It prohibits any person from carrying liquor in hand baggage when intended for unlawful purposes. As originally drawn, the bill limited the amount that might be carried to one quart of beer and one pint of whisky or similar beverages, but this provision was withdrawn when the house passed the bill.

Extension Live Issue.

Members of the legislature who thought they had the capitol extension out of the way when they refused to pass a bill by Senator Whitmore to abolish the act of the last general assembly find themselves confronted with another contest. A bill by Ball, of Jefferson county, passed the house. It provides for selling off about one-fourth of the land already purchased and repeals the remaining tax of about $1,200,000.

When the bill was sent to the senate it was supposed it would go to ways and means committee the same as in the house. Instead it went to the committee on public lands of which Senator Nye of Bedford county is the chairman. Much to the surprise of the senate the bill was reported out with the recommendation that it be passed. The votes in committee are said to have stood as follows, on the question of reporting favorably: For—Nye, Chase, Voorhees and Green; against—Perkins and Fellows.

It is believed a close fight will be waged in the senate to pass the Ball bill. The measure is not as drastic as the one previously voted down.

New Ouster Provisions.

An important addition to the Cosson removal laws is provided in a bill by Foster of Guthrie which passed the senate. It makes it possible to oust all elective or appointive county, township and city officials for cause. As the law now stands it applies only to mayors, police officials and certain county officers.

Attorney General Cosson has made an enviable record in weeding out undesirable officials by the law which bears his name. Twenty-six have either voluntarily resigned or lost their cases when the statute has been brought into play against them.

If the house concurs in the amendment members of a city council as well as a mayor will be subject to the law as will township trustees and many other officials.

BOARD STAND PAT ON COURT HOUSE CONTRACT.

Rock Rapids, Ia., April 9.—The Lyon county board of supervisors is "standing pat" on its refusal to contract with Architect Smith, of Des Moines, for preparing plans for the new court house. A preliminary agreement had been made to employ Mr. Smith but the board first balked on giving him all of the authority which he asked. Later the board came into possession of a Des Moines newspaper detailing a claim that Mr. Smith had paid a bonus for securing a certain large contract. After receiving this information the board decided to annul all dealing with him. Mr. Smith was here the first of the week seeking to remove the prejudice that had been aroused against him, but the board firmly declined to use his services. No matter who is employed as architect the board will reserve some rights in supervising the contract and the local sentiment upholds this determination.

BLUE SKY BILL NOW THROUGH BOTH HOUSES

Des Moines, Ia., April 9.—By a vote of 33 to 8 the Iowa senate passed the Ring "blue sky" bill, thus putting the matter up to the governor provided the house concurs in a few slight amendments made by the senate. As passed, the "blue sky" law is an inspection measure to prevent fraud in the sale of stocks and bonds.

The passage of the "blue sky" law will give the secretary of state opportunity to make some appointments. He is given such assistants and clerks as the executive council finds to be necessary. The question of salaries is left with the council.

MALVERN BANKER PAID $1,195 FOR $195 CHECK

Malvern, Ia., April 9.—When a check bearing the signature of Dick Fisher, of Randolph, was presented at a Malvern bank for payment the teller passed out $1,195 and the man and woman to whom it was paid went their way.

Later it was discovered the check was for only $195. The couple was found and all but $160 of the $1,000 overpaid returned to the bank. The man claimed it was all that had been handed him by his wife and he turned out his pockets to show he was telling the truth.

FORT DODGE—C. A. Olson, street commissioner at Dayton, Ia., committed suicide with a revolver in his office. His son found his body when he arrived with his father's team in response to a summons by telephone from his father that he wanted to use the horses. Olson was 66 years old and leaves a widow and four children. He was a pioneer resident of Dayton.

DES MOINES—The senate reconsidered and passed the Foster bill to permit counties to vote bonds for the permanent improvement of roads. The measure was defeated Monday.

RESULTS OF ELECTIONS FOR SUPERINTENDENTS.

LeMars, Ia., April 7.—Miss Erma Plath, at present a teacher in the Sioux City schools, was elected yesterday as county school superintendent for Plymouth county. Miss Plath was born and reared here, being a graduate of the LeMars high school and later of the State Teachers' college. There were three candidates in the field including Miss A. C. Donahoe, who has held the office for the past four years. The vote was: Miss Plath, 22; Miss Donahue, 7; William Wood, 4. One director failed to vote and one was absent.

Ida Grove.—Wilson Jones, present incumbent, was reelected county superintendent yesterday afternoon by a majority of one vote. There were 17 delegates, and he received nine. F. R. Ketcham, superintendent of the Ida Grove public schools being his opponent. Mr. Jones has been county superintendent for eight years and it was thought that he would have very little opposition. Mr. Ketcham's strength came as a big surprise.

Primghar, Ia., April 7.—At the meeting held here yesterday to elect a county superintendent, a resolution was adopted condemning the present method and advocating a return to the former system of electing county superintendents by vote of the people. The vote on county superintendents was: J. J. Billingsly, superintendent since 1905, 18; J. M. Evans, 3; Anson B. Harvey 1.

Rock Rapids.—E. T. Gilman was reelected county superintendent of schools at the meeting of presidents of school boards held here yesterday. Mr. Gilman has held the office for a number of years coming here from George, where he was pricipal of the schools.

Council Bluffs.—F. S. Puryer was reelected county superintendent here over E. E. Coe, of Shelby, and Miss Mary Carter, of Charles City.

Storm Lake.—H. C. Moeller, for the past two years county superintendent of schools was elected superintendent in Blackhawk county yesterday, just as he was about to be reelected at Buena Vista. He will take up his duties September 1. No choice was made of his successor.

Marshalltown.—C. E. Schutt, principal of the State Center high school, was elected county superintendent on the first ballot here.

Dubuque.—Joseph Y. Flynn was elected superintendent over H. B. Smith, incumbent, 20 to 8.

Clinton.—C. E. Cozzins, principal of the Lyons high school, was elected county superintendent.

Logan.—Susie T. Faith was re-elected county superintendent of schools of Harrison county. Rolland Myers, of Dunlap, R. F. Butler, of Modale, and Mrs. Cutler were the other candidates in the field.

Other county superintendents elected yesterday were Cherokee county, Lewis McDonald; Crawford county, F. N. Olry; Carroll county, George Gallaway; [illegible] county, D. M. Odle; Sioux county, F. E. Fuller.

DEFINITE START MADE FOR BUILDING PERMANENT ROADS

Des Moines, Ia., April 9.—A definite move toward permanent highways in Iowa has been made in the senate by the passage of a bill by Heald, of Linn county. It provides for the creation of road districts and levying of a tax over a period of years to pay for permanent roads. The board of supervisors is empowered to lay out the road desired to be improved and to create a district. Plans and specifications will be drawn up and the amount of the tax levy necessary to cover the expense estimated. The whole is then to be submitted to an election, which may be called especially for the occasion. If carried, the tax is levied and the money may be anticipated by the issuance of bonds. Provisions are made in the bill that donations can be received from private individuals or corporations to defray in the expense of such an improvement. It also provides for the maintenance of such a road when completed. The bill applies only to roads outside of cities and towns.

A bill having much the same result in mind, by Foster, of Guthrie county, was first defeated and later passed on reconsideration. It provides for the issuance of county bonds for highway improvement.

SENATE DID NOT CONFIRM NAME OF GARDNER COWLES

Des Moines, Ia., April 9.—The Iowa senate refused confirmation to the appointment of Gardner Cowles, principal owner of the Des Moines Register & Leader for a place on the state board of education. A variety of causes led to this unexpected action. Some of the senators were personally affronted at Mr. Cowles on account of criticisms by his newspaper; others thought the state board, through combination with an influential newspaper, might exert too much power.

There was considerable opposition to the confirmation of A. M. Deyoe as state superintendent, on the ground that the claim had been made, when the salary of this office was increased, that better talent would be secured under the new plan. Getting the same official, at a considerable increase in cost, did not appeal to some of the members as convincing proof of the merit of the change.

These appointments were confirmed: A. M. Deyoe, for state superintendent; William Dennis, member parole board; Ole O. Roe, state fire marshal; Paul E. Stillman and E. P. Schoentgen, members of state board of education.

ACCUSED CONDUCTOR GETS COURT AWARD OF $9,000

Fort Dodge, Ia., April 9.—A verdict which will be of much interest to Iowa people was returned by a jury in the district court at Waseca, Minn. The verdict was for $9,000 damages in favor of C. J. Tierney, formerly a conductor on the Minneapolis & St. Louis road, running from Fort Dodge to St. Paul. Mr. Tierney is well known here.

The case has attracted much attention. Tierney last July was discharged by the road on the charge of "knocking down" fares, the evidence having been furnished by spotters, working for the National Security company, in which trainmen are bonded. Tierney claimed the case against him was a frameup by the "spotters," and brought suit against the railroad and bonding company. The judge dismissed the case against the railroad, claiming that it had a right to discharge employes, but the bonding company was held to be liable if the report was proven false.

MARSHALLTOWN—After asking his wife to pack his suit case, with the announcement that he was going to take an afternoon train for St. Paul to buy cattle, W. A. Vincent, aged 60, a stock buyer of Algona, Ia., committed suicide by hanging himself in his barn. Vincent's ill health is attributed to be the cause for the act. He was in good financial circumstances, owning several farms and having a fine business.

The richest man in the world is Czar Nicholas of Russia. He once gave $100,000,000 from his private treasury to Russia's war fund.

WAR PARTY RALLIES ARE FORBIDDEN BY GOVERNMENT

Rome, April [illegible] which favor the prevention [illegible] in the war and [illegible] continuance of the [illegible] preparations [illegible] Sunday through the efforts of the police have [illegible] ings. The leaders [illegible] however insist that [illegible] be held, either privately [illegible] squares. The authorities are arranging police and military measures to prevent disorders.

LET SERBIA ALONE TO DEFEND ITALIAN FRONT

Geneva, April [illegible] abandoned the idea [illegible] fresh offensive movement against Serbia, the Tribune says. It is learned from an absolutely reliable source and will remain strictly on the defensive in order to send additional troops to the Italian frontier. The same authority is quoted as saying that Russia was decided at Vienna and Russia on the subject of peace [illegible] that it is impossible to know what the result has been.

ASKS FOR EXTENSION OF MISSOURI PACIFIC LOAN

New York, April 10.—As the result of a series of conferences between bankers and [illegible] F. Bush of the Missouri Pacific railway company today issued a request for a one year extension of the 4-5 $45,000 notes of that road which mature June 1 next. Mr. Bush stated in his request that the board of directors is seeking to prepare a comprehensive financial plan which will adequately provide for the future of the Missouri Pacific system and that this plan could be perfected before the notes matured.

TOPEKA IS SWEPT BY DISASTROUS FIRE

Topeka, Kan., April 10.—Fire destroyed several buildings in the center of the business section here today entailing a loss estimated at a quarter of a million dollars. The flames centered in the three story building of the Fahnestock Clothing company whose loss was estimated at $210.000.

These pictures, just received from Italy, show the fighting men of that nation ready for action the moment war is declared. RUMORS OF PEACE FOUNDED ON FACT Diplomats Refuse to Comment on Informal Representations Until Negotiations Take Definite Form.

Washington, April 12.—Although [illegible] denied by Secretary [illegible] Ambassador Count Von Bernstorff that informal peace proposals have been submitted by the German government, information [illegible] official circles [illegible] be denied.

It is [illegible] that the German ambassador called at the state department with [illegible] reports. The representations have not yet been put in writing officials [illegible] They were put for what informally might [illegible] as a feeler to test out the sentiment of the enemies of Germany and until there is some definite development no official comment will be made by the diplomats upon [illegible] the preliminaries.

That [illegible] the storm in the conduct [illegible] diplomatic negotiations. It will be remembered that in the Japanese-Russian negotiations the [illegible] the two countries agreed mutually at the last minute that there was no possible chance of concluding peace negotiations.

Neutral [illegible] the special correspondents at Washington have been directly and indirectly informed of the efforts being made to bring about an agreement between the European belligerents. The press associations are handicapped in handling such reports because of their relations with the countries involved. It will be remembered however that in the Japanese-Russian negotiations at Portsmouth, the manager of one of the largest press associations in America played a very important role.

It is unlikely that there will be early developments in the conclusion of a truce. It is pretty well established, however, that all of the warring nations are tired of the war and looking for a means to bring it to an end. Long negotiations necessarily must follow and months may be required to arrive at a basis upon which the entente powers and the Germanic allies can get together. The fact remains that the tendency in every European capital is toward peace and that movements have been set in motion for the conduct of the informal negotiations.

KILLS BILL FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION

Lincoln, Neb., April 10.—The house of representatives this morning killed the proposed constitutional amendment for the election of supreme court judges by districts. It could muster but 56 votes and required 62. Democrats Blauser of Jefferson and Barker of Franklin refused to vote for the party measure and two republicans, Fulltz, of Furnas and Natzman of Cass, voted with them. Absentees were responsible for the death of the bill party pledge.

The house also defeated the efforts of the county officers of Nebraska to secure an extension of term for two years and indefinitely postponed the bill.

The senate in a blanket motion, killed 63 house rolls which were waiting for action. This included every proposed constitutional amendment sent over from the house. The house killed two of the senate's proposed amendments. No proposition will be submitted to the people next election time unless by the initiative and referendum.

ORIENTAL AFFAIRS CAUSE NO CONCERN

Washington Government Professes to Be Satisfied With Far East Situation.

Washington, April 12.—The general impression given today by officials of the Washington government conversant with the progress of the Japanese-Chinese negotiations was that they were nearing a conclusion which would prove to be generally satisfactry.

According to official advices, the conferences of the last few days at Peking have cleared up many of the misunderstanding over the meaning of some of the Japanese demands and have brought about substantial progress toward an agreement on the points under discussion.

IOWA DEMOCRATS TALK "DRY" PLANK

Impromptu Caucus Held to Consider Campaign of 1916—Hagemann For Governor.

Des Moines, Ia., April 10.—Democratic members of the Iowa senate engaged in an impromptu open caucus today upon the subject of a temperance plank in the state democratic platform of 1916. It took place during a debate on the bill by Senator Hagemann, of Bremer county to give cities of Iowa local option. The measure was defeted, 13 to 29.

Senator Hagemann, who has been mentioned as a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor, warned his fellow democrats that if his bill was defeated it would be an issue in the next campaign. He intimated that he would be glad to run on such a platform. Senator Clarkson, said to be the choice of the "dry" democrats for governor, resented the statements in a warm reply to Hagemann. He lauded Wilson and Bryan for their stand on prohibition and resented the inference that "red nosed politicians" were to run the democratic party in this state. Senators Shrup and Caswell defended the Hagemann bill on the grounds that it was needed to moderate the drastic anti-liquor legislation of this assembly.

When the roll call was taken the republican members did not respond and only eight democrats answered. A rule which requires all members present to vote was invoked and the bill lost.

BRITISH CASUALTIES GROW.

London, April 10.—The fourth British casualty list issued by the war office this week, showing 1,238 additional loses, was given out today. Of the total, 403 were killed and the others wounded. These losses were due largely to the fighting last month, which resulted in the capture by the British of the French town of Neuve Chappelle. Today's list brings up the total casualties announced this week to 5,323, of which 1,734 men were killed.

VAUDEVILLE MAN DIES.

Bloomington, Ill., April 10.—Rudy Schroeder, aged 50, was found dead in bed this morning. He was formerly known in minstrelsy and vaudeville as a club swinger.

Boxing is now one of the subjects of physical instruction in the state schools of Australia.

GERMANY RENEWS HER COMPLAINTS

Charges U. S. Shows Favoritism Toward Allies—State Department Preparing Vigorous Denial.

Washington, April 12.—Germany has sent to the United States government a note complaining that the latter has accomplished nothing in its diplomatic correspondence with the allies to obtain for American exporters the right to ship foodstuffs to the civilian population of a belligerent country. The communication intimates also that the United States has virtually acquiesced in the British order in council, prohibiting commerce with Germany.

In view of these considerations, the German government calls attention to the fact that the allies daily are obtaining large shipments of arms and ammunition from dealers in the United States, and declares that the American government, while insisting on its legal rights to ship arms to belligerents, does not with equal energy pursue its rights to ship foodstuffs and noncontraband articles to the civilian population of Germany.

The note urges that, irrespective of the formal aspects of the question of shipping arms to belligerents, the spirit of neutrality should be observed.

Will File U. S. Reply.

Officials of the state department have begun the preparation of a reply which will be delivered shortly to Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador here. The complaint that neutral countries had submitted to the influence of the allies in connection with the right to ship conditional contraband and foodstuffs to the civilian population of a belligerent has been made before by Germany in her diplomatic notes—this being cited by the German foreign office as one of the reasons for proclaiming a submarine war zone of the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland. The United States denied in its reply then that it had been silent on the question, and called attention to its diplomatic notes to Great Britain dealing with these subjects.

It is understood that the reply to the present complaint will deny vigorously that this government has acquiesced in any way to the order in council and probably will refer to the last note sent by the United States to Great Britain, urging at length its opposition to the viewpoint of the allies on the blockade question.

HUERTA IS COMING TO START TROUBLE, CLAIM

Washington, April 10.—The Villa-Zapata agency here gave out a statement today stating that it would "in due course address itself to the government of the United States, indicating its view of the presence of General Huerta on American territory, it being the purpose of General Huerta and the cientifico element, according to information in the possession of the provisional government, to initiate a hostile movement along the frontier, in violation of the neutrality laws, for the purpose of attempting to procure their restoration to power in Mexico."

Unofficially, it was stated that the Villa agency would protest against the admission of Huerta, who is now en route to the United States.

Have You a Bad Back?

Does your back ache night and day, making work a burden and rest impossible? Do you suffer stabbing, darting pains when stooping or lifting? Most bad backs are due to hidden trouble in the kidneys and if the kidney secretions are scant or too frequent of passage, proof of kidney trouble is complete. Delay may pave the way to serious kidney ills. For bad backs and weak kidneys, use Doan's Kidney Pills—recommended the world over.

Here's a Triple-Lever Disc Harrow That Beats Them All!

The new Rock Island Triple-Lever Disc Harrow, Bonanza Jr., has, through its many exclusive features, jumped into a class of its own—'way ahead of every other disc harrow made. For years it has led all others in service, durability, ease of operation and speed. Now, with its new third pressure lever, its new steel stub pole and its new double leaf spring steel seat, it is beyond comparison. The first time you see this wonderful triple-lever disc harrow you'll know why it is outselling all other disc harrows at any price.

Rock Island Bonanza Jr. Triple-Lever Disc Harrow

Instead of being angled from the center, the gangs are angled from the ends. The side thrust is delivered directly to the bumpers. No matter at what angle the gangs are set, these bumpers always bump, and the angle or point of contact doesn't change, so the bumpers never cut or wear out.

Saves expense, repairs and draft. The inner ends of the gangs are always together.

They roll against each other at one rounded point. End thrust is entirely neutralized by these bumpers.

The new steel stub pole cannot split or break and adds strength to the harrow, making it even more durable than it was before. Neat in appearance—light in weight.

The old seat spring has been replaced by one of spring steel, double leaf type, giving greater comfort to the operator.

The Third Pressure Lever

on the Bonanza Jr. is simple and strong. It is directly in front of the operator and the pressure is applied close up to the gangs, giving more leverage. Bonanza Jr. discs cut just as deep at the outer ends as they do in the center. This means cutting at an even depth always.

New Features Plus the Old Ones

Remember all the new features of the Bonanza Jr. have been added without sacrificing any of the old ones. You can't make any mistake in buying the Rock Island Bonanza Jr. Disc Harrow—it's a sure winner.

Observations
By "Jur Man About Town"

Just as we urged a campaign against the common housefly in last week's issue, wouldn't it be a good idea to [illegible] The idea is by no means new It was taken up several years ago by different societies, but their work attracted little attention until the last couple of years Last year the work was urged in thousands of localities. And this early in this year one of the most widely circulated magazines in United States devotes an entire page to the subject, joining in the work with all its influence and showing why and how the birds can be encouraged to live closer to us. A campaign for the birds will be aiding in the campaign against the fly, too, for every living bird means death to huddreds or thousands of flies And the birds need little encouragement. What they need most is protection The boy should be taught to build bird houses instead of using the air rifle Put in some nesting places this spring And do it right away. If you do not care to build a house for them, any small receptacle placed in the trees about the yard will answer the purpose. Few of them will remain empty through the summer. Then, if you really enjoy bird-life you can place a feeding trough for them These will bring them to you by the scores and their activities toward keeping your premisies free from insects will more than repay for the few cherries or other fruits they may eat

TOAST TO LAUGHTER

Here's to laughter the sunshine of the soul the happiness of the heart, the [illegible] the privilege of purifying the wealth of the poor, the bead of the cup of pleasure, it dispels dejection, banishes blues and mangles melancholy, for its the foe of woe, the destroyer of depression, the enemy of grief, it is what kings envy peasants, plutocrats envy the poor, the guilty envy the innocent, its the sheen on the silver of smiles, the ripple on the water's delight; the glint of the gold of gladness; without it humor would be dumb, wit would wither, dimples would disappear and smiles would shrivel, for it's a glow of a clean conscience, the voice of a pure soul, the birth cry of mirth, the swan-song of sadness

AN EDITOR'S COMMISSION

Says the Litchfield (Ill.) News Herald Not long ago a man came into this office and stopped his paper because he said it was printing a lot of things about the same people and he was sick of it Now when something goes wrong with the country the government appoints a commission to investigate and find out what is the matter, the first thing a commission investigates is the man who made the holler to see if the man who made the holler was a reasonable holler So we appointed a commission consisting of ourselves to nvestigate this man We just followed the man's career ever since we knew him. The first thing that happened to that man was that he was born, but he had nothing to do with it However we mentioned him although his parents were entitled to the credit When he was in his early twenties he got married We mentoned that including the name of the bride the preacher, etc., in fact we mentioned everything but the preacher's fee which wasn't worth mentioning We never mentioned the fact that he never won any premiums at the county fair, because he never exhibinted anything We never mentioned his name in the list of committees, besause he never attended anything We never mentioned his name in the list of donors, because he never donated as much as a doughnut We certainly have been treating this man shamefully but we agree to run a nice obituray when the time comes Elaborate Chinese Funerals.

Funerals in China are most elaborate, no expense being spared to give the departed a grand send-off, no matter what his station in life. Indeed, bankruptcy, owing to the lavishness of a burial ceremony, is no uncommon thing. The never-ending train of ceremonials that follows the demise of a near relative is apt, in many instances, to take not only all the time of the descendants, but all their wealth. For 100 days after the demise an altar is maintained in the home of the surviving relatives, before which they bow and weep, not once, but often daily. Relatives are gathered from far and near and quartered on the already afflicted family. Priests are retained for many days to aid in the ceremonials.

Careless Omission Costly.

A "monkey-wrench" mechanic will often omit placing cotter pins or retaining wires in the crown nuts in the motor transmission case or differential housing. Should one of these nuts shake off it will more than likely get into the gear mesh and break up the whole mechanism.

Awaiting His Turn.

The Scotch minister rose and cleared his throat, but remained silent, while the congregation awaited the sermon in puzzled expectancy At last he spoke "There's a laddie awa' there in the gallery a-kissin' a lassie," he said. "When he's done Ah'll begin."

THE BABY

By OLIVE BARTON.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The great singer was spending her short vacation in an unusual way. It might be said also that it had been none of her own choosing. What did she know of baby food, or mending holes in Johnnie's stockings as big as buckwheat cakes? How did she know how many days Flossie should wear the same petticoat?

The whole three were in bed now, and the great singer relaxed luxuriously. She knew no one in the town, so there was little danger of callers.

Her thoughts were as busy as the fingers of the little maid of all work, now doing dishes audibly in the kitchen. She was thinking how odd it was for her to be there at all.

A telegram had been responsible. Sister Jane and her husband William had been called away by trouble in William's family. There had been no one else to ask to look after the children. She had never even seen the baby!

Steps suddenly sounded on the little front porch like so many bangs on a bass drum. Tillie, out in the kitchen, heard and was at the door before her temporary mistress could stop her.

"Is this where Miss Farrell is staying?" asked a man's voice.

"Joe!" exclaimed Miss Farrell impatiently. "Will he never learn that there isn't a bit of use in chasing after me, wherever I go?"

Joe stamped off the snow noisily and came inside. He came in big, glowing and clumsy. The little room seemed full before he got farther than the doorway. Peggy, in her chair before the fire, half turned—just enough for him to see the top-loftical expression.

"Peggy!" he exclaimed delightedly, coming forward.

"Good evening, Joe," evenly. "You chose a nice night to come so far. Won't you sit down?"

Joe sat down on the other side of the fireplace. "You look awfully sweet, Peggy. Aren't you glad to see me?"

"No!" deliberately.

"I—I wouldn't have come—only I thought of something after—after we'd been talking the other night."

He didn't answer.

You see," shifting uneasily, "if you would marry me, you could go ahead with your singing just the same as ever. You could sing just as well as Margaret Farrell Sturtevant, as you can as Margaret Farrell. Now, couldn't you? That wouldn't be interfering with your career, would it? and, Peggy, you used to care a little for me!"

She watched the fire a minute, relenting. "It's hard to be cross with you, Joe. You just won't let people, will you? I'm going to be extra nice now and explain.

"You see, Joe, your plan won't work for a hundred reasons. You love a home. You're a regular home man if there ever was one. I can't make a home. It isn't in me. I hate everything about a house. I love my music better than anything on earth, and I can't give it up."

What she really meant was that the intoxication of public homage was a sensation she would not care to renounce.

"All right, my girl, you're the doctor!" Joe got up and looked at his watch. "I didn't suppose it was much use, but I thought I'd make one more try. I won't bother you again, ever. Good night, Peggy, I've just time for my train."

He was gone! Peggy turned out the light and sat watching the fire.

"I guess I'll get the baby her bottle and go to bed," she yawned.

A week passed. Peggy was getting expert on mending kneeless stockings, sorting clothes and bathing babies. It never seemed to be a bother any more. Then one night the baby got sick, very sick.

The doctor and trained nurse hastily summoned took it philosophically, saying there was an equal chance of life and death. But Peggy, a poor, white, stricken thing, never leaving the side of the little crib, thought the world was ending.

Morning brought a change for the better. The baby would live! Peggy slipped silently away to her room and sat thinking in the cold, wintry dawn.

Mr. Joseph Sturtevant was just settling himself for a nice winter's morning nap. The telephone rang. He was awake in an instant.

"Is that you, Joe? This is Peggy! I have changed my mind. And that's all I'm going to tell you until you come out and hear for yourself!"

"Yassah!" triumphantly said old Brother Cuddyhump. "De revival was a glorious success! "'Dat's all right, muh brudder,' hollered Pahson Bagster, 'but yo'll hatter 'spence wid dat hawn! Yo' isn't de on'y pusson yuh dat ha been purloined fum deir sins, and yo' wants to give de rest o' us a chance to brag a little, too!'"—Kansas City Star.

Destroying the Mosquito.

The way to destroy the mosquito in its larval stage is to pour a little kerosene on the surface of the pool or stream inhabited by the industrious wiggler. The oil shuts out the supply of oxygen from the water beneath. The wiggler rises tail first to the surface and tries to force his breathing tube through the thin layer of oil. He fails and promptly dies from suffocation—a suitable death for so fratricidal an insect.

Virtue of Good Manners.

Good manners, while costing little, accomplish much. They may perhaps be among the "little things," but who will not agree that it is just these little things that makes the big differences in our pleasure or pain, comfort or discomfort? They oil the wheels of life and cause them to run smoothly and noiselessly. To those who can command its varied scale, from genial warmth to icy frigidity, politeness is perhaps the most powerful weapon of defense and offense.

Rub With Paper.

By rubbing the bathtub with crumpled newspaper as soon as it is thoroughly dry, every bit of grease, soap, lint and the marks from the water will be easily and quickly removed. It is not necessary to do any scouring if the tub is smooth, but it is quite necessary that it be dry.

Found Humanity Frail.

In a town in New York a disagreeable man set a trap for his brethren and sisters. Twenty-five were tempted with dimes slipped into their change and then watched to see what they would do about it. Seven men and one woman pocketed the change uncounted and never knew of the bait. Four men and two women found and returned the coin. Eleven succumbed to greed and, unconscious of the catch upon them, pocketed the illicit gain. Even happier than those who demonstrated their rectitude are the eight whose indifference to lucre made them winners without blame. Unhappy are the detected pilferers indeed, but probably the sorest people in the town are the remaining 2,013 inhabitants who missed the chance to make either a record or ten cents.

The first trousers worn in London were of plain, light colored cloth, and fitted very tightly; almost as tight, we may believe, as those in this country a generation ago. In the second season striped and other figured cloths were used by some, but such trousers were regarded as quite plebeian, and fit for wearing only in bad weather, when the streets were muddy, or as a sort of rough outing garb at the seaside. A favorite material for trousers worn by men of fashion was an elastic stockinet, which fitted literally "skin tight." Beneath such garments, to supply the deficiencies of nature, men were not averse to wearing false calves and other paddings on their legs. Straps passing beneath the foot were used to keep the trouser legs held down in place.

Individuality.

We hear much about the development of individuality for a go-as-you-please experience. That is fatal doctrine. It takes right conditions to develop a right individuality. As a rule, man is the creature of circumstances. If he comes out of a swamp he will be covered with mud. The entire doctrine is developed by the parable of the sower. It depends altogether upon where the seed falls whether it shall bear fruit or not.—Columbus (Ohio.) Journal.

A Good Lap Holder.

"What is your grandmother good for, anyhow?" asked a teasing ten-year-old boy of six-year-old Tom. "She's too old to work and too fat to run about and play with. What is she good for, anyhow?" "Well, she's good to hold me on her lap," was Tom's reply, "and I kin jist belt the stuffing out of anybody that has anything to say agin my grandma."

The Big German Guns

There have been many descriptions of the 42-centimeter guns since the present war began, but one of the most interesting is that furnished by Reginald Wright Kauffman, author of "The House of Bondage." Mr Kauffman has been, for some months past, a realistic novelist face to face with terrible realities. He has written about these a book which he calls "In a Moment of Time," a narrative of his personal experiences in the European war. It was during the last few hours of the bombardment of Antwerp that he first heard the "42s."

"In the last rush for escape from the city," said Mr. Kauffman, "I was one of a crowd surging out of the town through a darkened street. A ray of light—perhaps it was a searchlight—was playing on a portion of the street far ahead of me.

"Suddenly something bolted past above my head toward that light—something hot, scorching, and of tremendous size, something that roared like a frightened train and sped like a meteoric sun The very draft of it seemed first to suck me upwards and then hurl me far forward and sidewise on my face. I fell, as a man might fall before a cyclonic blast from the furnace where worlds are made, but as I fell, I saw, or thought I saw, that meteoric sun explode up there where the searchlight played If I thought of anything it was of an earthquake.

"I know that there shot out a sheet of flame that must have been 200 or 300 feet wide and fully as high I know that a Niagara of stones and clay leaped upward from the distant past. I know that a hail of pulverized stone poured all about me, and that the detonation rocked the city of Antwerp as a giant might rock a cradle that he stumbled over I know that now, but then all that I knew clearly was that all our previous alarms had been trifles and that this at last was the beginning of the 42-centimeter guns"

Origin of Foundling Hospitals.

From the Memphis Commercial-Appeal

Foundlings' hospitals are said to have started with the London institution of that name. In 1756 the authorities inaugurated the policy of leaving a basket at the gate. Any person with a newly born infant to dispose of was invited to place it in the basket, ring the bell and run It was thought that this would be an improvement over having them thrown into the Thames.

It was, but not by a broad margin. In four years the hospital got about 15,000 babies The authorities tried to rear them in the asylum, and more than 10,000 died before reaching their first birthday anniversary Now the policy is to board out the foundlings in inspected homes.

A British royal commission on poor laws that investigated this subject said that of each 1,000 children born in poor law institutions, 45 died within the first week of life and between 268 and 292 died before reaching one year of ago. It said

"It may well be that human infants, like chickens, cannot long be aggregated together even in the most carefully devised surroundings, without being injuriously affected."

Accidents From the Fog.

From the Christian Herald

Many accidents are reported as the result of a dense fog that settled down upon the east Atlantic coast the other morning A house across the street could not be seen There were collisions on the railroads, the elevated and the surface lines ferryboats ran into each other, and into wrong landing places ships went to wreck all because the people could not see No matter how keen the physical eye it cannot see unless the atmosphere be clear Men are often lost in intellectual fog and flounder about aimlessly and without destination Some are enveloped in a foggy moral atmosphere They do not see the moral quality of an action and suffer many collisions. There are theological and spiritual fogs which sometimes settle down over ministers Luckily they are few and clear vision returns when the sun arises higher up in the heavens Rev Dr Hugh Black in a current magazine article advises ministers who have doubts to burn their own smoke and not work out any of their unbelief into the sermons to act as a black cloud of smoke to darken souls As the sun drives away the fog in the natural world the Sun of Righteousness scatters the fogs of unbelief and opens the bible the cross and life to the eye of faith

Fetishes of Fiction.

F C. in the New York Mail.

The clock in the tower was just striking midnight—"

The streets were silent save for the shouts of a few late revellers—"

"Unconsciously his footsteps had led him to the spot—"

"Looking warily up and down the deserted thoroughfare he leaped lightly over the low wall that screened the house from the gaze of passersby"

"The soft strains of a Strauss waltz floated to him on the still night air—"

"Two figures emerged into the moonlight He recognized them instantly and his breath quickened"

"He tried the lock and it gave beneath his fingers Cautiously raising the sash—"

"All was silent as with the hush of death, save for the soft intake of his own breath."

"In the silver moonlight that filtered through the shutters he could see distinctly every object in the room"

"Hark! What was that? He had distinctly heard a footstep, and in the darkness he had the eerie feeling of a presence close beside him."

"Then, close to his ear, a voice said 'Don't move' If you stir you're a dead man'"

Hard on the Booze Angels.

From Collier's Weekly

The somewhat genial F P A, another New York humorist, is also on the wing Here's what he says about Kansas:

"There isn't much poverty in Kansas, and the kind of misery that the liquor states abound in is unknown. I heard two traveling men, riding from Newton to Hutchinson, discussing it. 'Since Kansas went "dry," ' one said, 'I make these little towns and sell a lot of stuff Couldn't touch 'em before And if towns that size were in a "wet" state, I'd lose my job for stopping off at 'em' 'Same with me,' the other said, who 'represented' an adding machine house 'These states beef mighty little when business is bad in other parts of the country I'll bet New York'll go "dry" before long'"

All the wails of the booze angels who howl about blind pigs, wood alcohol, and allied topics can not alter the main facts. The saloon does not get the money under prohibition. In time the liquor habit is broken and as that happens booze ceases to be an issue and people turn to better ways of living.

NEW ARRIVAL IN THE BRITISH CAMP "BUCKING THE BLANKET"

"Riding the goat," that mysterious process of initiating a newly elected member of a secret society, has nothing on the process of initiating a new arrival in the military camp. "Bucking the blanket" is almost on a par with "riding the goat." The photo shows a new arrival in the British camp—a brawny son of Scotland—who is being tossed up in a camp blanket. As a rule a recruit enters into the fun of being pleasantly "ragged" just as much as his comrades who put him through.

From the Kansas City Star

The sea reprisals of England and Germany have brought out much extravagant talk on both sides about war to the knife war to the last man, war to the last charge of powder and war to the last loaf of bread

Fortunately these phrases none of which is new, belong rather to the literature of war than to its practical operations None knows better than the statesmen that war cannot be prosecuted to the last man When it reaches that stage it is a kind of war that is dealt with by the hangman, and while it is probable no nation will soon be reduced to the last charge of powder and the last loaf of bread, it is very safe to say that if such a situation should come about those resources would not be used in the prosecution of a foreign war The police would need the powder to shoot the domestic financiers who would try to corner the loaf

It is, however a recognized belligerent right of nations to issue these war to the knife manifestoes whenever occasion requires and to phrase them in the most picturesque language of defiance All nations have been pretty good at it The Phoenicians threw a bar of iron into the Mediterranean sea and declared they would not be subjugated until it rose and floated on the surface Frenchmen put a wooden horse with a bundle of hay tied around his neck on the ramparts of Thionville and proclaimed to the besieging Austrians that the city would surrender until the horse had eaten his hay

All fighting animals are given the same way Cocks crow and beat their wings in the pit and while the loudest crowing may not affect the result of the main it has sometimes been known to affect the result of the betting The elephant doubtless has his own psychology of noise and trumpets as he charges the lion does not underestimate the terror of his roaring and even the mosquito denied the brute strength by Nature is yet gifted with a ventriloquial voice that enables him to attack his victim from an entirely different quarter than that which his song seems to proceed

Certainly no nation can be blamed for declining to admit that there is a limit beyond which it will not fight Such an admission would not only be of very poor spirit, but a fatal military blunder as well. No patriot would march on any such announced policy and no loan would float So while it is a necessity of statesmanship and of military policy to proclaim this war as a last ditcher it is letting out no state secret to hint that when it is over there still will be left in England and Germany enough powder and bullets to give disarmament a prominent place on the peace congress program There will be bread left and men to sell it at a profit and there will be money left to pay the interest on the war debts. Those debts translated into investments coupons and annuities, will for generations be a source of life and luxury to the descendants of those Englishmen and Germans who now know them only as a source of privation and death.

So all this talk of starving entire civil populations must not be taken to mean too much. About the last person in the world who would desire to see the population of Germany exterminated is the English trader ,and about the last person in the world would desire to see the population of England exterminated is the German trader Statesmen may fulminate and captains command but the English gun has not yet been cast that will blow up an English market abroad and before Germany attempts, in any seriousness, to destroy its market in England it will reflect that export beer is, after all thicker than water

What This Money Would Do

If the estimates of the New York Journal of Commerce be anywhere near correct, and the war is costing Europe $50,000,000 a day, then it has cost up to date something like $7,200,000,000

Of course, a large part of this has not gone up entirely in smoke and has not been wholly wasted Much of it has helped to keep the machinery of normal life in motion, much of it has gone into the channels of trade at home and abroad But, on the other hand if we add to the direct outlay in money the even more positive cost in the loss of hundreds of thousands of valuable lives, in the impairment of national efficiency, in the destruction of property and the impoverishment of millions of people, the estimate probably would be increased rather than diminished

Suppose this $7,200,000,000 had been applied to constructive instead of destructive purposes. What problems of poverty might not have been solved what schemes of social regeneration might not have been advanced, what projects of national betterment might not have been realized in the comparatively near future The menace and reproach of savage and criminal want which Liverpool and London and other congested centers of population hold for England might have been in a fair way to be removed or relieved Germany might have bought her way to that "place in the sun" which she may not be able to reach by fighting How much good $7,200,000,000 wisely and scientifically applied could have done how much evil and waste has it actually wrought It would have paid much better for England Germany, France and Russia to issue the loans which they have issued and to spend the money which they have spent since the war began in works of internal improvements, in the construction of railroads, in the purchase of territory for congested population They would have incurred a big debt, but they would have had something very tangible to show for it—something better than graveyards and exhausted energies We rather think when it is all over and they come to count up the bill they will wish they had done almost anything with the money except what they did do with it If this war does not teach kings any sense, it will surely teach the people who raise the money and shed the blood which war demands that it is the most unprofitable of all investments

What Is Business Afraid Of?

From the New York World.

In his Philadelphia speech, Elihu Root declared that "the men who control the government today are the men who have been fighting the tariff and the trusts and the railroads so long that when they come to administer the government they cannot rid themselves of an underlying hostility to American enterprise

Is this true, or is it mere assertion?

So far as the tariff is concerned, the democratic revision of 1913 was about what the republican revision of 1909 was expected to be. It was not radical It was not a more radical revision than the republicans themselves had promised in the 1908 campaign. Nor did it indicate hostility to business for the agricultural schedules were reduced in greater degree than the manufacturing schedules

There was no hostility to business in this revision of the tariff unless every revision that reduces rates of duty must be interpreted as hostile to business

As for the trusts there has been no adverse legislation against them under the Wilson administration The only legislation enacted was adopted at the request of the business interests themselves to clarify the law There has been less trust prosecution under the Wilson administration than under the Taft administration. There has been less political agitation against trusts and corporations since Mr Wilson became president than at any time since the Sherman law was enacted in 1890

As to the railroads, all the restrictive legislation now on the federal statute books was adopted by republican congresses The only important action affecting railroads which has been taken since Mr Wilson became president was the granting of permission to increase their freight and passenger rates The ruling of the Interstate Commerce commission in this instance was favored not only by the administration but by the American people as a whole

As to finance the only constructive measure enacted by the United States government since the civil war is the new banking and currency law under which the United States has been able to weather the financial storms of the most disastrous war in history without the shadow of a panic Even Mr Bryan, who led the free silver crusade in 1896, used all his influence to put this great measure on the statute books.

Where is the hostility of which Mr Root speaks. * * * Where is there a disposition in the states or in the nation to harass or persecute legitimate business of any kind, big or little?

What, then, is business afraid of? We do not know and we cannot even surmise Not in 20 years has it had so little to fear from government Not in 20 years has it known so clearly what was expected of it under the law What more can it ask?

The great weakness of American business at this time is the great weakness of Mr Root himself It refuses to trust the people. Mr Root retired from the Senate because, as it is generally believed, he was afraid to submit his candidacy to a popular vote, yet he would have been re elected by an overwhelming majority Business seems to be in much the same state of mind as Mr Root, and for the same reason. It is afraid to trust the people because it is ignorant of popular opinion and suspicious of popular good faith.

That is madness The government of the United States is not hostile to business The people of the United States are not hostile to business If business cannot see these plain, unmistakable facts, then business is blind and ignorant and weak-witted.

New York's East Side.

Clarice Baright, in the National Magazine

Territorially considered, the East Side of New York does not really seem large enough to justify all the attention it has received It lies within a comparatively small area of less than two miles square, covering that district south of Fourteenth street to Catherine street and from the Bowery east to the East river But of the things that have happened within that area and are continually happening, volumes could be written though as a matter of fact they seldom are, for there are but few who understand its life, and the East Side is jealous and guards its secrets carefully from all who do not know and understand

Eight hundred thousand men, women and children—oh so many children—live within this restricted area In this, the most congested district in America, nearly 1,000,000 souls are striving working loving and living all intent upon getting the best out of life before their time comes to go and how they work! Often successful in just keeping body and soul together.

There is nothing quite, to which the East Side can be compared. It is the melting pot of all nations The four corners of the earth contribute to it. It is old fashioned, like the old lawyer who cannot be convinced that a brief written under the electric light with a typewriter sounds as well as that same work of art prepared by pen and candlelight Even to this day, incredible as it may appear, there are still lawyers in New York who prepare their briefs by candlelight, and to them the electric light is an abomination

Just so it is with the great East Side. There are old families living there now who cannot, to this day be convinced that the telephone is of any great advantage to humanity

Backyard Parks.

From the Baltimore American

It has already been convincingly demonstrated here in Baltimore, that the scheme of tearing down division fences between city home backyards and developing the unobstructed stretch of space thus provided as a continuous flower garden or a grassed lawn, is no chimerical or impractical dream. It has been demonstrated because it has been done on several back stretches and partially accomplished in hundreds of instances. By partially accomplished we mean those instances where two or three or four adjoining householders have thrown their backyards into a common and developed the enlarged spaces into flower gardens. This backyard park idea, developed to the limit of potentiality, would mean the tearing down of all fences on both sides the midway alley and beautifying all the yards upon some harmonious scheme of ornamental gardening.

There are comparatively few block centers in which this complete scheme of ornamentation can be realized, for the reason that many owners wish to build a garage, a stable or some other kind of outbuilding in the backyard and fronting along the alley. While the placing of rear buildings in one or more of the backyards of a block interferes with the complete realization of the backyard parking scheme, it need not prevent the partial carrying out of the plan. And as to back buildings, their ugliness and inharmony can be greatly modified by planting climbing roses or other climbing vines along their sides and rear ends. There is nothing so utilitarian—not even a stable—that every thought of beautification should be abandoned in connection with it.

One Certain Result of the War.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

The men are in the trenches. Tens upon tens of thousands of them will never return home. In all the warring nations, when industry begins again to summon its recruits, there will be great gaps in the lines. The volume of work to be done, making up for lost time and repairing the prodigious damage wrought, will be greater than ever before and the number to do it will be smaller.

This means a new summons to women. Already in Edinburgh they have been called on to serve as trolley car conductors. Women labor and child labor must be drafted. In all sorts of industries in which they have not heretofore been employed women will serve. They will be driven by economic pressure out of their homes into the workshops and into practically every phase of human activity There will be no talk then of where there place is and no captious criticism of their competency.

A result of the war, most tremendous in its importance, and far reaching in its influence on the trend of world affairs, will be the enfranchisement of women.

Canadian mills produce 12,000,000 barrels of cement yearly

Matutinal.

Arise from the fetters of dead
The morning is breaking
The grass is too tenderly green
For hearts to be aching
In the azure and rose of the dawn
Is life in the making

Awake and come forth from the old
From pain and from aching
The south wind is breathing of dew
Where the violet's peering
And over the meadowland banks
The buttercup's creeping

Young April is smiling again—
Her tears were but showers
The brown thrush is wooing his mate
In whispering bowers
And the grayness of winter is lost
In a riot of flowers

Come out from the chamber of death
Where sorrow is pailing
Out yonder in sweet forest glades
The bright dew is falling
And the soul-stirring voice of Spring
To the great deep is calling

—Leo A Bennett

Choose

Hope soars to highest heaven on wings of light,
Despair, in nether darkness, mates with fate;
Hope leads the wanderer up the rugged height,
Despair, in dreary tones, laments "Too late."
Hope girds the loins with courage for life's fray
And nerves the soul to battle for the right.
Despair retreats, surrenders while it may,
Or slinks with coward steps from the fight.
The will is ever monarch of the mind
Health, fame, and success, on its mandates.
—John M. Richards in Youth's Nautilus

Interlude

The days grow shorter and the nights grow longer,
The headstones thicken along the way
And life grows sadder with each succeeding stronger
For those who walk with day by day

The tear comes quicker and the laugh comes slower,
The courage is lesser and dare and dare
And the tide of joy in the heart is lower,
And seldom covers the reefs of care

But all true things in this world grow truer,
And the better things of life seem best
And friends are dearer and friends are fewer,
And love is all as our ships go west

Then let us clasp hands as we walk together,
And let us speak softly love's sweet tone;
For no man knows the moment whether
We two pass on—or but one alone!

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in Current Opinion.

A Sigh.

It was nothing but a rose I gave her
Nothing but a rose.
Any wind might rob of half its savor
Any wind that blows

When she took it from my trembling fingers
With a hand a chill
Ah, the flying touch upon my fingers
Stays, and thrills them still

Withered, faded, pressed between the pages,
Crumpled fold on fold
Once it lay upon her breast and ages
Cannot make it old!

—Harriet Prescott Spofford

An Epitaph

Write on my grave when I am dead,
Whatever road I trod
That I admired and honored
The wondrous works of God

That all the days and years I had,
The greatest and the least
Each day with grateful heart and glad
I sat me to a feast.

That not alone for body's need
Which takes the lowest place
I gave Him grace when I did eat
And with a shining face

But for the spirit filled and fed
That else must wander cold
With sun and stars and bleeding head
And dew and evening sky

The beauty of the hills and seas
Brimmed that immortal cup
And when I went by fields and trees
My heart was lifted up

Lay me in the green grass and write
Upon the daisied sod
That still I praised with all my might
The wondrous works of God

—Katharine Tynan, "Flowers of Peace" Scribner's.

For Uncle John.

From the Chicago News.

The small daughter of the house busily setting the table for expected company when her mother called her:

"Put down three forks at each place dear."

Having made some observations on her own account when the expected guests had dined with her mother before, she inquired thoughtfully

"Shall I give Uncle John the knives?"

Cropping a Dog's Ears.

Cropping is not easy, but the employment of the steel clips, sold by kennel supply house for this purpose makes it a surer and simpler operation than formerly. The clips should be fastened securely to the ear in the correct position, and the part of the ear outside the metal cut out quickly and cleanly with a sharp razor Cocaine is sometimes used as a local anesthetic but this is hardly necessary, for the pain is very slight.

Cropping had best be done when the pup is nine or 10 months old, and proper training of the ear after cropping all important, if a correct carriage is to be induced. It is at this point that the amateur fails dismally, and he should, if possible, receive a few practical lessons from a competent man or else send his dogs to such a one to be cropped. Surgeon's plaster, wax, or even plaster of Paris are employed to fasten the ears back across the head so that when released they shall more smartly erect.

Besides cigarets and athletics, Chetwynd had aroused in himself the ambition to become an architect. It struck him as rather humiliating that he should have to give up his chosen profession and go to work in a bank. His father, as a compromise, agreed to procure private instruction if he cared to continue the work begun at college, but he would have to assimilate it after banking hours.

"Corinth is no place for an architect who really wants to get anywhere," protested Chetwynd.

"The town is growing," my boy," remarked his father.

"New York is the only place," grumbled the son. "I could do something there."

"I fancy Corinth will do for you to practice on," said Horace grimly. "I think, in the end, you will see the advantages of learning the banking business. A Blagden must be at the head of the bank, my boy. I cannot live forever."

"Don't say that, father," protested Chetwynd, with a leer that was meant to be genial.

"You may take up architecture as a side issue, if you like," said Horace patiently. "Just as other men go in for the collecting of first editions, and so on. I know a successful merchant in Boston who devotes his spare time to the painting of portraits, just as a recreation, don't you see. It is

"I think I'd like to be a banker for recreation, father, and an architect for keeps."

"You will find I am right," said Horace, finally.

"Yes, sir. You always are," agreed his son obediently.

Along toward the middle of the ensuing May, the county board decided to erect a new court house in Corinth. With calm New England zeal they prefaced the ultimate decision by offering a medal to the high school youth who submitted the most artistic design for the building, promising that the final plans should be based on the successful candidate's ideas by the architect who secured the contract. A day or two after the original announcement was made, the words "or any student in architecture" was inserted in the invitation. This was done in order that Chetwynd Blagden might compete.

The boys of Corinth high school took to the proposition with a zest that was flattering, but not surprising. Eric Midthorne, a senior by this time, had a natural bent for drawing and construction. He as well as Chetwynd had notions of becoming an architect and builder, with the distinction that Eric was seriously in earnest, heart and soul. He was to enter Harvard in the fall, his interest in the court house competition was enhanced by the hope that he might win and therefore go in to college with a no uncertain prestige behind him. He worked faithfully, diligently after school hours on the plans, unhindered by the thought of examinations, for he was well up in his studies and confident. Other boys in his class went about the plans half heartedly, once they learned that Eric was putting his hand and brain to the effort. They glumly agreed among themselves that they would have no chance against him, and it was pretty generally conceded that he would carry off the prize, hands down.

Chetwynd was allowed to go to New York over Saturdays and Sundays for special instruction. To all intents and purposes, he was vitally interested in the effort to win. He must have worked hard while in the metropolis, for he always looked tired and red eyed on his return to Corinth. On several occasions he failed to reach home before Monday night, but his parents understood and sympathized when he confessed that he had worked all the night before and was so exhausted that he had overslept and missed the early train. He spent two weeks' vacation in New York early in June, returning at the end of that period, haggard and pale from the effects of over study. His parents were alarmed but gratified. They liked the bull dog spirit that moved him to such splendid endeavor.

"He will win," pronounced Horace, calm in a restored pride. "There can be no doubt of it. You cannot appreciate had pleased I am, Presbrey, over his determination. He has it in him. Nothing can stop the boy now. He has found himself."

"He will be a great blessing to you, my dear friend," said Mr. Presbrey. "I have always said that he had it in him, if you remember."

"Perhaps," said Mr. Blagden thoughtfully, "it was for the best that he got away from the evil influences at college."

"I rejoice that you are becoming reconciled to that view, sir. You may recall my remarks at the time I ventured the opinion that—"

"Really, Presbrey, I don't remember anything that was said at the time," interrupted Horace impatiently.

"Of course not," agreed Mr. Presbrey readily. "How could you? It wasn't to be expected of you. But you see now that I was right, I am sure. Out of evil there—"

"You can't imagine how happy his mother is, Presbrey," said Horace, who had heard all this before and affected not to hear it now.

"She must be," said Mr. Presbrey heartily.

It may be added that Mr. Presbrey, despite his consoling prophecies, was the most amazed man in Corinth over the remarkable regeneration of Chetwynd. Somehow, down in his pious heart, he experienced difficulty in rejoicing.

One Saturday morning, a week before the awarding of the prize for the best design, Eric, having completed his drawings and laid them away in his room to await the time for their presentation to the committee of architects, invited Mary and Joan Bright to go for a short sail in the bay. He was an adept at handling a sailboat, confident but not reckless, and many an old seaman had complimented him on his prowess. He had taken Mary and other girls out beyond Lord's point on numerous occasions, but never before had he screwed up courage to ask Joan to take a seat in the boat. While he gloomily deplored his lack of initiative in this respect, she, it must be said, rather petulantly, but in secret, resented what she chose to regard as a rude oversight—a slight, if you please.

To his surprise and joy, she consented to go out with him on this memorable occasion, being in a particularly good humor and unusually gracious.

It was not uncommon for the young people of the town to go sailing in the placid little bay; no parent objected if they did not venture into the open sea. The bay was full of fishing boats coming and going and there was little or no danger if the weather was good.

At the last minute Mrs. Blagden refused to let Mary go, keeping her at home on some pretext. Of course that came near spoiling the sport of the morning. Joan, however, arose in her independence and announced her readiness to go out for an hour without Mary.

"I'm glad I haven't an aunt to treat me as she treats you," she said to Mary and then went off to the little pier with the delighted Eric, who, after all, was a bit grateful to Aunt Rena, although in his heart he was sorry for Mary.

The day was bright and clear, with a fine light wind blowing steadily from the ocean. They planned to sail to the point, turn and cross the mouth of the bay just inside the swell of the sea, and then come racing in with a fresh three quarter breeze in two hours they would be back at the pier, where Mary was to meet them.

Joan poised herself comfortably on the rail. Her cheeks were warm with excitement and her eyes danced to the time his heart was singing, all unbeknownst to her. Never in all his life had he been so happy as now, and never so self conscious. She chatted gaily, while he, in his exultation, responded so inaptly that in time forsooth he fell to making hard work of the sail in order to cover his confusion.

He looked out to sea and into his soul there came the longing to sail on forever with her, straight into the boundless waste where he might rise to such heights of heroism that confidence would come to him, and he would not be afraid of her. He was not afraid of the sea, but his heart quailed before that smooth mobile cheek and those limpid, wrathless eyes. And yet he was ineffably happy. Surely he had her all to himself now. But to what purpose?

Steadily the airy craft beat its way through the greenish, glinting waters of the bay, heeling, righting, swashing, sending its genial spray into their faces pointing, as a dog points—as if it were a thing of life with an instinct of its own. Joan dodged and shifted as the boom swung over, laughed with glee when the spray threatened her reefer. Her soft brown hair played in the wind, the red bow at her throat fluttered or flattened as the wind ordained, her trim, slender body was braced against the rush of air, active part, an unconscious of the picture she made.

His head was bare. His dark hair lay back from his forehead. His eyes gleamed with the fever of exaltation. When they were not stealing sly glances at her, they were set straight ahead, focused on the distant point, as if it were a thing to avoid.

"It's great, isn't it?" he called out to her.

"Splendid," she sang. "I love it! I love it!"

"Will you come out again?"

She caught herself up. "I don't know. As he did not press the invitation she was driven to the curt question. "When?"

"Any day you like," he replied eagerly. "Will you, Joan?"

"If your aunt will let Mary come too," she said, mischief in her heart.

Certainly," he acquiesced, much too readily to please her vanity.

"Are you sure you know how to sail a boat, Eric?" she asked, so innocently that his pride was hurt in turn.

"Ain't I sailing her all right today?" he demanded.

She was instantly ashamed of herself. "It was mean of me to ask that question," she cried. "Every one knows you are very skilful, Eric. Of course, I'm not afraid. I'll come whenever you ask me." Then, seeing the glad sparkle in his eyes, "If the weather is fine. It would be awful to be out in a little boat like this if a storm came up. Goodness, what could we do?"

"Beat for the shore as fast as we could," he replied grimly. "We could get in ahead of any storm."

"But suppose that the storm came from the shore and not from the sea? What then?"

"We'd be geese to let it catch us far out. Oh, it's simple enough."

"If we were geese we could swim in," she said gaily.

"Sure," he agreed, and they laughed aloud.

She was silent for awhile, furtively studying his half-averted face. He was bringing the boat around with her nose toward the town, instead of following the course they had planned to take.

"Have you completed the plans, Eric?"

"Yes," he replied. "They're off my mind."

"I do hope you will win. Everyone says you are sure to."

He did not answer at once. It struck her that he was singularly inattentive. The sail flapped viciously and the little craft heeled over as the boom swung around. A vast shadow came swimming out over the water, turning the soft green to a blackish blue. The girl turned her head quickly in alarm.

"Oh!" she cried, here eyes widening.

"Don't be nervous," he said calmly. "There's plenty of time."

From the hills back of Corinth a great wall of black clouds was rushing out upon them, leaping higher and higher against the sunlit opal sky. The very thing she had mentioned, half in banter, had come to pass. Storm clouds were indeed coming down from the shore, and they were ugly, menacing ones at that.

Her remark had caused the enraptured boy to cast a casual glance shoreward. He had seen then, for the first time, the rim of black that capped the green hills, and, without alarming her, he quickly altered the course of the boat. He knew that the storm was close at hand—on of those swift, violent summer storms that swoop out of nowhere, it would seem, and sail down to the sea, to be lost or dissipated in the vast air currents that scorn so small a thing as a land breeze, no matter how fierce it may appear on its native heath.

"You must hurry, Eric," cried the girl, dread in her eyes. "Tell me, what can I do to help? I am not afraid."

"It's funny I never noticed it coming," he muttered irrelevantly. There was much tacking to do, for the wind had shifted and they were still three miles or more from the piers. She sat, still and tense, looking straight ahead into the black banks after this, realizing in some subtle way that it was no time to talk.

They did not reach the piers. Long before they were half way in, the gale broke over the frail craft, whipping it about as if it were a cork. They did not reach the piers and for a good reason.

Instead, they were going out to sea, clinging to the bottom of the overturned boat, lashed and buffeted by blinding waves, and stung by the cutting rain. The sea roared and churned beneath them, the skies thundered and crashed above, and there was no one near to help them, no one near enough even to see them in their plight.

When the boat went over, Joan was hurled far out from its side. Eric was after her in a flash, clasping her in his arms as she came to the surface, gasping and choking. He was a strong, courageous swimmer. Crying out to her to be brave and calm, he struck out to overtake the black, slim bottom of the boat, which was dancing away from them on the waves. It was a hard, almost hopeless task, but he struggled manfully, finally coming near enough to grasp the rudder with his free hand. After a while he was able to draw her up to the center board. There she clung with desperate strength, while he set about the hazardous undertaking of retrieving the long spare end of a rope which whipped about in the sea. He released it from its fastening with his pocketknife, and then then proceeded to lash it across the keel of the boat, looping it first over one oar lock and then the other, all the while climbing back and forth over the slippery surface with the agility and sureness of a monkey.

The girl was in this manner lashed quite firmly to the boat, and there was little or no likelihood of her slipping off into the water if a faintness seized her. After making her secure, he stayed himself in a somewhat similar fashion just opposite her, close enough to support her in case she grew weak with despair and fear.

All this time they had been crying out words of cheer to each other. Neither was of faint heart, for they were young and full of the right to live, but they were full of fear and dread. They were going out to sea.

"Someone will see us," he cried, when he could get his breath. "It's only a little blow. These storms don't last long. The sun will be out in a few minutes. Don't worry, Joan. Mary knows we're out here, and so do lots of people. They'll have boats out in less than no time."

But the storm raged with great fierceness for an hour before breaking, and they were driven swiftly, resistlessly out to sea, where the waves were running high. Time and again they were almost completely submerged. The water-tight compartments in the bow and stern of the boat kept it afloat. They were in no danger of going to the bottom as long as they were not torn bodily from their fastenings. Each time they were swept under by a great wave, his hand clasped her arm in a grip of iron; each time that they came through, half choked, they looked wildly at each other to be sure that one had not been swept away, and each time a dismal smile flitted across their faces.

Eric turned his anxious gaze toward the distant town whenever they rode high on a wave, and each time he searched in vain for a rescuing craft. The town was now so far away that it was impossible to make out the buildings along the shore. The hills were dim and indistinct, even in the bright sunlight that was following the storm. His face grew haggard with worry, his eyes wide with despair.

"What can be the matter with everybody?" he groaned. "Mary must have given the alarm."

"They'll come, Eric," she cried back tremulously. "They will come soon, won't they?"

"Yes," he answered, touching her cheek with his hand. "They're sure to come."

"It would be awful to go away out to sea like this," she whimpered.

"It's my fault—it's all my fault, Joan," he cried, in anguish. "If anything should happen, it's my fault. I am a murderer—that's all I am."

"You must not say that."

"They said I'd be a murderer—"

"Sh! Eric! You couldn't help this. I don't care what they say. You are brave and good and true."

"Have they said it to you?" he demanded, turning his red, water-stung eyes upon her white face.

"No one but Chetwynd. I hate him."

"I say," he shouted, suddenly craning his neck to look far ahead, a thrill shooting through his icy body. "We're going straight toward Eddy's islands. God may be good to us, Joan. We may be driven ashore by one of them. I—I thought we were going due east. I can see the islands away off there—miles and miles. Oh, if we only keep straight for them!"

Eddy's islands were two small reefs, 20 miles off the coast, barren, ugly things that rose high in the air. On one of them was a lighthouse. A space of two miles or more separated the reefs, with a strong current driving between them. Big Eddy had the lighthouse, Little Eddy was without sign of life or vegetation, just a low, forbidding, sea washed plane of rock, full of caves and crevasses. There was no beach on either of the islands, of course, but the rocky formation sloped into the water so gradually that it was dangerous for even small craft to approach close to them.

Too Busy to Marry.

The Woman Homesteader in the March Atlantic.

Mrs. O'Shaughnessy and Mr. Dobbs got on famously. After supper, while she and Elizabeth washed the dishes, she asked him why he didn't get married and have some one to look after him and his cabin. "I don't have time," he answered. "I came west 18 years ago to make a start and a home for Jennie and me, but I can't find time to go back and get her. In the summer I have to hustle to make the hay and grain, and I have to stay and feed the stock all the rest of the time."

"You write her once in a while, don't you?" asked Mrs. O'Shaughnessy.

"Yes," he said, "I wrote her two years ago come April; then I was so busy I did not go to town till I went for my year's supplies. I went to the postoffice, and sure enough there was a letter for me—been waitin' for me for six months. You see, the postmaster knows me and never would send a letter back. I set down there right in the office and answered it. I told her how it was, told her I was coming after her soon as I could find time. You see, she refuses to come to me 'cause I am so far from the railroad, and she is afraid of Indians and wild animals."

"Have you got your answer?" asked Elizabeth. "No," he said, "I ain't had time yet to go, but I kind of wish somebody would think to bring the mail. Not many people pass here, only when the open season takes hunters to the mountains. When you people come back will you stop and ask for the mail for me?"

We promised.

A Russian sentry can be relieved only by order of the officer who placed him on guard. An outpost was about to be relieved when his officer was shot down by a German sniper. Steadfastly the sentry stuck to his post, even though when, after many hours, he was utterly exhausted. When he was almost overcome by cold and fatigue, the czar and his staff chanced to gallop by. His majesty, struck by the man's pitiable condition, stopped to make inquiries and, hearing his story, personally gave the faithful soldier his release.

The reasons for Certain-teed Roofing

Every buyer needs the proper assurance, when he pays for the best quality, that a second or third quality will not be delivered. The market is flooded with too many brands. Some manufacturers with poor facilities too often meet competition by cutting quality. Some wholesalers buy any old quality, put their labels on it, and say it is the best. Our Certain-teed label is backed by the written guarantee of the world's largest manufacturer of asphalt roofings. It gives each buyer the assurance wanted, and our unequalled facilities for manufacturing enable us to sell it at a very reasonable price.

These are the reasons for Certain-teed Roofing

We invite every one interested to come to our mills and see how we make the goods. We know that our Certain-teed Roofing is the best quality that we can make. It's the best quality that can be made to last and remain waterproof on the roof. It is made with that one purpose in view. We also make cheap grade, poor quality roofings to meet the demand for very temporary roofs, but the Certain-teed label goes only on our best quality, longest life product. It is the grade which carries our Company name and endorsement and guarantee—1-ply 5 years, 2-ply 10 years, 3-ply 15 years.

If you want the right quality and want to be sure you are getting what you pay for, insist on the Certain-teed label. The price is reasonable. No one can tell the quality of a piece of roofing by looking at it. The man is not living who can take three kinds of roofing of different qualities and tell with any degree of accuracy the length of time each one will last on the roof. He cannot tell their relative values by looking at them. Why take the chance of guessing, when you can get the safest guarantee on the best quality goods at a reasonable price.

If for any reason you do not care for the highest quality—if you want a temporary roof, we also make goods sold at the lowest price on the market, because we have unequalled facilities, and are making approximately a third of the entire asphalt roofing and building papers of the whole world's supply. Our facilities enable us to beat all competition on price goods as well as on Certain-teed quality.

The difference between the total cost of the goods, the freight, the laying, etc., between quality goods and price goods is insignificant. It is much better policy to cut out the guessing and let the manufacturer of real responsibility insure you on all the vital points. He knows what he puts into the goods and what they will do—you can then insist upon getting everything as represented.

LET'S BOOST BUSINESS

Less Politics—More Prosperity

We have had enough starvation business—enough of political "save-alls" of every party, with their smashing and busting—enough of politicians who promise economy and honesty in order to get into office and then play for votes or party rather than for principle and right, etc. The cost of living is not going down. Let's go after good times and make enough money to pay for the cost of a living, whatever it may be. We don't want cheap living—we want good business and good times for everybody and if we all pull together we will get them.

The game of the politician is to promise everything. Many of them ought to be prosecuted for fraud on account of the difference between what they promise and what they deliver. They're worse than the business man who overadvertises the quality of his goods. Let the business interests, from the laborer to the superintendent, from the office boy to the president, from the hired man on the farm to the owner of the farm, remember that they have a common interest in good business and a square deal in business. Stop listening to the fakers and let's boost ourselves back into good times. It can be done. No more knockers and false prophets are wanted. We are going to be too busy to listen to any except those who promise "good business" legislation.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's fearful devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and there is an unusual demand for Canadian wheat. Canada's invitation to every industrious American is therefore especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves while helping her to raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands can be bought at remarkably low prices. Think of the money you can make with wheat at its present high prices, where for some time it is liable to continue. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government this year is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain.

According to the Democrat, Garner, will likely enjoy a building boom this season. Let's hope the bubble does not burst. It is about time that Garner was waking up to the fact that the balance of the towns in Hancock county would soon leave her in the rear.

We will not mention any names but we understand that a certain farmer not far from town drove up to the Ridder garage the other day with his Ford to see why it was not running just right. Fred said to him "why your engine is missings," and the farmer looked rather shocked and replied, Well, I'll be darned, it was there when I left home.

Corwith has several cases of small pox and according to a number of other items in last week's Corwith Hustler, it seems like a number of the victims must be trying to drown their troubles. Surely Bro. Thompson it can't be after the effects of that notorious revival held there last winter. Better remove Albert Lea and Fort Dodge from your railroad itinerary.

Geo. Mikesh had a narrow escape last week Monday while riding his motorcycle to Belmond. It exploded while he was riding nearly forty miles an hour, throwing him high in the air and igniting his clothing from the burning gasoline. He extinguished the flames with great difficulty and the motorcycle was damaged beyond repair He was lucky to escape with his life —Belmond Herald Press.

We wish to heartily congratulate our successor at Ringsted, Bro. Anderson of the Dispatch who recently received the appointment as postmaster of that hustling little city The Ringsted office was recently raised to a third class office which means a salary of $1,000 per year. We hope Bro Anderson continues to receive party recognition until he is elected to ride the democratic mule in to the Iowa legislature.

L. C Brown who has been superintendent of public instruction of the Winnebago county for the past seventeen years was defeated by Jessie Parker of Lake Mills, last week. We will venture to say that Miss Parker will not hold the office for seventeen years, for when she gets down to Forest City there will be plenty of young men who will try to induce her to change her name to Mrs. Olsen, Hansen, Johnson, or some other son of a Norweigan fisherman.

A small sized riot broke out in Belmond late Saturday evening While not much blood was shed excitement ran high for a time The marshal took a hand and landed one of the interested parties in jail. He was later released, however, and Monday morning all parties appeared before Justice Purdy and pleaded guilty to disorderly conduct and paid costs and one of small fines Three fines of $5 and $1 and costs were paid.—Belmond Herald Press.

While making an auto drive the other day a local man found that he had left his oil can at home Just at the moment some part of the machine needed a few drops of lubricating oil So he stopped at a farm house and called to a small boy whom he saw in the yard. "Say, son, go to the house and ask your mother if she can give me some sewing machine oil or if she hasn't any of that kind, castor oil will do." Presently the boy returned and said: "Ma says she hasn't got any machine oil or castor oil, but if you will wait a few minutes she will fix you up a dose of salts."

GARDEN NOTES

The garden needs to be located conveniently, but not necessarily where it will mar the apperance of the house or lawn. A level soil is best for the garden plot, since sloping ground allows the best soil and occasionally the seed washes away.

Avoid the shade of orchards or other trees, for gardening will be very unprofitable where vegetables are deprived of sunlight or where tree roots take the plant food from the soil.

The garden should be worked up until the soil is fine and mellow, because the garden seeds are very small and need the soil packed closely about about them to germinate well

Avoid green or trashy manure. It is likely to destroy capillary attraction and cause burning out. Also avoid manure that contains weed or grass seeds, because that will make the problem of gardening much more difficult

Long rows are better than separate garden beds for each vegetable, because the long row system makes cultivation with a wheel hoe or hand plow possible It also uses space formerly wasted on paths. Raised garden beds are more subject to drouth.

Diocletian.

Diocletian, who wore a crown so fortunate and so revered, resigned it to retire to the felicity of a private life; and some time after, the necessity of public affairs requiring that he should reassume his charge, he made answer to those who came to court him to it: "You would not offer me," said he, "to persuade me to this had you seen the fine order of the trees I have planted in my orchard and the fair melons I have sown in my garden."

Wood Preservatives.

A surprisingly large number of substances, ranging all the way from the condensed fumes of smelters to the skimmed milk of creameries, have been tried or suggested as means of preserving wood from decay Most of them, however, have been found to have little or no value for the purpose. Certain forms of coal tar creosote, zinc chloride are the most widely used wood preservatives.

Commits Suicide This Evening

Theodore Henschen While Temporarily Insane Kills Himself With Shot Gun---Entire Community Grieved by Rash Act--- Funeral to be Held Sunday

This evening (Thursday) our little village was shocked beyond words when it was passed around from ear to ear, the sad ending of Theodore Henschen. No one when first informed could believe that he had taken his own life but the facts in the case prove so beyond all doubt.

Theodore and his brothers have been renting the Reichart house just west of the depot which they have been using for sleeping rooms and it was there he took his life.

About 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon several of our citizens heard a shot fired but did not give it any thought but later seductions brings out the fact that the dreadful act must have been committed at that time. Anton Ahrenkiel who works in the depot and who has been rooming with the boys went over to the house about 6:40 and discovered the dead body. He was dumb founded and rushed up town and and informed John Henschen. Doctors were then called but life had been extinct ever since the deed was committed, as the nature of the wound could not mean anything but instant death. A 12-guage automatic shot gun was the weapon used and the greater portion of the back of his head had been blown away by the discharge. Temporary insanity brougnt on by despondency was the reason for the rash act.

Theodore Henschen was born in this vicinity 30 years ago, and had spent practically his entire life here. His father and mother had both answered God's call and he leaves to mourn his sad ending, his brothers, Fred, John and Edward of this place and Julius of Grannville, North Dakota and three half brothers, besides a very large circle of friends. He was a whole souled, jovial, straightforward young man and to know him was to like him, and loyal to his friends even to the bitter end. If anyone would have suspicioned that he fostered such dire thoughts they would have done their utmost to have dispelled them from his mind. Some noticed that he seemed to be in a despondent or worried mood of late but could not think his mind had became poisoned to that extent.

He was a carpenter by trade and a mighty fine workman, and could always secure work when others were forced to remain idle—because of his pleasing manner and excellent workmanship. He was also a musician of more than ordinary ability but the past year has not taken any active interest in musical circles.

His death has brought the bitter cup of sorrow to the lips of relatives and friends and has cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood, and to his broken hearted brothers who now sit in sorrow where his footsteps shall never again find echo, we join with their many friends in extending to them our sincerist sympathy. When they have drained the cup may the peace that passeth all understanding come to them from One who cares for each little sparrow that falls.

The funeral services will be held at the German Reformed church Sunday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock and interment will be made in Evergreen cemetery.

PLANT GENEROUSLY

The Size of the Piece Planted Has Important Influence on Yield Per Acre

According to the tests made by the Iowa agricultural experiment station and elsewhere, it is important that the pieces of potato planted be large enough, because size has a direct influence upon the yield per acre. In tests conducted several years ago in a number of different counties, the planting of one eye pieces gave an average yield of 76.5 bushels per acre. The planting of two eye pieces gave an average yield of 94 bushels per acre. One-quarter potatoes were planted and the yield jumped to 103.5 bushels. Where halves were planted, the yield amounted to 113 bushels. A maximum yield of 140.5 bushels per acre are secured where large whole tubers were planted. In Iowa few farmers plant over 10 bushels of potatoes per acre, and many only 8. It is the experience of the experiment station at Ames that these figures are too low and it is recommended that at least 12 to 16 bushels of seed per acre be used. It may seem expensive to plant so heavily, but common sense and many experiments justify it. An additional bushel or two of potatoes used as seed may add ten to twenty times that amount to the final yield.

BAND CONCERT AND PIE SOCIAL

Klemme Opera House, on Wed. Eve., April 28

The band will pull off a band concert, pie social and pie eating contest at the opera house next Wednesday evening, April 28th. This will be something new and novel for this vicinity and the pie social alone is going to be worth the price of admission but the band is going to make the affair doubly worth your time by giving a concert of all new up-to-date music and other features are being planned. Klemme has a band that she can well feel proud of but it takes money to keeps things going and everyone should plan to attend and help the boys out and they will reciprocate by giving us some mighty fine open air concerts this summer. Ladies who bring pies will be admitted free—bring as many pies as you wish.

FRANK ROBEY INJURED

Frank Robey was a runaway victim this evening when his team became frightened of a passing auto and in the mixup that followed, Frank received three fractured ribs, a badly mangled hand and was otherwise quite badly bruised. It will put Frank on the shelf for some time, but he displayed his nerve by holding onto the team and driving them back to town, His many friends hope that he will enjoy a speedy recovery.

"A List of Nuggets Found in Victoria," published as No. 12 of the memories of the geological survey of Victoria, Australia shows that it is not only a land unusually rich in gold, but nuggets have been more lavishly distributed in that state than elsewhere in the world, and in sizes that have never been exceeded. The list describes 1,237 nuggets, many of which are waterworn. Contrary to general belief, examination shows that these alluvial nuggets could not have resulted from the aggregation of gold while in the gravels from an originally small piece The famous Welcome Stranger nugget, weighing 2,284 troy ounces net, was found in a bed of quartz. No evidence was found that the size of the nuggets grows in the drifts, but there is ample proof in some cases that drift waters contain gold.

For the purpose of making repairs to auto trucks without unusual delay, such as those used in warfare, for instance, traveling workshops have been built by some English firms, and these have done great service at the front and many machines have been rescued which otherwise would have been necessarily abandoned. A typical shop of this kind has a three-horse power gasoline engine which drives a dynamo that supplies lights for working at night, and also for a grinder and a portable drill. It also furnishes power for a six-inch lathe that is provided with milling and other attachments, as well as screw cutting The outfit includes a bench with a good vise an anvil, forge and extensive assortment of tools, supplies and materials

The adventures of the Elgin marbles, now safe from Zeppelins in the nearest approach to a crypt the British museum can furnish began in 1893, when they were wrecked at Cerigo on their way from Greece to England It took the divers three years, and a vast sum of money to fish up the Parthenon relics. It is believed that Lord Elgin spent over £74,000 in procuring these priceless fragments left by Turkish vandals, who would probably have made an end of even these had the earl not rescued them in time. The house of commons voted £36,000 for their purchase, so that the enterprising peer lost heavily in cash, and suffered from a public agitation against his alleged "vandalism rapacity and dishonesty," as well as from Byron's "Curse of Minerva."

There was an increase of nearly 700,000,000 in the cigaret output in the United States last year, according to statistics compiled by the United States Tobacco Journal from the monthly internal revenue figures. The total output of cigarets for the year was 16,513,726,013, and the actual gain was 691,134,956 In the same year the output of large cigars totaled 7,308 736 - 258, or a decrease of 418,116,302 There was an increase of 95,654,760 in the output of little cigars, which numbered 1 059,650,354 The production of manufactured tobacco for the year fell off 7 - 095 211 pounds, the total being 443,758 - 444 pounds.

St Bride the patroness, of Ireland and of Fleet street, whose feast falls in February, was the beautiful daughter of a bard who became the religious disciple of St Patrick and abbess of Kildare The story of St Bride or Bridget, fired the Celtic imagination, and in Ireland about 20 parishes bear the name Kilbride The spire of her church in Fleet street has been twice struck by lightning and much reduced from the original height, but is still one of the tallest steeples in London It is supposed to have been designed by Wren's young daughter

The Welsh guards have a fine marching song ready for them in 'Land of My Fathers" This, according to Sir Ernest Clarke is the oldest Welsh melody extant, having been composed in 796. DEATH OF WOMAN AND LOVER DUE TO ACID; VIEWED AS SUICIDE

Deaths Occurred at Different Points, But Agreement Was Indicated.

Davenport, Ia., April 17.—Return of a verdict of carbolic acid poisoning brought the inquest over the body of Mrs. Nellie Schaeffler to a close late yesterday afternoon, but failed to clear up the baffling case, which will now probably be a mystery unsolved

Mrs. Schaeffler, a pretty young woman, who had separated from her husband, was found dying. An empty bottle of carbolic acid was by her side and her face, chest and limbs were badly burned by the liquid. She died without being able to say a word.

A few minutes later John Thomas, her lover, a hack driver, living seven blocks distant, was found in an unconscious condition with an empty bottle of acid by his side He died without regaining consciousness.

BROTHERS REUNITED AFTER SEPARATION OF 53 YEARS

Geneva, Ia April 16.—William E. Jones, of this place, has just returned from a visit with his brother, Owen Jones, of Hydro, Okla. The meeting of these brothers was remarkable as they had not seen each other for 53 years and up to a short time ago neither knew whether the other was living

At the beginning of the civil war the two brothers were living near Nashua, Wis The two young men made up their minds to join the army, but the older brother Owen, was unable to pass the physical examination on account of a stiff knee. William was more successful and joined the Eighteenth Wisconsin infantry

From that time until a few days ago, the brothers never saw each other A short time ago the oldest brother, now 81 years old was looking over some old papers and he saw the address of William E. Jones, Geneva, Ia He wrote a letter of inquiry to the postmaster, and the reunion followed

CHANGE IN LIBEL LAWS COMPLETED LEGISLATION

Des Moines, Ia., April 17.—The Caswell bill providing that persons may collect only actual damages from newspapers for libel providing the paper prints a retraction and can show that the libelous matter was published through misinformation or mistake passed the house yesterday afternoon by a vote of 83 to 7 The measure already has passed the senate and is now ready for the signature of the governor

Failure of a newspaper to retract entitles the plaintiff to recover both special and exemplary damages should his cause of action be maintained If the retraction is published he may still recover actual special and exemplary damages unless it is shown the libelous publication was "made in good faith without malice and under a mistake as to facts"

STATE PRINTER AND BINDER RETAINED; PRICES REDUCED

Des Moines Ia April 17.—The retrenchment and reform committee reported out a bill recommending that the offices of state printer and binder be continued The measure provides a lower scale of rates on printing

The revision of the rates and the employment of a document editor will save the state $32,000 annually in the printing and binding, according to an estimate made by Senator Allen chairman of the retrenchment and reform committee

Robert Henderson, state printer, and John M Jamieson, state binder, have agreed to accept the new printing and binding rates effective July 4, 1915, although their present terms do not expire until January 1, 1917

COURT UPHOLDS REFUSAL TO GIVE INFORMATION

Des Moines Ia April 17.—Justice Conroy, in a ruling in the case of the state against George B Hippee, president of the Iowa Loan & Trust company, yesterday upheld Hippee in his contention that he is not required to answer a census enumerator's questions regarding what his yearly compensation from occupation is and as to the value of his farm or home property

Employes in the city assessor's office said yesterday that they will take steps to test the validity of the statute The decision in the Hippee case knocks out, automatically, the cases started against a number of other Des Moines men who have refused to answer the two questions.

SENATE PASSES BILL FOR THREE YEAR REGISTRATION

Des Moines, Ia., April 17.—Despite the protests of Secretary of State W S. Allen, the senate today passed a bill providing for a three-year system of registration of automobiles. The committee declared $90,000 annually can be saved through the system.

Senator J H Allen in urging the passage of the bill, declared that Secretary Allen had worked against the committee at every turn of the road in the effort to cut down expenses. He disclosed that the committee not only cut down the expenses, but increased the efficiency of the department as the result of its investigations following adjournment of the legislature two years ago

GOLDTHWAITE RETIRES. FROM BOONE POSTOFFICE

Boone, Ia., April 17.—The change of postmaster in the Boone postoffice was made today, the new postmaster, John R. Herron, taking charge and S. C. Goldthwaite retiring. Mr Goldthwaite will, after a short vacation, devote his time to the interests of the Boone News-Republican.

FREDERICK M. SMITH FOR HEAD OF L. D. S. CHURCH

GOT DRAFT ON "HUNCH"; PROBABLY SAVED $3,000

Council Bluffs, Ia., April 16.—Henry Netsch a farmer living near Logan, is $3,000 richer today than he might have been because he acted on a "hunch." Mr. Netsch sold some cattle in South Omaha yesterday. He placed the money he got for them, nearly $3,000, in an inside pocket and started home, when he decided he had better buy a draft with the money. He did. On the way home last night on a Northwestern passenger train Netsch was robbed of all the money he had, $5.

NO CUSTODIAL FARMS UNLESS IOWA SOLONS RECONSIDER ACTION

Support Fund Even Denied For 781-Acre Tract Purchased In Polk County.

Des Moines, Ia., April 17.—By a vote of 42 to 37 the house killed a bill by the committee on appropriation to provide for the establishment of a custodial farm and a woman's reformatory, the purchase of sites for which had been authorized by the 35th general assembly The refusal to grant the appropriations for the buildings cut off $200,000 from the amount appropriated by the senate in the bill carrying an appropriation of $825,000 It had included $100,000 each for the custodial farms and the woman's reformatory.

Land for the custodial farm has already been purchased, and should the house refuse to reverse its decision on the point the state will own 781 acres of land which it will have open for cultivation. It cost the state $156,000 The woman's reformatory site has not yet been purchased.

A bill providing for $4,000 a month for the care of epileptics in the state was passed by the house with a vote of 71 to 12. The appropriation of $125,000 for state aid to consolidated schools, which was passed by the senate, was cut in the house to $100 000

REGULAR FUROR CAUSED BY "RAILROADING" BOYS

Des Moines, Ia, April 17.—High state officials, including state senators and representatives and, if necessary, the governor, as well as a number of Des Moines ministers, prominent society women, members of the city council and the Des Moines school board will combine forces in an attempt to secure the release of 18-year-old Harry Garland from the state industrial school at Eldora.

The fact that an almost unprecedented effort will be made became known at the court house yesterday when Robert E. Garland, father of the boy, appeared at one of the offices in an attempt to confer with a certain official regarding the case.

Young Garland, together with Orville McKeehan, 15, were sentenced to the school by District Judge W H. McHenry last Monday morning

Young Garland and McKeehan were sentenced Monday morning about 10 o'clock. Mrs. Garland left the court house for a few moments to consult a friend about what to do. She returned at 11 45 and found the boys had been taken to Eldora on an 11 40 train

ANOTHER CHANGE PROPOSED IN STATE HEALTH BOARD

Des Moines IUa, April 17.—Reorganization of the state board of health is provided in a bill introduced by the committee on retrenchment and reform at the close of yesterday's session of the Iowa legislature. Instead of the governor naming the members of the board, that body would be composed of the following men Deans of medicine and bacteriology, dean of applied sciences and professor of preventive medicines, all of the university professor of chemistry at agricultural college, and state labor commissioner

As all the members already are state employes they would receive no salary from the state Headquarters would be at the capital, with a health commissioner in charge. He would be secretary to the board and chosen by that body The salary is fixed at $10,000

The measure is the outgrowth of charges made by Dr J W Kime of Ft Dodge that irregular methods had been resorted to in making a water analysis by the board's chemist The bill provides that a laboratory at any state institution may examine water for cities

A. O. U. W. EXAMINER SUBMITS ANNUAL REPORT

Fort Dodge Ia., April 17.—Dr Murry Wildman, grand medical examiner of the Ancient Order of United Workmen has finished the preparation of his report for the year closing April 1 His report shows the organization to be in excellent shape 3,312 medical examinations were submitted to his office during the year Of these 50 were rejected as unfit for membership leaving at total of 8,262 received into the lodge during the year Of the entire membership of the lodge only 341 died during the year The most common causes of death are Apoplexy 43 pneumonia, 30, heart disease 23 accidents, 20 In his report the state medical examiner recommends that applicants for insurance be tested for blood pressure and also that photographs be made of each medical examination and attached to the plicy

JITNEY REGULATION BILL NOW UP TO GOVERNOR

Des Moines, Ia. April 17 Governor Clarke's signature is all that is required to make the jitney bus bill a law The house yesterday approved the Frailey bill, which was passed by the senate some time ago. This measure gives cities and towns the right to regulate and license jitney busses.

LATE "GUN TOTING" LAW IS HEADED FOR DISCARD

Des Moines, Ia., April 17.—The house by a vote of 63 to 12 passed the Hadley bill, permitting jobbers, wholesalers and hardware dealers to sell firearms without a license If passed by the senate this measure practically will repeal the legislation passed two years ago designed to reduce the practice of gun "toting" Under the present law the dealer is required to operate under a license and report every dangerous weapon sold.

MAY LOSE OFFICE, BUT BOUND TO HAVE BRIDE

Des Moines, Ia., April 15.—Capt W A Duckworth, well known old soldier and custodian of the state house, "slipped one over" on his friends yesterday afternoon when he was quietly wedded to his assistant, Miss Margaret Stone Captain Duckworth is 77 years old and the bride is 45.

The news created a sensation at the state house. Captain Duckworth has been prominently before the legislature because of the action taken abolishing his office.

BOY HURLS ROCK AND KILLS CLARE VETERINARIAN

Fort Dodge Ia., April 15.—Dr H. B. North, of Clare, a veterinarian, died yesterday after lying unconscious since Friday night, when he was struck in the head by a stone, alleged to have been thrown by a boy named John Cody. Dr. North had admonished a crowd of small boys not to make so much noise and to curb their language North was one of the first veterinarians in Iowa. He had practiced in Waterloo, Cedar Lake, Fort Dodge, Sac City, Mason City and Oklahoma A wife and six children survive

SPECIAL AGENT BILL NOW BY BOTH HOUSES AND UP TO GOVERNOR

Assures Better Enforcement of All State Laws, Especially Liquor Measures.

Des Moines, Ia., April 16.—Iowa will have special state agents (detectives) to aid in law enforcement. The Anderson bill to this effect, which previously had passed the house, went through the senate yesterday afternoon by a vote of 28 to 21 As Governor Clarke is favorable to the suggestion it is assumed that he will sign the measure.

This enactment gives assurance that o locality in the state will be permitted to "wink" at the drastic prohibitory regulations enacted at this session and helps to outline a prospect that prohibition really will prohibit in the state after the first of next January The special agents will have general jurisdiction in all matters of state law violations and will prove an important factor in getting evidence against crooked local officials who neglect their duties or who make terms with violators.

In the debate on the special agent bill some of the senators indulged in very strong language. Senator Caswell, of Crawford county, referred to the measure as "Cosson's Cossack Law" Senators Wilson and Thompson declared it to be "vicious legislation."

The vote on the bill was

Nays - Caswell, Chase, Eversmeyer, Farr, Frailey, Gillette, Greene, Hagemann, Henigbaum, Hilsinger, Jackson, Lindley, Quigley, Savage Schrup, Sheeann Thompson, Voorhies, White of Benton, White of Iowa, Wilson 21

Absent—Laffer

Suff Vote at Primary.

Although it had been generally assumed during the past few days that the vote on the equal suffrage amendment would not come up until the general election of 1916, the "dope" in that respect was jarred yesterday afternoon when the senate passed the Nordyke bill submitting the suffrage question at the primary The measure had passed the house and now only requires the governor's signature

The real point behind this change is that the women will get a chance to vote at the general election if the amendment is approved at the primary. It is assumed that their votes will be important in helping to elect "dry" officials including governor and legislature at the general election

Most of the wet senators opposed both the special agent bill and the primary submission of the suffrage amendment The vote on the latter measure was 30 to 14

No Cut in Extension

The Turner bill to reduce the capitol extension area as passed by the house, was killed in the senate, 20 to 24 after an extended debate Six members were recorded as absent or not voting The Turner bill was viewed as a rather conservative adjustment on this question providing for the sale of about one-fourth of the surplus area and the repeal of the mileage tax extending over a period of 10 years. Senator Farr, of Woodbury county, supported the bill on the floor, and was backed by Senators Quigley Gillette Whitmore Caswell and Thompson

Following is the senate roll call on the Turner bill

FAKE WEDDING CEREMONIES LAND MANY VICTIMS

Council Bluffs Ia April 16 Revelations of the operations of a fake marriage bureau whose operators have lured innocent country girls here for immoral purposes and left them to their own resources, has stirred city and county officials here

Search has been started to find a "marrying" justice and bogus grooms who are operators of the "marriage" ring Roy Hatdesty deputy county clerk, declared he had been called on 20 times in the last two years to inform some unfortunate girl there was no record of her marriage

Two girls turned up yesterday They said they had been induced to come here on a promise of marriage. They were taken by prospective grooms to what they judged to be road houses near the city There the ceremonies were gone through Afterward they discovered they had been betrayed and the marriage ceremony was a mockery

Police officials are pushing a probe of the alleged "marriage" ring

MASON CITY SETS PACE IN SCHOOL INNOVATIONS

Mason City Ia April 16.—It is confidently asserted that the board of education of the Mason City schools leads in novel ideas First, it did away with a superintendent of schools and elected one man to head the high school and another man to look after the grades. The plan is working fine Then it secured a manager, something on the line of a city manager only his duties are to look after the running of building, janitors, etc This is also working well The latest is to have school all year around, that is out of the 52 weeks in a year, to have school 48 weeks. The board had a meeting last night and looked upon the innovation as something reasonable and in line with other things. It is quite probable that if 150 high school pupils will remain in school during the summer months the plan will be given a trial

DAVENPORT—A call for an election of a coadjutor bishop will be issued at the annual Episcopal diocesan convention to be held in Des Moines May 17 and 18, according to an announcement here today by Bishop Theodore N Morrison, of Iowa Bishop Harry S. Longley, of Des Moines, will be named, it is understood

WOMAN DROPS ACTION FOR ALIENATED AFFECTIONS

Creston, Ia., April 14.—The case of Mrs LaForte against Dr J W Coakley and his daughter, Miss Gladys Coakley, has been dismissed from the courts here by the plaintiff.

Mrs. La Forte, who lives in Des Moines, brought suit against them for $10,000 damages for the alleged alienations of the affections of the woman's husband, a horseman who went under the name of Stevens here

The suit was begun during the campaign last year, but Dr Coakley was elected to the legislature in spite of it.

VARIED CAREERS FOR LIST OF AMENDMENTS FROM GRIST OF 1913

Only One, Equal Suffrage, Has Run Gauntlet—One Dead and Others In Doubt.

Des Moines, Ia., April 15.—Amendments to the state constitution, as begun by the Thirty-fifth general assembly, have had a varied career during the present session of the legislature. To amend the constitution it is necessary for two sessions of the legislature and a majority vote of the people to approve.

The senate has just defeated the joint resolution to provide for exclusive taxation of certain properties for state revenue only. It was necessary to have a call of the senate in order to get the necessary 26 votes in favor of the report of the committee, which recommended indefinite postponement. The proposed amendment would allow the state to tax railroads, express companies, telegraph companies and other corporate properties for the purpose of raising revenues to run the government. All property so taxed would be exempt from local taxation.

The only one of the four proposed amendments to go through without much question was the one to provide equal suffrage

The initiative and referendum resolution was defeated in the house once, but upon a reconsideration it carried, and is now in the senate committee, where the chances are it will die a natural death

The proposed amendment that would make the time of holding state elections changeable, has passed the house and will probably go through the senate. This is more of a corrective measure The time of holding elections is fixed by constitution instead of by statute Should the federal government, for instance, decide to hold the presidential election on a different date it would be necessary for Iowa to hold two elections. Under the amendment it can be changed to suit the national regulations.

MOTHERS' CONGRESS NOT AGREED ON MEETING PLACE

Cedar Falls Ia April 15.—So spirited was the rivalry between Des Moines and Cedar Rapids delegations in their efforts to land the 1917 meeting of the Iowa Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers' association for their respective cities, that the seventh biennial convention adjourned its three-day session here without choosing the meeting place for the next biennial convention The matter was left in the hands of the board of directors, the strength of which is said to be about evenly divided between the two principal contenders for the biennial gathering. The board expects to meet at Iowa City, May 20, during the convention of the State Federation of Woman's clubs, when the question of the biennial convention city will probably come up for disposal

"COUNTY RIGHTS" BATTLE COMING, SAYS MILLER

Des Moines, Ia April 15.—The "county rights" issue will be one of the big influences in the campaign that will start about a year from now, Representative Miller believes. He sprang his theory in a talk before the Chamber of Commerce yesterday noon. He said in part

"For the last dozen years much legislation has been predicted on the assumption that the people in the counties and the cities are not capable of managing their own affairs, and that in order to make a body of men pure—absolutely pure like baking powder—it is necessary to concentrante them in Des Moines in the shape of a commission, pay them fat salaries and make them overlords of the suspicious characters that the people of the cties and the counties are assumed to be in the habit of putting in charge of their affairs."

LYON COUNTY WILL SHOW GAIN IN POPULATION

Rock Rapids, Ia., April 15.—The additional reports being made on Lyon county population show gains over the 1910 census. Rock township outside of Rock Rapids has now 488 against 368 five years ago, a gain of 120, In 1900 the township had 415. Wheeler township shows a gain of 24, having 605 to 581 in 1905 and 562 in 1900. Logan had 505 in 1900 Doon now has a population of 609 against 608 in 1905, a gain of 1. In 1900 the town's population was 576

So far the census returns show a gain of 401 and a loss of 41, making the net gain 360. There seems to be no question now but that the county will show a population of more than 15,000. Assessor Phillip reports that Rock Rapids will show a slight gain over five years ago He has about finished the work.

DES MOINES POLICE CHIEF ACTIVE IN ENFORCEMENT

Des Moines Ia., April 15.—Temperance leaders of Des Moines, through whose efforts the saloons were put out of business some time ago, are looking on in amazement at the rigid enforcement practiced by Chief of Police Crawford. His latest move is to invoke a self-made "suitcase" law. Wholesale arrests were made of persons returning from Boone, Ia., the nearest "wet" town, who carried quantities of liquor with them. Detectives were stationed at Boone to telegraph descriptions of men boarding interurban trains with suitcases filled with contraband goods. They were arrested and taken to the station

ONLY TWO STATE SENATORS REJECT CUMMINS PETITION

Des Moines, Ia., April 13.—Only two senators, A. C. Savage, of Adair county and D C Chase of Hamilton county, refused to sign a petition circulated in the legislature urging United States Senator Albert B. Cummins to run for the republican nomination for president in 1916 The other republicans signed.

MERRILL—W A. Julian, who was recently appointed postmaster here, has taken charge of the office, succeeding G. W. Irwin who was postmaster for about 17 years.

ANONYMOUS CAMPAIGN ATTACKS ARE RESTRICTED

Des Moines, Ia., April 13—The Klinker bill, to prohibit the circulation of anonymous campaign literature, has been passed by the senate and is ready for the governor's signature. It permits a candidate to circulate literature about himself without signing the material.

PRIMGHAR—E. J. Russell, late principal of the high school here, left Monday for San Francisco to sail on April 24 for the Philippines. Forty-three other young men, from about half as many states, will sail with him to teach in the islands.

From such scant reports permitted from the western front becoming gradually apparent that the greatest battle of the war at [illegible] far as concerns the number of men engaged—is being fought in the Carpathians along the [illegible] from Bartfield, in northern Hungary [illegible] eastern Galicia [illegible] parallels the boundary between Hungary and Galicia [illegible] difficult mountain region [illegible] which the Russians hope to [illegible] way into the heart of Hungary.

Russian reports throw little [illegible] the situation The official state[illegible] of late have mentioned detachments in which some forces [illegible] cesses have been claimed. News dispatches from Petrograd are [illegible] larly restricted It appears probable however, that the Russians have [illegible] tained at least a temporary check [illegible] is indicated by the statement in the latest official Petrograd report [illegible] cerning the bad state of the roads which hinders military operations Paris dispatch from Rome says the belief is general in the Italian capital Austria will attack Italy should the country's determination to enter the war become evident It is understood this possibility is viewed complacently on account of the strong concentration of Italian troops along the border

England is expecting a visit from German airships following three attacks in rapid succession The German aerial attack yesterday on Amiens, France, resulted in the killing of [illegible] persons and the wounding of eight

London, April 17 The allies on the west side and Germany on the other [illegible] day taking inventory of the damage inflicted by the recent aerial operations and with the usual contradictory results The attackers claim that the assaults from the air have resulted in the destruction of military trains and equipment, while the defenders report that the only tangible results of these operations have been [illegible] to civilians and slight damage to property The people of England [illegible] influence of their recent [illegible] are today looking for a repetition of the aerial attack from German Zeppelins or Taube machines Up to now no fresh occurrences had been reported

With news of the resumption of activity by the allied fleet off the Dardanelles, comes a report that the German press is giving the impression of a justification of the present policy of Germany The British colonial officials have issued an official report claiming victory for an invading British Indian army over the Turks in Mesopotamia On the western front signs are showing that the Germans may anticipate the long predicted general allied offensive but actual operations seem to have settled into the status of mid-winter quiescence

London, April 17 Probably the greatest interest attaches to the spectacular flights of German airmen over portions of County Kent England and the city of Amiens, France and a bombdropping raid by allied aviators on towns in west Germany It is believed that little material damage and only slight causalties resulted from the German attack on several Kentish towns and villages. Ten persons are reported to have been killed or wounded by bombs dropped from a German Taube in the vicinity of the cathedral in Amiens

Two civilians were killed and one person injured in Rottwell, Wurtemberg, by the explosion of missiles dropped by a French biplane which attempted to destroy the powder magazine there other allied aviators threw bombs on Leopoldhoehe and Maizeres Les Metz, 10 miles north of the German fortress of Metz.

Blew Up Powder Magazine.

Ten bombs, according to [illegible] found their target in Leopoldshoehe work shops of a railway station [illegible] 40 fell on the electric station of Maizieres Les Metz. Six struck the powder magazine at Rottwell. Paris says that a huge red flame shot up surrounded by dense smoke. The army command of Stuttgart, however declares that aside from the fatalities the damage done at Hottwell was slight England believes that the three raids made along the coast in recent days are only reconnaissances and that an attack in force by Zeppelin dirigibles aeroplanes may be anticipated. Therefore anti-aircraft guns have been loaded and all preparations made to warn the people of the coming of the Germans and give them, if possible, a warm greeting.

The official German statement today, evidently referring to yesterday's raid over England by a German aeroplane, says shells were dropped on Greenwich, in the Metropolitan district of London. Dispatches from London yesterday said the aeroplane had approached no nearer than 30 miles of the city. Unofficial advices from London are that considerable damage was done by the Zeppelins which raided England twice this week, and that the officers and men on British patrol boats were killed or wounded

The French ministry of marine announces further naval operations against the Turkish forces which have succeeded against Egypt. It is said a French battleship shelled the Turkish position near the Egyptian town of Arish, which is close to the [illegible] Palestine.

There were no important [illegible] ments in France yesterday and [illegible] east operations are being delayed by the spring thaw.

APPROVE CABINET IN RIGGS' CASE

Financiers Who Are Not Tied Up With Big Bank Relate How McAdoo Broke Powerful Grip.

Washington D C April 19. Washington financiers outside the few who happen to be in the good graces of the officials of the Riggs National bank are loud in praising the action of the secretary of the treasury and the comptroller of the currency in throwing down the gauntlet to the management of this institution whose power and influence in the city of Washington have been a source of comment for many years past.

It has been no state secret that this bank has kept close hold of the hand in matters connected with the United States treasury department and its officials and employes always have received a cordial welcome in this institution.

Whenever any matters in which the officials of the bank were interested were under consideration or about to be acted upon by the treasury department the Riggs bank was the first institution to be informed of the fact. Just how they were able to gain possession of such material data was known only to the officials of the treasury department and to the officers of the bank themselves.

The ramifications of the Riggs bank have been felt in every direction in Washington and the District of Columbia. There has been no important real estate deal of the improvement of any particular section of the city in which the officers of the bank or their intimate associates have not participated. If the officers of the institution placed their veto upon contemplated projects, financial or otherwise, they fell through. The indorsement of the Riggs bank was necessary if the success of the undertaking was to be assured.

STEAM LINE CANCELS ITS SAILING DATES

Pacific Mail Cannot Operate at Profit Without Use of Chinese Crews

San Francisco April 19. The Pacific Mail Steamship company operates one of the largest fleets in foreign trade under the American flag announced that all sailings after November 2 1915, had been canceled because of the new seamens law which will go into effect November 4.

The company operates with Chinese crews. The fleet plies between San Francisco, Honolulu Japan and Chinese ports and Manila and along the west coast.

The company's representatives stated that no freight contracts would be made beyond July 31 1915.

The future of the Pacific Mail fleet it was said recently by R P Schwerin vice president and general manager of the company would depend upon the action of the stockholders at the annual meeting May 19. He said the added cost of operating under the new law would make continuance unprofitable.

"The Mongolia will sail November 2," a representative of the company said yesterday. She will not touch Honolulu because she could not get clearance there.

No other vessels of the fleet will sail from this port thereafter. They will lie up here.

ONE MORE CHANCE FOR HARRY THAW

If Court Refuses to Let Jury Decide His Mental Condition He Must Return to Matteawan.

New York April 19. Harry Kendall Thaw was yesterday ordered back to the state hospital for the criminal insane at Matteawan by the appellate division of the New York supreme court.

In an opinion concurred in by all the justices the court affirmed the denial by Supreme Court Justice Page of a motion to return Thaw to the jurisdiction of the state of New Hampshire whence he was extradited to stand trial for conspiring to escape from the Matteawan asylum and ruled that the original order commanding him to the institution was still valid. Plans are now being formulated to take the case to the state court of appeals.

A decision adverse to Thaw came as a great surprise to his counsel. The court held that in returning involuntarily to this jurisdiction Thaw was given no promise and that the court in New Hampshire had only done the duty expected of it when it returned him to New York to answer for a crime for which he had been indicted.

The order carried with it the publication that Thaw be not taken from New York county until five days have elapsed.

The writ of habeas corpus sworn out in Thaw's behalf when he was acquitted of the charge of conspiracy is finally returnable on Monday. At that time counsel will present arguments urging that their client be granted permission to have a jury determine his present mental condition.

Should a decision unfavorable to Thaw be forthcoming by Wednesday the state will take the right to return him to Matteawan forthwith providing his counsel shall have not secured a stay of execution in the order committing him to Matteawin pending appeal.

VILLA SAYS OBREGON HAS GARBLED FACTS

Admits Big Losses In Battle of Celaya, But Claims Enemy Suffered Equally

El Paso, Tex. April 19. Upon being informed of the report made by General Obregon of the recent battle of Celaya, General Villa late last night telegraphed the following statement to his border agents:

"The Carranza people can get up the news as they wish and relate how they captured 100 cannon and many other things but the time will come soon when all will be unmistakable.

"It is true that I have not taken the city of Celaya but I can state that if we had losses their losses were heavier and their condition worse than ours. I hold all of my positions and I hope to give a decisive blow to my foe."

Other telegrams from Villa explained that his abandonment of the attack had been caused by a shortage of ammunition. He admitted having received heavy losses in the center of his attacking formation during fighting this week. No losses were stated. The messages were sent from Irapuato, Villa's base.

RUMANIAN RULER FEARED RUSSIANS

Late King Charles Thought Muscovites Would Eventually Bring Era of Woe to His People.

Berlin, (via London), April 19.—The late King Charles of Rumania, who died October 19 1914 desired the victory of Germany and Austria according to an interview granted by him on the eve of his death to Virgil Arion, chief editor of the newspaper, Moldava, published in Budapest.

The Cologne Gazette has now republished this interview. In it King Charles said to the editor: "There is no question that the great power which controls the banks of the Danube should control this county. It would mean danger for us if the Russians, firmly planted at the mouth of the Danube extend their sovereignty to the Black sea. This explains this great interest we have in the European conflict and it is natural that we desire the victory of the central "powers."

King Charles had just granted an interview, according to the Cologne Gazette, to Charles and Noel Buxton, Englishmen who were traveling in the Balkans to determine the attitude of certain of the Balkan states towards the European war.

The king said the Buxtons told him "a great war is being waged which has been undertaken by the important nations, but which is being conducted for the benefit of the small nations."

Wants Constantinople.

Just the same," King Charles replied, "I know Russia wants Constantinople."

The Buxtons then said that Bulgaria would remain quiet in case Rumania joined in the hostilities. To this the king asked:

"But unconditionally?"

The answer to this was that Bulgaria must receive the annexed portion of Dobrudja, detached from Bulgaria and given to Rumania in 1878.

King Charles then said: "As long as I am king I won't give an inch of our land."

Continuing the conversation King Charles said that the Transylvanian question would be difficult to solve without the co-operation of the western powers and Germany. Rumania's historic development was connected with supremacy on the Danube and access to the ocean. He believed the nation could develop along this line without definitely surrendering the province which so recently had belonged to Rumania.

Replying to the statement that Russia had promised Transylvania to Rumania in case of victory over Germany and Austria, King Charles said: "The partition of the countries of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy under the Russian aegis cannot mean anything good for us. Rumania would be completely surrounded by Russia and the weak nations subject to her."

USE SUNFLOWER OIL TO MAKE MARGARIN

London, April 17.—The production of margarin from sunflowers is the latest device attributed to the German government to meet the expected scarcity of butter, according to a dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Amsterdam. The message says that the Prussian ministry of railroads has ordered all stationmasters to plant sunflowers in every bit of available ground around the depots.

Sunflowers, it is claimed yield an oil that can be used in the manufacture of butter.

BRITISH OFFICERS CAST INTO PRISON

Ten English Soldiers In Solitary Confinement as Reprisal For Treatment of Germans.

Halle On The Salle, Germany, (via London), April 19. Ten British officers have been taken from the local camp of prisoners of war and placed in solitary confinement in Magdeburg. This is a measure of reprisal for the treatment by Great Britain of the crews of German submarines held prisoners in England.

The 10 officers referred to include the son of a former British ambassador in Berlin. The name of this officer, however, is not given.

PLAN BIG RESERVE TO AID U.S. ARMY

Officers of General Staff Say Militia Should Be Placed Under Federal Control With Full Equipment.

Fort Leavenworth, Kan., April 19. Officers at the General Service and Staff college here predict that when congress gets through grinding out army legislation at the next session the result will be that the United States will be prepared on short notice to meet any nation in the world in a contest of arms.

The big question in congress in the new army legislation will revolve around the militia. Under present laws no volunteer army can be created until the militia first has been called into service and the war department is not at all satisfied with the militia, nor with the law which gives to governors of the states the power to appoint the officers of volunteer troops.

If the army has its way there will be no state troops but all militia or volunteer regiments will be directly under the control of the federal government.

General Carter's Plan.

Gen William H Carter, now commanding the Hawaiian department, has just issued a book in which advocates the abolition of the national guard as a state organization, and the creation instead of a guard under control of the federal government one infantry regiment to be organized in each of the 425 congressional districts, and in such districts where the density of the population warrants the organization of artillery, cavalry and engineer troops and signal corps.

This, General Carter says, would give the country with the regular army of 125,000 men and reserves of probably half that number a field army of about 800,000 men, which could be put into the field within a month after the declaration of war. He advocates liberal pay for the volunteer troops. They would of course have the same equipment as the regular army, and one regular army officer would be attached to each regiment as a drillmaster and inspector.

Plan For Recruiting.

Each regiment both regular and volunteer, would have 10 companies and one depot company, so that when called to arms, the depot companies would remain at home and drill recruits for their regiments. Later the men in the depot company would be sent to the front, their places being taken by men invalided from the front.

Meantime, if more troops were required, new regiments would be formed at the various regimental depots and officered by men promoted from the regiments at the front.

These officers, who naturally keep in close touch with the trend of military events say that when congress gets through the probability is that the United States will have four armies, two active and two reserve, with possibly a third reserve army. For several years now, the war department has been trying to stretch the regular army all over the United States and the outlaying possessions, with the result that it hasn't enough troops in any one place to do the peace work that is to be done much less to cut any figure in a war with any country that is likely to involve itself in war. The only thing that can be done, therefore, is to increase the regular army.

Strengthen Colonial Forces.

The lesson of Kiao-Chow, Germany's most important outpost, has not been lost on the war department, so that as quickly as possible Porto Rico, the Canal zone, Hawaii and the Philippines are to be provided with full war strength garrisons of regular troops. At the same time, the probability is, that for administrative purposes, the army will be divided into two parts, the colonial army and the home army. The colonial army will require some 60,000 men alone, made up of all branches, engineers, signal corps, coast artillery, field artillery, cavalry and infantry, with the necessary non-combatant supply and sanitary troops. These forces will be distributed almost entirely among the Philippines, Hawaii and Panama, about 20,000 at each place. Hawaii and the Philippines in the event of war, would have to stand alone until the United States navy could obtain command of the seas, and it is especially important that Hawaii should be able to hold out against any enemy, so that its garrison is made larger proportionately to that of the Philippines, where the regular troops would be supplemented by the Philippine scouts and constabulary. The Canal zone, on the other hand can be more easily reinforced quickly from the United States.

Larger Home Army.

For the home army, it is generally agreed that the country needs a force of about 135,000 fighting men, without 30,000 of them assigned to the coast artillery, and organized into skeletonized regiments, to be filled up from the reserves in the event of war, so that the force can be immediately increased to full war strength within a week from the call to arms. That congress will pass a reserve bill along the lines of the navy reserve bill generally is expected. This will result in quickly creating a reserve sufficient to fill up the ranks of the army, and it is considered possible that surplus naval reserve men would be employed with the army, possibly in coast defense duty, on mine planting and such work.

ORDER 2,500,000 SHELLS.

Richmond, Va., April 17.—The American Locomotive company announced that it had signed a contract for the manufacture of 2,500,000 shrapnel and high explosive shells. Another contract, it was stated covered an order for several million cartridge cases. From whom the orders came was not revealed.

WISDOM IN HIS JUDGMENT

Rabbi's Decision Worthy of Any of Those That Have Been Credited to Solon.

Many of the best stories among the Jews are told about rabbis who were called in to render decision in difficult disputes. These decisions are at times as crafty as those of the ancient Solon.

"Brother," he said, "I am dying. I leave $50,000, and I desire you to dispose of my fortune as I instruct you. Give my wife as much as you want and keep the remainder for yourself."

He died soon after, and after dividing the fortune the brother kept $40,000 and gave the remaining $10,000 to the widow and her children. The widow, not satisfied with this amount, complained to the rabbi (who always appears in the role of the widow's protector). The rabbi ordered the brother to appear before him.

"You have disobeyed your brother's dying wish," said the rabbi.

"Not at all," replied the brother. "He told me to give his widow as much as I want and to keep the rest for myself."

"Precisely," responded the rabbi. "You took $40,000 and gave the widow $10,000. Therefore, you wanted $40,000. Did not your brother say, 'Give my wife as much as you want'? Therefore, I order that you give her $40,000. Furthermore, did not your brother say: 'Keep the remainder'? Therefore I order you take $10,000. I have judged. Begone!'"

Sense of Humor.

"What is a sense of humor?"

"A sense of humor," replied Mr. Growcher, "is what makes you laugh at something that happens to somebody else which would make you mad if it happened to you."

Considerations of Precedence.

"Why did that girl marry Mr. Addlewell?"

"Some idea of precedence, I suppose. She wanted to be among those who head the list in the city directory."

The Style.

"Do you think there is ever much sensible conversation in moonlight strolls?"

"No; I guess it is mostly rambling talk."

AND ALONG CAME RUTH

Hustle, Elsie, Ruth sang out as she rushed in the door of her cousin's home. "I've got tickets to the matinee, and we haven't a minute to spare." "O, Ruth, I could never get ready I've just got my hair done and those hurrid skirts always ruin it every time I slip them over my head" "I'll fix that, alright" answered Ruth, and dashing into her uncle's room she procured one of his large silk handkerchiefs. "Here," she told her cousin "place this over your head. Your skirt will slip over easily and not a hair will be dragged out of place." And Ruth and her cousin saw the curtain rise on the matinee.

STEPHEN AND STORIES

By DOROTHY BLACKMORE.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Sally gazed contemplatively at the little set of chintz-covered drawers that she had indulged in by way of celebrating the occasion of having sold another story It was Sally's treat to herself to purchase something for the equipment of her writing table upon each glorious arrival of a check.

"I can write from morning until sundown now" she told herself happily "I must sell another story before I can get the waste basket to match." She pondered for a moment. "I think I will rewrite 'The Test.' That ought to sell—it's a good plot."

Sally looked high and she looked low for "The Test." She took out every drawer, looked through her file and her scrap books, but the manuscript remained in its hiding place Suddenly she remembered that she had sold an old file case.

The next morning she dressed herself with her habitual care and went forth in search of the lost story.

She gazed open eyed at the clerk who told her that a certain set of drawers had been sold.

"Is there any chance of my finding out to whom they went" It is most important." Sally said, with her friendly smile.

Another ten minutes passed and Sally went worth. The address given was down in the lower Twenties and Sally found herself ringing the bell of a small flat

A most delightful girl answered the ring and opened the door wide that Sally might enter.

"Yes, we found the story," the girl was saying, as Sally followed her into a room that was homelike and cozy, and in which a good-looking young fellow lolled comfortably while he scanned the pages of Sally's own manuscript. Sally's eyes opened wide and a flush darted into her cheeks

"Davie," Madge Cartwright said, "this is Sally Seward Miss Seward, my brother, David Cartwright. Miss Seward has come in search of her story," Madge added, and offered Sally a chair.

Now for the story" he said with his boyish laugh that Sally was beginning to wait for There had not been so much of laughter in Sally's struggles that she could afford to let slip one golden hour She rejoiced that her manuscript had wedged itself into the chintz drawers, and that she was sitting beside David Cartwright while he outlined the plot of an exceedingly good story.

"I will write it," Sally told him while Madge's voice came from the direction of the kitchen humming a little snatch of song, "and if it brings a big check, you must promise that we three will have a dinner together." Madge had entered with a fragrant tray of tea and hot crumpets. "Did you hear that, Miss Cartwright?" Sally questioned.

"If the story brings a big check," she said, I will agree to anything, but it would be so comfy to have dinner here—you may get a chicken and fixings if you like, but couldn't we cook it here? It is so much nicer than restaurants." She glanced eagerly at Sally and Sally smiled back at her. Friendship linked the eyes of the two girls, and Davie looked on with a peculiarly introspective expression.

"And I will get seats for the theater," he added. "Is it a go."

Sally looked from Madge to Davie, and if there was a throb in her throat no one was the wiser. She put a hand into each of theirs and clasped them warmly. The hand that Davie held trembled and his own closed about it.

"We will be the best of friends, I know," Madge said, quickly.

"We are going to be more than friends," Davie said—but he did not say it aloud.

Madge knew as she went homeward that she would become a great writer, that her table had grown doubly dear to her, and that the little chest of chintz drawers would always be fragrant with love and happiness and all that goes to make life a wonderful thing. Perhaps she kissed the things that had given her happiness, or perhaps she only ran slim fingers caressingly over them. But Sally smiled.

Here's a Triple-Lever Disc Harrow That Beats Them All!

The new Rock Island Triple-Lever Disc Harrow, Bonanza Jr., has, through its many exclusive features, jumped into a class of its own—'way ahead of every other disc harrow made. For years it has led all others in service, durability, ease of operation and speed. Now, with its new third pressure lever, its new steel stub pole and its new double leaf spring steel seat, it is beyond comparison. The first time you see this wonderful triple-lever disc harrow you'll know why it is outselling all other disc harrows at any price.

Rock Island Bonanza Jr. Triple-Lever Disc Harrow

Here are a few of the many exclusive features of this great harrow

Instead of being angled from the center, the gangs are angled from the ends. The side thrust is delivered directly to the bumpers. No matter at what angle the gangs are set, these bumpers always bump, and the angle or point of contact doesn't change, so the bumpers never cut or wear out. Saves expense, repairs and draft. The inner ends of the gangs are always together.

They roll against each other at one rounded point. End thrust is entirely neutralized by these bumpers.

The new steel stub pole cannot split or break and adds strength to the harrow, making it even more durable than it was before. Neat in appearance—light in weight.

The old seat spring has been replaced by one of spring steel, double leaf type, giving greater comfort to the operator.

The Third Pressure Lever

on the Bonanza Jr. is simple and strong. It is directly in front of the operator and the pressure is applied close up to the gangs, giving more leverage. Bonanza Jr. discs cut just as deep at the outer ends as they do in the center. This means cutting at an even depth always.

New Features Plus the Old Ones

Remember, all the new features of the Bonanza Jr. have been added without sacrificing any of the old ones. You can't make any mistake in buying the Rock Island Bonanza Jr. Disc Harrow—it's a sure winner.

ANIMAL SHOP IS WRECKED BY CUB

In Two Short Hours Black Bruin Had the Time of His Life.

BEDLAM IN A STORE

Hens Squawked and Peafowls Screamed Whenever Bunch of Fur Came Near—Monkeys Chattered, Fish Alone Silent.

Boston.—A year-old black bear of the Maine woods variety broke from his cage in a Boston animal store a few days ago and for two hours went on the liveliest rampage that it has ever been the lot of a private menagerie to witness. The little black bear, who goes by the name of "Pop," had been disconsolate because of the sale of his partner. He became restless, and, breaking his cage, went on an inspection of the habits and habitats of the other odd thousands of animals in the cages.

Bruin was captured only after bedlam had reigned for two hours in the store. Then he was taken by two keepers, two policemen and several helpers, all of whom had a hard time controlling the snapping but playful cub. During his rampage "Pop" did not get a taste of blood, which probably prevented much damage.

Fought Big Moose Head.

But in that two hours "Pop" had wandered up and down the store, which is a block long; had bitten off the end of a bag of corn and swallowed the contents; had unselfishly released a tribe of rabbits from their pens by breaking down their wire cage, had made an attack upon a moose head nailed to a board, had crawled in and out of numerous bins, had set the birds screeching and chattering, and had afforded amusement to a crowd of several hundred persons who surrounded the windows of the store.

Several times the crowd outside could hear him squeal as he crawled another wor—

"And that?" interrogated Rhoda, still smiling, but trembling all over.

"Love!"

into a bin and hurt himself in getting out again. Then dogs began to bark, canary birds set up a twittering, monkeys began bander-log chatter, peacocks shrieked, rabbits ran hither and thither, and bedlam was let loose. The fish alone in their tanks were silent. But now and then as one flopped to the surface, it was evident that even the dwellers in the water were not obvious to the confusion.

The chase came to an end when Edward O. Braxton, the floor manager of the store, made a noose out of a long animal whip and induced Pop to descend from the top of a tall poultry cage on which he had taken refuge.

WATCH IS SAVED BY PHOTO

Sentimental Highwaymen Then Decamp With Eighty-Five Cents of Victim's.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Because they saw the picture of his mother in the back of the watch case, two highwaymen returned a watch they had stolen to Ray Piper, 1446 East Twenty-second street.

The holdup took place near Twenty-second and Hoover streets. The highwaymen took a watch and 85 cents.

"Whose is that?" he asked.

"That is my mother," replied Piper.

"The watch was a gift from her."

"Take it back then," said the highwayman, returning the watch.

Taking only the 85 cents, the highwaymen disappeared.

Hunter Says Deer Kicked Him.

Virginia, Minn.—A. J. Wasgatt, in charge of the Virginia office of the Lake Superior Tax association, has returned from a week's hunting trip at a camp near Mile Post 49, on the Alger-Smith line. He tells a story of how he was kicked by a buck and exhibits a semicircular mark on the cheek which he says is the imprint of the animal's hoof.

How Shopkeepers Wash Windows.

Housekeepers ought to know how shopkeepers have their windows washed. The latter would laugh at the soap and water used by the former and call them waste of energy and time. Their method is this: Mix one part of alcohol with three times its bulk of water and stir in enough whiting to thicken it to the consistency of thin cream. Apply this to the glass with waste or a cotton cloth. Leave it to dry, which it will do in fifteen or twenty minutes. Then rub it off with a clean cloth. The window is not only cleaned, but polished, the woodwork is in no way injured and much time and labor have been saved.

Difference Between Them.

"The king of Prussia," Napoleon once remarked to General Gourgaud at St. Helena, "was a real booby. Every time he came to see me to talk over important affairs, he never managed to say anything on the subject. He went off about shakos, buttons, skin haversacks and a lot of other nonsense, while I did not know a word about such trifling military details."

Turkey Was Called "Indian Fowl."

The turkey, so far as records are known, was introduced into England in 1524, brought probably from the port of Cadiz, where ships trading with the Orient were accustomed to call. In nearly all countries, inclusive of Spain, and even Turkey itself, this bird is called the "Indian fowl."

W. R. BLOOM
The Grain, Coal and Live Stock Man.
We will buy Hogs and Grain six days in the week at Highest Market Price.
Business Established 1890

Hogs and Bulls as Racing Mounts.

The eighteenth century experimented with bulls and cows as racing mounts, instead of horses. The early nineteenth century saw an equally interesting substitute for the harnessed horse. Just a century ago a small farmer of the neighborhood drove into St. Albans on market day in a little car drawn by four hogs. Having toured the market place three or four times amid applause, he put his animals up in a stable, did his marketing and drove off again to the accompaniment of louder cheers, which did not make them shy. It had taken him six months to train them, and he refused an offer of $350 down for the vehicle and team.

Monkey Acted as Jockey.

John Bright, when training horses, had a monkey in his stable at a time when the racing was on a covered track. Either the monkey had the soul of a jockey or an inborn hatred for dogs, for when one came along he would drop on his back from a perch and sit as tight as the deuce-trey. A greyhound happened in and the monkey took the mount. With the rider way up on his withers, the hound started off in terror and made for the infield. He cleared the Liverpool easily and raced for a hurdle. Here the rider was unlucky, for he hit his head and passed away.

Couldn't Stand Everything.

During a case in which the plaintiff claimed damages from a railway company on account of severe bodily injuries, the company's lawyer was examining the plaintiff. After awhile the latter became irritated and said: "Mr. C., I cannot allow you to question me in this manner. I am an invalid on account of the injury received on the railway. It has affected my spinal cord, and at this minute I can see you double. You know, Mr. C., it is generally enough to upset a man to see you once."

Tuft Hunters.

Said a society woman at a musicale at her Fifth avenue house: "New York society is less given to lion hunting than London society. There is a countess in London who is such a lion hunter that a man once said of her: 'Why, she always has the most fashionable surgeon of the hour to carve her Christmas turkey.'"

After She Has Him Chloled.

It doesn't take the average man long to develop into a nonentity in the eyes of the capable young woman who chased him to the altar.

"LIFE, LIBERTY AND PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS"

A Western Canada Farmer Writes as to Conditions.

A G Hansen is a farmer living near Clavet, Sask, and as an old resident of Minnesota, takes strong exception to some of the articles appearing in American papers disparaging the true conditions in Western Canada. The "Cottonwood Current" of Cottonwood, Minn, an important weekly paper in the southwestern part of the state, recently published a letter from Mr. Hansen, which is interesting reading. In his letter Mr Hansen makes a splendid case for Western Canada against those who seek to deter farmers in the States from settling in Canada He says

"The district in which we live is a fair comparison to any other district in the country, made up mostly of settlers from the States. The majority here consists of Americans from Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas, with a few Canadians and an odd Englishman We have been here eleven years, ever since this part of the country was settled, and the majority have done well If they have not it is certainly not the fault of the country

"There has not been a crop failure in this district since settled. This year was the poorest, caused by lack of rain although a fair estimate of wheat is about twelve bushels per acre, average, and oats about ten. Some farmers got as much as twenty-five bushels of wheat per acre, and we all got good prices

"The laws of Canada are nearly the same as those of Minnesota, and we enjoy the same privileges

"So far as the European war is concerned we suffer to a certain extent as all the world does Canada is giving a helping hand to her Mother Country, and we American-Canadians firmly believe it is Canada's duty to do so I have not heard one American-Canadian who has expressed a different opinion Canada is not compelled to send her soldiers The service rendered is all voluntary service.

"The accusation that old settlers are considered undesirable citizens and are forced out of business, even in danger of being 'mobbed at their own fireside, is all false, a mere fabrication in the mind of badly informed correspondents There are a few who have been discovered carrying letters, others papers and plans to prove them spies and whose object is to conspire against the government These have justly been arrested Such a class of people cannot be considered good citizens, whether living in Canada or in the United States

"Some people are failures wherever they are, and as an excuse for failure in their country it may seem easy to put the blame on the Canadian people and the Canadian government. Fact is, thousands of people from the United States are emigrating to Canada at the present time which shows they are not afraid of the Canadian government

"The government is giving away, free of charge, provision through the winter to farmers in certain districts affected by the drought, and is also sending seed grain to those in need of help This is very different from driving settlers away from their own homes

"I have always observed that the people who love their Mother Country most are those who make the best citizens of their adopted country The glorious 'Stars and Stripes' will always stand for what is good and noble to us, though we live in a neighbor country where we also enjoy 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness'"—Advertisement

HERE'S ONE PLACE THAT WAR DOES NOT AFFECT

There are still places which have not heard of the world war after nearly seven months of conflict. The secretary of the postmaster general, in a casual report, mentions the fact that Tristan da Cunha, a group of British islands in the South Atlantic, has not received a mail since the outbreak of the war.

These islands are entirely dependent upon chance communication from South Africa, 1,500 miles away Often the inhabitants are a year or more without communication from the outside world. The population is only about 80 in number, mainly descendants of shipwrecked sailors, and all English.

Another place that has not heard of the war is Yquitos, in eastern Peru. Its letters are taken by British mail steamers up the Amazon to Manaos, and thence across South America. Yquitos is only a few hundred miles from Lima, the Pacific capital of Peru, but the wall of the Andes is an almost impassable barrier.

What Would Stop the War?

From the Springfield Republican

Suppose the ammunition should give out, what would happen? The assumption of those who think that the responsibility for the terrible loss of life lies with the shrapnel makers is that but for these supplies the war would have to stop Such would, no doubt, be the case if one side exhausted its supplies while the other was well provided, if fighting were continued it would be mere butchery. But this would be ending the war not by cutting off the motive power as some seem to figure the process, but by enabling one side to triumph over the other to an extent hardly precedented in warfare. Which ever side lacked arms capable of competing with a storm of shell and shrapnel would be delivered over bound and helpless, to the enemy Could we look for an early peace to result from a shortage of ammunition on both sides? Some have predicted an early end to the war because neither side could meet the enormous demands of quick firing artillery, but this is too hasty an assumption So long as armies are on equal terms they can continue to fight even if reduced to bayonets and clubbed muskets If guns cannot be served on the 1915 scale they may long be served on the 1814 Napoleonic scale, which was no less deadly In fact the loss of life in battle contrary to the general impression has decreased in proportion as arms have been made more efficient. If shrapnel and nigh explosives should run low and the soldiers should have to get at each other's throats to fight, the war would become not less but more deadly The true shows of war are food and the will to conquer In the Balkans when gunpowder ran out the men took to bayonets and when bayonets broke they drew their knives No it is not shrapnel that keeps the war going

Who Speaks For These?

From the Milwaukee Journal

"A vigorous protest we read, "is soon to be voiced against the movement of the republican party to commit that organization to a reactionary candidat in 1916 It is time

The reactionaries have been past a very loud noise Under the enthusiastic direction of Penrose and Barnes of Hilles and others of their kind the trumpeter has sounded his blast He has been a cry of 'Call me' Lizzie This is the republican party We will get the fat from business men once more We will fling the banner of Hanna to the breeze. We will shout the cry of prosperity We shall forget that we were the minority of the republicans in 1912 and forgive the majority if they will join us We shall elect a congress that will be best to talk prosperity and not be too specific about what the congress will do

All the noise made by the reactionary party so far has been the noise of reactionaries It is time someone was speaking for the others For those who welcomed insurgency in 1909 because it was a protest against betrayal For those who would not have their party go back to representative government and sell out to the interests For those clear eyed men who were not playing whatever the leaders of the new party may have stood for when they left their party in 19 For the republicans who [illegible] the votes of any states but Utah or Vermont Speaking for the millions who leaders of the party organization will not deliver, who would rot be sold

The fat-fryers can blow their heads loudly enough They can say what the republican party [illegible] millions who do the voting It is well that someone speak for them

For Press Freedom's Sake

From the Wisconsin State Journal

Charles R. Miller editor in chief of the New York Times appeared before the congressional committee of inquiry into the ship purchase lobby and denounced the investigation as inquisitorial and an attack upon the freedom of the press

The New York Times for reasons of its own may feel this way about it, but this newspaper does not, and it refuses to let Mr Miller represent it as a part of the American press jealous of its freedom

If a newspaper undertakes to form public sentiment or direct it it should not kick against reasonable inquiry as to the inspiration back of its opinions and declarations No newspaper that stacks the cards or keeps superfluous aces and kings up its sleeve is worthy of freedom and a newspaper which is so conducted as to be suspected of pernicious lobbying ought to feel the thrusts of inquisitors

The free editor is not an omniscient sneak who by secret and underhand methods gets the public to believing certain things, but one whose motives and methods are an open book. The free business manager of a newspaper is not the one who produces profit by lying about his circulation but the one whose records show results for the advertiser and whose circulation figures are [illegible] of the data of those who do business with him Freedom is of worth to none who do not feel that they are free and inquiry into a case where freedom seems lacking may be a good thing for the freedom of the American press.

It is the day of giving the public a square deal We investigate cabinet members, congressmen, successful business men, judges ministers, heads of public organizations and newspapers freely give all the details that they can get hold of Is the newspaper a quasi-public institution such a holy thing that it shall be the sole exception?

Political Legislation.

From the Ohio State Journal

Let it be remembered that when any legislation is done on political account alone the party that does it will suffer That's logic and history, too One can never win a triumph by debasing a duty. Men do not gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles, nor the public good from political selfishness. This may not be good politics from the practical side, but it is from the patriotic side. A man spoke of another as a sharp politician We don't like sharp politicians There is something the matter with them They generally deal with false motives and deceits. There is honesty only in the straight issue.

THAW ARGUMENT TO DECIDE ON TRIAL

Supreme Court Justice Newburger to Determine Whether Jury Shall Hear Case.

New York, April 16.—Argument on the motion of Harry K. Thaw's counsel for a jury trial to decide whether he is sane and ought to be given his liberty, was set for a hearing by Supreme Court Justice Newburger this afternoon.

Thaw's counsel hoped also that the appellate division would hand down a decision today on their motion that the slayer of Stanford White be sent back to New Hampshire. This motion was made in an appeal from an order of Justice Page directing that Thaw be sent back to Matteawan asylum.

SKILLFUL DIVER REACHES PLUNGER

Chief Gunner's Mate, Frank Crilly, Makes World's Record When He Descends to Inspect Submarine F-4.

Honolulu, April 16 Chief Gunner's Mate Frank Crilly went 288 feet under the water here and walked along the top of the submarine F-4, which disappeared March 25. The depth is said by naval officers to be a world's diving record.

He found the F-4 lying in smooth, sandy bottom with no coral growth to impede hoisting operations. She lay tilted on her starboard side, her bow pointing shoreward Two parted lines were found attached to the craft.

After Crilly reported, it was said further observations probably would be made, for an attempt is to be made to raise the F-4

Crilly went down in an ordinary diving suit

Crilly was under the water two hours It took five minutes for him to make the descent and he was on the bottom 12 minutes. An hour and 45 minutes was required to bring him to the surface, in order to accustom him gradually to the change in air pressure

Will Consider Means.

Congressman Fred A Britten of Illinois, chairman of the committee of naval affairs who is in Honolulu, is expected to visit the scene of operations as the guest of Rear Admiral Charles B T Moore commandant of the Honolulu naval station to make observations to determine the possibility of raising the F-4 without resorting to pontoon methods

Congressman Britten, addressed the lower house of the territorial legislature, and said that Pearl harbor should have a permanent flotilla of seagoing submarines and battleship defense. He said he would urge this in congress

Representative G W Edmonds, of Pennsylvania, a member of the committee on merchant marine and fisheries, who is also visiting Honolulu, told the legislature he was in favor of ship subsidy to develop Hawaii

Rear Admiral Moore, summarizing yesterday's operations to raise the wrecked submarine F-4 sent this cablegram to the navy department

"Diver Neilson reports line under stern of F-4 but that the forward line is foul of the conning tower This line will be shifted Thursday The superstructure appears to be caved in, but he saw no holes Examination incomplete"

RIOTING AT FUNERAL OF ITALIAN WORKMAN

At the rate they were going, Eric calculated that two hours would bring them abreast Eddy's islands. If they passed to the north, the light keeper would see them Joan's dress was white. If they went to the south, or between the two, there was small chance of their being seen, unless the keeper was watching the sea closely with his glass. Their brightest hope lay in the possibility that they might be driven into the shallow waters covering the unseen approach to the reefs. Eric knew the waters well. He had gone there dozens of times with the fishing boats.

The sky was now clear, and a hot sun beat down upon them, the storm was rollicking far ahead of them. A steady wind from the shore was blowing, and soon the tide would come out. Waves still ran high, but they were not so angry as they had been

Eric could see that the girl was growing weak from the strain and exposure. He was no longer able to cheer her with his heartiest cries. She looked wan and ready to give up the struggle to keep her head from falling forward, limp with fatigue.

To his despair, the current caught them up and drew them toward the passage between the islands He began to pray His whole soul cried out to God, imploring Him to send them onto the shoals where he could have a chance to save the girl whose life was more to him now than anything else in all the world His own strength and vitality were fast departing, his limbs were chilled and numb, his senses dulled and sluggish with the drug of weariness.

He could see that they would drift past the upper end of Little Eddy, perhaps 100 yards from the visible rocks. The broad heaving ocean lay directly beyond It was clear to him that they had not been observed by the light keeper Just as he was in the deepest despair the impulse to cut loose from the boat and try for the rocks came over him He could easily swim that distance alone but was his strength sufficient to do it with the almost dead weight of the girl as a burden?

Eric was always quick to act. He was cool, but he was daring The thought was father to the act. He drew up his stiffened legs and began to unlace his shoes, first rolling his trousers up to the knees Kicking off the heavy shoes he clambered over the boat and set to work releasing Joan She was faint but conscious of his action

I'm going to swim in with you, Joan Don't be afraid Do just as I tell you, and we'll soon be safe We'll be able to wade after we get within 20 yards of the rock"

She followed his instructions to the best of her ability and soon he was struggling frantically toward the ugly, forbidding wall of rock, swimming with all the power that was left in his racked young body. Many a stronger swimmer that he would have failed in the attempt, but a strange unnatural vigor came to his aid born of pride and desperation

Just as he realized that he could not swim a stroke farther, and the goal still many yards away, his numb feet struck against hard substance He involuntarily even recklessly allowed them to sink in the hope of touching bottom.

He was on the shelving rock'

Still there were many yards to traverse, and he would have to carry her all the way battling against the small but stubborn breakers How he covered the distance stumbling, falling, scrambling he never could have told but after what seemed an hour, he crept out of the breakers and fell exhausted on the rock, dragging Joan after him Scarcely able to move his tired limbs, he pulled and tugged until they were well out of the baffled waters and then he rolled over on his back and gasped for breath

It was the girl who first showed signs of recuperation She raised herself to a sitting posture, supporting her body with her hands, and studied the limp figure at her side through bewildered, half understanding eyes. Her mind worked slowly, so slowly that a full minute passed before she realised that he was as motionless as death itself Then her hand went out, timorously dumbly, to touch the pallid face The fear that was growing in her faintly beating heart was dispelled almost instantly, quite before it was fully formed, he opened his eyes at her touch. For a long time they looked into each other's eyes, and then a wry smile broke on his lips.

"Gee," he said, in very shaky tones, "I guess you've got a right to think I'm an awful duffer."

"I—I though you were— Oh, Eric, you are not dead! I am so glad—so glad'" she sobbed, clasping her hands to her breast

"I—I didn't dare to look at you, Joan," he murmured hoarsely, a spasm of pain convulsing his face. "I was afraid you hadn't come through all right Oh, if you had not touched me when you did I should have died. I believe I held my breath for an hour. Thank God thank God!"

He sat up beside her, touched her hands, her face with his fingers. A smile of relief, of actual glee, spread over his face like an illumination He drew a deep breath as she smiled wanly in return, and then staggered to his feet to shout and dance like one bereft of his senses

CHAPTER VI

THE REVEALING OF SEVERAL INSTINCTS.

After his wild exhilaration had spent itself to some extent, he set about doing sensible things, and uttering rational words

It may not be such a laughing matter, after all" he said lugubriously. "We're on a desert island" His gaze swept the sunlit, tumbling sea. "I'm afraid they can't make us out from the lighthouse"

"I'm glad we're here and not out there on that poor little boat" she cried, getting to her feet and pointing off to the right. "Look! It's through the channel"

The belly of the boat was to be seen bobbing on the waves far beyond the mouth of the passage.

They watched it for a long time in silence and dread A shudder swept over them and they clasped hands, looking again into each other's dismayed eyes.

"God knows where that boat will go before it finds a resting place," he murmured. "I'm glad I made the try for shore" He grinned "We'd be well on our way to Europe—or maybe Africa, Joan, before night. Or Davy Jones' locker, as old Jabez Carr would say."

"I prefer Eddy's Islands," she said simply She stood beside him, straight and slim, her drenched garments clinging to her body as if glued, her soft brown hair plastered down and matted with the salt of the sea, her hat hanging limp and desolate over her shoulder. "Do you suppose they will send boats out to search for us, Eric?"

"Of course they will," he cried cheerfully. But there was no sail to be seen, strain their eyes as they would in the direction of the mainland.

"We might as well explore the island," he went on, hiding the anxious note in his voice. "It can't be later than 3 o'clock. They'll be here before dark, sure. Wait! Let me think a minute."

He stood there looking quizzically up at the sky. The June sun had resumed its boiling heat. The breeze, though brisk, was warm and soft, with the smell of the land and vegetation.

"Our clothes will soon dry out in this sunshine," he reflected aloud. "We're no worse than if we'd just come out of the surf and were sunning ourselves on the beach. Maybe you'd—" He hesitated in some embarrassment. "Maybe you'd like to be left alone for awhile, Joan, to—to tidy yourself up a bit."

She looked surprised and grateful.

"I'll take a look about the island myself, first, and be back in an hour."

"I am a perfect fright," she said disconsolately.

"No, you're not," he cried warmly. Then he left her She watched him scramble off among the rocks above, and then with a sigh of despair, began fumbling for combs in the hopelessly gnarled mass of hair.

When he came back whistling from his detour of the bleak little island, on which grew not a single spear of vegetation, she was sitting composedly in the sun, her long brown hair hanging loose to dry, her wistful eyes gazing out over the water in the direction of home. She had removed her shoes and stockings, and they, too, were drying near at hand. Somehow, you had the feeling that her shirt waist and the duck skirt also had been wrung out and dried and pressed into an amazingly presentable shape. The eternal feminine in her!

He, too, was barefooted The rocks were growing hot beneath the rays of the sun. He walked with the tender care of one who finds discomfort in the act of putting down his foot.

"Good'" he exclaimed "That's the way Mary dries her hair," he added in the most matter of fact way

She pouted "Don't you like it this way? I'll put it up at—"

"Don't' I like it! It's gorgeous Goodness, I'd never think you had so much hair You—you can sit on it, can't you?"

"No one sits on her hair," she retorted, not quite sure whether to be pleased. "Eric, I must have a drink of water"

His face brightened. "There isn't a sign of a spring on Little Eddy," he said

"What'" she wailed

"But," he added triumphantly, "I found a pool of rain water up there at the top, and covered it with a slab of stone, so's it wouldn't evaporate. Come along I'll show you over the island If—Gee! Doesn't it burn your feet?"

"Ooh' I should say it does!" she cried, screwing her face into an exaggerated expression of pain. They were young

Together they picked their way to the pool he had so thoughtfully located and preserved Then they sought the shade of the shelving rock and sat down to wait, their gaze turned ever shoreward, searching the horizon for sails or the smoke of tugs

The afternoon wore away, and the gloom of dusk began to settle over the blue waters, the evening mist creeping out from the shore to meet the shadows from the mysterious east. The castaways so near to home yet so far from its security, fell into a dull, brooding silence, their thoughts crowded with vague fears and a certain growing resentment toward those on shore who were failing them They could not understand why a whole fleet of boats had not put forth at once to search for them. Was not she the daughter of a supreme court judge? Was not he the nephew of the great Horace Blagden? Why, then, were they being treated with such indifference, such inexplicable disdain? Could it be possible that no one cared what became of them? A thousand bitter thoughts assailed them as they sat there, staring out over the darkening sea. Neither complained aloud, and yet both had come to feel that they would not be found that night.

The great revolving lantern in the distant lighthouse sent out its beams; the stars struggled through the scattering mists, and the solemn moon spread a soft glow over their world of desolation. The lapping of the waves, the regular swish of disturbed waters against the lonely reef were the only sounds that fell upon their ears. They were hungry, exhausted, despairing, out there alone on the breast of the sea.

"Don't be afraid, Joan," he whispered, leaning close to her, infinite tenderness in his hushed voice. "Nothing can happen to us tonight. They'll surely come in the morning"

"I'm not really afraid, Eric," she said, but there was awe in her voice. "But isn't it lonely? Isn't it awful to be alone out here?" She crept a little closer to him.

He quelled the tender impulse to clasp her in his arms, and hold her in security all the night long, with her head on his shoulder, her hand in his. A strange bashfulness came over him, surpassing anything he had ever felt before. It was a part of the infinitely gentle love that was in his heart; something that came out of the loneliness to show him how sacred, how pure love is.

Very gently he bade her lean back and rest her head against his shoulder, and sleep. He would keep watch. * * *

The moon passed slowly over the great dome above and disappeared behind the wall of rock that sheltered them. She had been asleep for hours. Then his tired eyes closed and their heads touched in sweet oblivion. * * *

The sun was shining brightly when he opened his eyes.

A man stood over them, with a pitying, though satisfied half smile on his hard face. Eric blinked his eyes, and rubbed them, staring harder and harder.

"Why—why—" he murmured in utter bewilderment,

"The babes in the woods," remarked the thick set man, with a satirical chuckle. "Only it happens to be the sea instead of a wood. Do you know what time it is?"

"How did you get here!" demanded Eric, unable to conquer his amazement. The girl stirred and then sat bolt upright, staring at the sinister face of the man, whose hands were deep in his coat pockets, his legs spread far apart.

"I walked on the water," was his sacrilegious answer. "It's low tide. Four bells. Have you had breakfast? Fried or boiled eggs?"

Eric managed to find his voice, and said, conscious of great relief in Joan's face brightened at once.

"Can we go home" she cried.

"Sure, Miss Bright My yacht is lying off here with steam up. The dinghy awaits Will you please put your shoes and stockings

Joan blushed hotly and drew her feet up under her skirts Eric leaped to his feet and was running around the corner of the ledge to look for the dinghy There it lay, in the lee of the island, a smudgy, unlovely chortling tub, smoky and impatient with half a dozen grimy individuals on board whom were surveying the rescue party with the nonchalance of men used to disaster. A small row boat, with a single occupant, puttered along the edge of the reef, waiting for the master who had come ashore Eric sent up a cheer and waved his hand A voice at the bow spoke.

"I thought I'd find you here, as no one else is looking to the south of Point, everywhere but the right place Thinks I, they've gone out to see where we started straight out" He chuckled "It's a joke on those wise chaps, your uncle and the preacher and all, to be looking in the bay and dragging and praying, and cursing the luck

"How did you think of looking out here, Mr. Carr?"

Adam Carr closed one eye. "I always have great luck in finding people where they don't expect to be found," he said enigmatically "Figured on these reefs, and telephoned to the light keeper, asking if he'd seen a capsized boat go by He thought he saw one away out yesterday afternoon Father set me right then and there that if you had half a chance you'd make one of the reefs. He seems to think you're made of the right stuff, Mr Eric Midthorne And here we are If you hadn't been here, I'd have known where you were" He screwed up his lips significantly and pointed downward with his thumb.

"At the bottom of the sea," said Eric, with a shudder

"Yes. But you'd have come up in time, I daresay. Well! Here we are, Bright. Now we can be off If you've the eggs fried in the engine room"

"Did you really think about bringing eggs?" cried Eric.

"Eggs and coffee responded the hard faced man, as he motioned to the oarsman to approach

"What a horrid looking man," whispered Joan, when his back was turned

"I can't make him out myself," Eric. "He's Jabez Carr's son I know he was in Corinth

Later on, he deliberately put the question to Adam Carr "Where did you come from, Mr Carr"

They had finished eating their fried and were sitting on the after deck with their strange rescuer. The dinghy with a vast ado in its boilers, came through the bright waves, leaving behind a long, almost unending trail of smoke.

Adam Carr's inscrutable face took on a new line or two I guess it wouldn't be any the wiser if I told you. It's more than likely you have never heard of the place."

"Oh, do tell us," cried Joan, who had become deeply interested in the man. Despite his ugliness, despite the forbidding sinister face of him, he possessed a certain fascinating individuality that impressed her, as it did all young persons susceptible to curiosity

"Ever hear of Tasmir" he asked quizzically. They pondered and shook their heads.

"I thought so. So you are not any wiser, are you?"

They sheepishly admitted the fact

"Is it a city or country" asked Eric

"It's neither," he affirmed with a grinned in a most tantalizing manner. Afterwards they were to learn that Tasmir was the seat of a Russian nobleman.

"Well," said Eric, hiding his chagrin and resentment, "I'm glad you're here, no matter where you came from You must have been like looking for a needle in a haystack, but still you found us."

"I've never tried to find a needle in a haystack," said Adam Carr reflectively. "I'm sure it must be interesting. I'll try sometime"

"What a queer man you are, Mr. Carr," cried Joan impulsively as she stared at her, and she shrank inwardly from the sardonic glitter in his eyes.

He chuckled mirthlessly "I am not," he said. "Queer men never live anywhere, Miss Bright For instance, the fellow who looks for a needle when there are so many other things to look for that are worth finding. You call him a queer chap, I'd say I've found things in my time that I didn't make looking for a needle seem the easiest task in the world But I've added, after a short pause "I still think if you'd lost a needle in a haystack and you just had to have that needle back in your sewing bag, I could find it for you if you made it worth while for me to do so."

"No one could possibly want a needle so much as all that," she cried, quite perplexed by his humor.

"In any event," said he, continuing in the same vein, "a needle is a mighty handy thing to have about if you possess a trick camel."

Where Angels Fear To Tread

From the Woman's World.

Shall I tell you the main thesis of the never-to-be-forgotten sermon to women? This: "It is the sphere of woman to aid and glorify man."

Alice, my wife, will testify that these were the very words, for the other morning I fished up the crumpled manuscript from among a lot of old papers and read it all through out loud. I think I never heard her laugh more heartily, though I can't say her merriment quite equaled mine It lacked the note of triumph. "Alice, my dear," said I, "this is uproariously funny product. the funniest sermon ever preached by a grass green theologian anywhere on earth; and yet, my love, it paves the way for you."

Which was pretty nearly true. Among the consequences tagged after me was Archer (now the Rev. F. Quimby Archer, D. D., Ph. D., and the rest of it) who became my successor at the little country church and reported things he heard. For instance, gentle old lady Bemis remark, "Pears to me that this here parson taown's been a-ca-a-alf pasture Abbott Seminary a-baout long enough." More to the point was what the deacon said: "Tell that friend o' yours not to be too discouraged; he'll know more when he's married."

This struck home. I was a public speaker; had taken prizes for "orations" in college: "I was a faithful student and, except for Ned, might have had the fellowship and a year abroad at my expenses paid. But just see what "breaks" I could make! Think of the mischief I could do! Whereas, a man of understanding women (and, for that matter, men) might save my neck.

Marriage would mean poverty, of course. It would mean anxiety. It would trip up my ambitions. I should be denying myself the benefits of the post graduate [illegible] I thought wanted, and the extravagant [illegible] library I was sure I needed Wife. Unmarried, I was a foregone failure. SPAIN AT MERCY OF FOOD SPECULATORS

Madrid, Spain, (by mail) The increasing cost of food supplies in Spain, which has resulted in a number of food riots, as reported by cable is charged solely to speculation In 1914 the crops were better than in previous years, with an excess of 100,000 tons of wheat over the crop of 1913, but notwithstanding this, prices have mounted so high that the government has been forced to take measures to avoid monopolies, and has intimated its intention of fixing the maximum prices.

Wheat cereals in general, potatoes, beans and other products have been exported in a great quantities to France and England Numerous French agents have bought beef and vegetables at prices above normal and Switzerland alone last month bought for its army $1,000,000 worth of food products from Spain All this has caused a natural crisis which has been felt severely in the provinces.

The hight prices added to the fact that work in the factories is paralyzed in almost the whole of Spain is rendering the workman's life impossible Public works on the government's account have been begun in some provinces, but nevertheless it has not been possible to eliminate the existing bad state of affairs The trouble has reached its greatest intensity in the south. Early this month disorders broke out in Murcia where groups of workmen paraded the streets in hostile attitude In Grevillesute more than 4,000 people walked the streets demanding bread and work In Cadiz Lara-goza, Lucena Badajoz Logrono and Segovia, similar disturbances took place. In Albacete the crowds protested to the civil government and the governor ordered them to be fired upon One person was killed and several wounded as a result

Jefferson's Town

From the New York World

A mansion on Monticello (little mountain," pronounced 'Montechello') was Jefferson's boyhood dream He worked at it all his life with an artist's creative zeal

The road from Charlottesville is winding, hilly and rough Rows of big stepping stones cross it lifting pedestrians out of the red mud but jolting heedless drivers

Visitors may stay in the grounds 20 minutes, but must bring no luncheons Jefferson's guests stayed weeks and ate him into poverty

From the servants' quarters a long sunken way runs under the house to the ice house and other storage beyond The flat roof of this walk, two feet above ground, is a dry promenade over the ice house is an outlook platform Ice house and servants' quarters are half under ground, with windows only on the far side Jefferson looked out over them east toward Washington, west toward the University of Virginia whose beginnings he watched with his telescope when he could no longer walk

Only 1,000 students enjoy the most beautiful and inspiring scholastic shades in the New World Jefferson's university is artistic perfection, reverently preserved Toward the town the curved walls he designed to save brick and labor for a poor institution still stand The length of each waveline curve is 20 feet its width 40 inches, gives the stability of a 3-foot wall to one only 4 inches thick The effect is pleasing

Charlottesville has 7,000 inhabitants and more good domestic architecture than many a big American town As in Princetown, Cambridge and New Haven college culture improves town taste Still there are some expensive freaks and bungling bungalows In the dark days of 1876 the university itself raised one ugly building

Jefferson was a better architect than Washington, and perhaps his equal in landscape gardening and estate planning

The university is 90 years old On Jefferson's gravestone at Monticello no mention of the presidency is made but his authorship of the declaration and the Virginia statute of religious liberty is cited —and that he was the Father of the University of Virginia.

Guarding American Honor

From the St Paul Dispatch

No one who is jealous of the honor and integrity of American institutions can feel other than profoundly grateful that Mayor Donn M Roberts of Terre Haute Ind., and his whole crew of political henchmen who corrupted the elections in their home town last November were promptly found guilty by the federal jury at Indianapolis.

Such a wholesale voting debauch as they indulged in—or engineered—not only sullies the fair name of their city and commonwealth, but provides the enemies of American democratic institutions with too much basis for attack A Lecky might describe the Terre Haute election frauds as the inseparable accompaniment of universal suffrage and as convincing evidence of the defects of democracy We know, of course, that such a conclusion would be wrong But there are always certain elements in the community who are ready to take advantage of their great privileges and corrupt them to private ends. Against them, and in behalf of the America whose honor we are jealous of, we must be eternally vigilant

Let us hope, then that Judge Anderson, of the Indianapolis federal court metes out to the Terre Haute offenders punishment equivalent to their crime and puts them behind the bars for a while where they may meditate on the hard way of the transgressor

"Business as Usual," Old Style.

From the St Louis Post-Dispatch

The Illinois Manufacturers' association in formal resolutions and by its legislative agents at Springfield, opposes the 8-hour workday for women and the child labor bill which Jane Addams and other humanitarians advocate

The association declares business is in no condition to withstand further 'onslaughts" in behalf of mere women and child wage earners.

This is "business as usual old style unable to see any duty to society to the children whom poverty forces into premature self support or to the women wage earners who must help bear the next generation of the race—unable indeed, to see anything except dividends

One would suppose these gentlemen had never heard that women had been given the ballot in Illinois. Very likely they have not, since men of their sort are always last to hear of any advance in human civilization

The Ploughman.

Clear the brown path, to meet his coulter's gleam
Lo' on he comes, behind his smoking team
With toil's bright dewdrops on his sun burnt brow
The lord of earth, the hero of the plough'

First in the field before the reddening sun
Last in the shadows when the day is done,
Line after line, along the bursting sod
Marks the broad acres where his feet have trod,
Still, where he treads, the stubborn clods divide,
The smooth, fresh furrow opens deep and wide,
Matted and dense and tangled turf upheaves,
Mellow and dark the ridgy corn field cleaves.
Up the steep hillside, where the laboring train
Slants the long track that scars the level plain,
Through the moist valley, clogged with oozing clay,
The patient convoy breaks 'ts destined way,
At every turn the loosening chains resound,
The swinging ploughshare circles glistening round,
Till the wide field one billowy waste appears. * * *

HOW ABOUT YOUR TEETH?

How would your teeth come through the scrutiny that the teeth of the wounded soldiers of all nationalities in the American war hospitals are subjected to?

It is said that the attention paid to the teeth of the wounded by the American Ambulance corps is in large part responsible for the quick recovery of the wounded in their charge In their examination of the teeth of the wounded, doctors and nurses and dentists have found that the teeth of the Arabs are almost perfect, by far the best teeth that come under their notice. The teeth of the English are the worst, and those of the French, too, are bad

Now just the reason for this difference in tooth quality has not been explained But it seems quite probable that some of it is caused by the diet of the peoples concerned Certain it is, anyway that the complicated food that most of us eat has a bad effect upon the teeth Soft foods, overcooked and overseasoned, are not good for the teeth, as everybody knows. So one of the things that we should all do when we are looking out for the welfare of our teeth is to look to our diet.

Children should be taught to masticate everything thoroughly and they should be trained on hard food, food that needs mastication to make it palatable and digestible Bread a couple of days old twice baked bread, and other things that exercise the teeth should be a part of their diet, as much for the sake of the teeth as for the sake of the digestion

Of course cleanliness is of first importance in preserving the teeth Some persons with really fine teeth do not use a brush more than once a day After each meal however they wash the teeth with water and rub them with a cloth or the finger and give them one thorough brushing with paste or powder or liquid dentifrice But the constant brushing, they contend scratches and eventually weakens the enamel

It is of the utmost importance of course to keep the teeth free from all bits of food that become lodged between them and to further this work dental floss is invaluable

Especially at night the teeth should be carefully cleaned for any bit of fermenting substance like a tiny piece of meat left between the teeth, might cause great damage before morning

Gary Idea Spreading.

From the Indianapolis News

The Gary school idea which emphasizes vocational training and the maximum use of school equipment is spreading rapidly in the east after its introduction in New York city by William Wirt, the originator of the system When a school building burned in Troy recently, the 600 pupils of the school were accommodated by the introduction of the Gary idea in another school building without crowding and the arrangement in all probability will be permanent In New Haven one of the technical schools of secondary grade had been operating five hours a day, five days in the week and about 36 weeks in the year, which is about the ordinary school program This school offered training in pattern making, forging and machine shop practice to the boys and dressmaking, cooking and millinery to the girls only 120 50-minute hours a year, or the equivalent of 12 days in a factory Last September coming under the influence of the Gary idea the municipal board of education changed the school program The school was made to open at 8 a m and close at 5 p m and the sessions continued to Saturday noon for 50 weeks in the year with the result that a total of 2,200 hours of instruction was obtained instead of the usual 950 hours.

The school was used further in training the students in actual productive work. They were put at real work at separate trades in and about the school building, and the student labor was even let to outside contractors in this way securing a more practical and a more profitable course of apprenticeship The student plumbers do the school repair work, the painters and decorators have redecorated the interior of one of the large school buildings the carpenters are making school equipment and are soon to build a large house in the city the machinists are making a machine for the market and are doing job work the dressmakers are making dresses for the trade the cooking class is preparing to operate a commercial restaurant for the high school students and teachers and plans are being made to use the commercial students in keeping the accounts of the school factory The original Wirt idea seems in this case to have been improved upon

A Pan-American Conference.

From the Milwaukee Journal

Perhaps no move made by the administration at Washington for the encouragement of trade has greater potentialities than the trade and banking conference to be held at Washington in May by the ministers of finance and bankers of Central and South America, three from each country Enthusiasm for the project has been manifested in South America, and the United States, having begun the undertaking, will surely give it warm support

Such a conference should make Herculean efforts to establish dollar exchange, with New York as the clearing point London and the English pound system have been used for decades in the international exchanges for South America. Where banking facilities are provided, trade will gravitate. If New York does the financing of business and of investments in South America, it will be a powerful factor toward promoting exchanges with the United States. If only European money is invested in South American enterprises, South American buyers will turn naturally to European manufacturers This is the time for Americans to go after their share of this trade If it is done intelligently, the business can be held permanently

Millions of dollars worth of Argentine notes have been sold in New York But one government loan is not enough Americans must become bankers for all South America We now have the resources, the savings and the loaning ability

When New York and Chicago capital is used to develop tramways, docks, banks and shipping in South America there will no longer be any question where the commerce will go. American capital means American commercial leadership and this in turn means markets for American goods.

If the Pan-American trade conference in May can hasten the advent of general use of dollar exchange, it will have achieved a striking success

What Did the Kaiser Tell Beveridge?

From the New Republic

On the cover of Collier's Weekly for March 27 is displayed the announcement "A Visit to the Kaiser by Senator Albert J Beveridge" Above it is a facsimile of Mr Beveridge's letter to Mr Mark Sullivan, assuring him and the public that every statement in the article was true and officially sanctioned by the imperial German government. Perhaps, in the careless fashion of readers, you say to yourself "Here is a piece of journalism—an interview between a senator and an emperor" Then you turn to the article. You learn that Mr. Beveridge visited William II, and walked with him in the garden for two hours, that the monarch does not look older than his age suggests; that his complexion is pale, with a faint tinge of color; that his voice is vibrant and strong And you are told what Admiral von Tirpitz and Field Marshal von Hindenburg said to Mr. Beveridge. Of what the kaiser said in those two hours there is no hint. Perhaps Mr. Beveridge did all the talking. Perhaps the kaiser may not be quoted. At any rate, only a very gullible person would suppose that the announcement of "A Visit to the Kaiser" implies that you have anything to report. It is sufficient to prove that there was a visit to the kaiser And that truth Collier's has established for all time, at the expense of its readers.

Russia has been making plans for the construction of great storehouses for grain at many points.

A counterfeiter was once walking along a lonely side street when he was stopped by a bold, bad robber The robber presented a large open-faced revolver and demanded coin He got it—about two gallons of lead dollars fresh from his victim's private mint

Next day the robber bought himself an automobile pistol of the latest design, a weapon which he had long coveted He paid for the gun out of the proceeds of his latest haul and was immediately haled before a magistrate and sent up for a long term of years for counterfeiting

PROPER CREDIT TO NOBODY

Simple Logic Easily Proves That He Has Not Hitherto Been Treated With Justice.

The time is now arrived when Nobody should come to his own Hitherto Nobody has not been treated with justice As one of the most important persons in America, Nobody should have statues erected in all of our principal cities Let us, therefore, consider the claims of Nobody In the first place, Nobody knows Take, for example, the currency bill, the tariff schedules, the status of philosophy, or the art of the futurist. Nobody knows about all of these things, when all the rest are in entire ignorance. Furthermore, if you want to know the actual truth about these important questions, and many more, Nobody is the only one who can tell you. Everybody takes some interest in baseball, movies, vaudeville, bridge and highballs, but when it comes to all the things which are known as vital, such as government, slums etc., who cares? Sick Women Attention

Is it possible there is a woman in this country who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, which proves beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other one medicine in the world?

We have published in the newspapers of the United States more genuine testimonial letters than have ever been published in the interest of any other medicine for women—and every year we publish many new testimonials, all genuine and true. Here are three never before published:

From Mrs. S. T. Richmond, Providence, R. I.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—"For the benefit of women who suffer as I have done I wish to state what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I did some heavy lifting and the doctor said it caused a displacement. I have always been weak and I overworked after my baby was born and inflammation set in, then nervous prostration, from which I did not recover until I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The Compound is my best friend and when I hear of a woman with troubles like mine I try to induce her to take your medicine."—Mrs. S. T. RICHMOND, 84 Progress Avenue, Providence, R.I.

From Mrs. Maria Irwin, Peru, N.Y.

PERU, N.Y.—"Before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was very irregular and had much pain. I had lost three children, and felt worn out all the time. This splendid medicine helped me as nothing else had done, and I am thankful every day that I took it."—Mrs. MARIA IRWIN, R.F.D. 1, Peru, N.Y.

From Mrs. Jane D. Duncan, W. Quincy, Mass.

SOUTH QUINCY, MASS.—"The doctor said that I had organic trouble and he doctored me for a long time and I did not get any relief. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised and I tried it and found relief before I had finished the first bottle. I continued taking it all through middle life and am now a strong, healthy woman and earn my own living."—Mrs. JANE D. DUNCAN, Forest Avenue, West Quincy, Mass.

J. A. Sennet, a graduate of Iowa State College at Ames, arrived last Friday to take charge of the local dairy test association. He is a mighty fine young man to meet. Here's hoping that Hancock county's first Cow Testing Association proves successful.

Henry Yahnke has started in as the third hauler for the local creamery and has been bringing in some mighty big loads. The creamery business is increasing very much of late and the directors hope to make this year's business reach the $100,000 mark, and from the present outlook it will reach that figure.

Harry Bonwell acquired two valuable pieces of personal property this week. First, he invested in a pure bred bull dog and later purchased a Ford to be used in his increasing livery business. He is also thinking of using the Ford for a "jitney" and we believe if he decides to do so that he would find it a paying venture, as sevural of the business men and clerks who live in the suburbs seem to walk with difficulty while on their way home after a long, hard days work. "Tiny" Winters for instance would likely purchase a season ticket.

Preliminary plans for the new school house are now being considered, but no definate official action has yet been taken on any of the steps. It appears to be the general sentiment at this time that the building should not be placed in the center of the playground the desire being to preserve the base ball grounds This we think would be a wise decision, as the playgrounds keep the children near the school and if their grounds are spoiled they will be tempted to scatter over the town at recess and other times —Kanawka Record

Sam Kirkwood recently traded autos with his brother, W M of Ringsted and in the trade he became the owner of a Flanders. ELIMINATING CORN ROOT WORMS

Rotation of Crops is One Remedy for This Expensive Pest.

Corn root worms are undoubtedly the most expensive pest with which the Iowa farmer has to deal. Yet, according to R. L. Webster, entomologist of the Iowa agricultural experiment station, they are much more serious than they need be. They effect only the farmer who insists on growing corn on the same piece of ground year after year. Crop rotation is a satisfactory remedy and the only remedy for these root worms. The farmer who noticed indications of the corn root worm last summer ought to change the crop in that field to something else than corn, else he will only be breeding more root worms this year for himself and his neighbors. These worms do practically no damage to other crops than corn and if the corn is put on a different field this change will eliminate the trouble quite promptly

Alfalfa Without Nurse Crop

While it is a more common practice to seed alfalfa in the spring with a nurse crop much in the same manner as red clover, it may be seeded without a nurse crop with good chances of success, says Professor H D Hughes of Iowa State College With this method the seed is put in a little later than the ordinary time for seeding small grain. It demands also that the land be worked thoroughly for some weeks in advance of seeding, so that as many as possible of the weed seeds in the soil may be sprouted and killed The land should have been manured and plowed the preceeding fall as that preparation adds materially to the chances for success The main advantages of spring seeding are that less labor is required and that there is greater likelihood of the necessary rainfall Its chief disadvantage is that the fight with weeds is hard with spring than with later summer seeding Of the men who have tried spring seeding without a nurse crop, about 75 per cent succeeded.

Surely a Prize Turkey.

An old Scotchwoman had a reputation far and near for her fine fowls, and had often been awarded prizes at the neighboring shows. During the Christmas season a gentleman staying in the neighborhood, hearing her poultry so highly praised, resolved to give her a trial, so sent an order for the finest turkey she had, and after a little delay was delighted to receive as fine a specimen as could be wished for. This delight, however, was short lived, for on trying to carve the bird he found it so tough as to resist all his efforts. Enraged, he sallied forth to find the woman, who he believed had swindled him. After listening to his outburst of wrath she exclaimed: "Hoots, man, why ye canna tell a guid fowl when ye see ane. That bubbly-jock's ta'en th' first prize at th' show for th' last seven years!"

Rust-Proof Ironwork.

A simple method of making iron work proof against rust is to heat it until it is almost red hot and then brush it over with linseed oil. This makes a varnish which, unlike ordinary paint or enamel, does not chip off.

The History of Other Countries

It is not at all the history of our own country which is all-important overshadowing all the rest, not the history of the times nearest to our own says Frederic Harrison. . . If history be the continuous biography of the . . . human race, it may well be that the history of remoter times which have the least resemblance to our own, may often be the more valuable to us, as correcting national prejudices and the narrow ideas bred in us by daily custom. . The history of other races, and of different customs, may be of all things the best to correct our . . . vanities, and our conventional prejudices We are indeed to know the history of our own country, of the latter ages. But the danger is, that we may know little other history.

Racket or Raquette.

When you use the racket in playing tennis you do not stop to think what it means and how difficult it has been to trace the word. Some thought that it was so called because of the noise made by the ball striking the racket is impossible. The real origin is the French raquette, the palm of the hand, which was originally used in the game before the racket was invented. It's all very simple when you know.

Klemme Cow Testing Association Should Prove A Paying Venture

In February, 1914, Klemme had the first dairy short course ever held in Iowa and since that time people all over the state have been hearing from her in various ways. Now she is listed on the progressive slate with the eleventh co-operative cow testing association. The tester has started on his route and several herds have already been tested.

In order to realize the importance of this organization and its benefits to the members and to the community it is interesting to note what has been

One association in Iowa has been operating for five years; others from one to three years. The increase production of some of the herds in these associations, and other benefits to be derived show the advantages of such an organization. The herd of Peder Pederson and Son in the Benson Association at Cedar Falls is a good example of what can be done by constantly weeding out of the poor cows and giving the good ones a little better feed and care. The following figures show the record of this herd for three consecutive years with a gradual increase both in milk and butterfat production

	Ave. milk per cow	Ave fat per cow	Ave. profit per cow
1911	5665 lb	207 7 lb	$ 22.13
1913	9697 lb	341.9 lb	75.00

The figure for 1914 are not yet available, but indicate that the herd will average over 350 pounds of butterfat. The owners of this herd are renters and the herd is composed largely of grade animals. It will be noted from the above that in the last three years the herd has increased a little more than 134 pounds of fat which figured at 30 cents a pound means an increased profit per cow of over $40 90 per year To this man with 10 cows ... would mean an increased profit of $400.00. What these men have done ... other associations in the state ... can do

Ten men in the Janesville association have been testing their cows continuously for four years and have made the following record.

	Ave. milk per cow	Ave. fat per cow	Ave profit per cow
1911	6483 6 lb	246 lb	$ 32 42
1912	7648 4 lb	277 1 lb	39 29
1913	8739 9 lb	285.8 lb	52.94
1914	8648 3 lb	312 6 lb	66 02

The figures show a marked increase in all three columns The butterfat production ... 66 6 pounds in the four years in these 10 herds, which means ... these men were selling from their 166 cows ... pounds more butterfat in 1914 than was sold in 1911. At 30 cents ... pound which is a good average price, this gives an increased income of ... worth ... for 1914 after only four years of testing. In 1911 ... average production of the 400 cows in the Janesville association was ... pounds of ... in 1914 this average had grown to 280.5 pounds ... of these could be sited, but they all bring out ... testing association is simply a business proposition ... for the ... ways to milk some good cows and make them all pay

Cows are different ... just the same as men The following figures show the ... of the best cow and one of the poorest cows in the Iowa Associa... for the year

	Lbs butterfat	Feed cost	Profit
Best cow	697 6	$66 66	$214.56
Poorest cow	58	47 06	30.69 loss

SOD POOR FOR STRAWBERRIES

Any Good Soil Will Do and Spring Planting Is Best

Any good soil that will grow corn will also produce strawberries, says the horticultural department of Iowa State college. Sod soil should be avoided because of the white grubs which are usually present among the grass roots. A south slope produces earlier berries while plants on a north slope are less likely to winter kill Clean soil free from weed seeds and diseases lessens the labor in caring for the plot. The soil should be prepared as for corn except that it should be more thoroughly pulverized and firmed. Spring planting gives best results, since fall planted plots produce only half a crop when weather conditions are very favorable in the fall and winter. Fall planted plots are more likely to winter kill and are usually not so long lived as those planted in the spring. Spring planting should be done as soon as the soil is in good condition. Strawberry plants should be set 18 to 24 inches apart in rows 3½ feet apart. The roots should be spread out when the plant is set and none should be exposed to dry out The heart of the plant should not be buried in the soil. If fruit stems are removed from newly set plants the first season, better growthe will result. Cultivation should be frequent enough to maintain a dust mulch and weeds should be kept from the rows by hoeing.

RATIONS FOR YEARLING STEERS

Silage Is a Profitable Basis in Feed for Fattening Cattle.

In response to a question from a Cedar county farmer as to the best method of feeding out a carload of yearling steers, the animal husbandry department of Iowa State college made the following statement:

"If your cattle are on full feed at the present time, you ought to be careful about making any changes. If you have corn silage, we would suggest that you use this as the principal roughage. Give the steers opportunity to eat some hay; however, they will take the silage in preference to the hay A ration composed of shelled corn and cottonseed meal, at the rate of 2½ pounds to 3 pounds per day per 1,000 pounds live weight, together with the corn silage and the hay, would be the most economical ration that you can give. The amount of corn will depend upon how long the cattle have been on feed. We should say at least 10 pounds of corn per day would be necessary. The amount of silage will depend on the weight of the cattle; if they weigh 800 to 900 pounds, they can eat 20 pounds or more per day.

In the Flathead Indian reservation, near Camas, Mont., is an artesian well containing hot mineral water, said to be the only one in the world. Around it, within a mile, are other artesian wells in which the water is clear and cool. A few years ago the government threw open the Flathead reservation, and those who were successful in the drawing now own fine ranches in a fertile valley. Artesian wells have been struck at a depth ranging from 90 to 365 feet. In the summer of 1913, on a ranch within a mile of one of these cold wells, drillers were at work when, at the depth of 244 feet, hot water gushed upward with such force that the drillers were forced to flee. In a few days the rush of hot water had washed a large hole, with the drill still in, though incapacitated. The well was finally curbed so that it could be used. The water is 120 Fahrenheit, flowing at the rate of 60 barrels a minute.

The British soldier is never at a loss when sarcasm is needed, and an example of his readiness was seen the other day in one of our seaside towns where thousands of men are in training. A long route march had been in progress, and the officer had been none too patient. Several times he had had occasion to speak strongly to the men. At last, on the march home, the order came "March easy"—the time when songs are indulged in. There was no call for "Tipperary" this time, but unanimously they started singing, "Kind Words Can Never Die." The officer's feelings are not described.

A notable tribute to English beer was paid by the abbot of Monte Casino in a conversation with Lord Houghton, reported to Sir Mountstuart Gran-Duff. Discussing English university reforms, the abbot expressed his hope that the British government would not interfere with the college founded in honor of the ever-blessed Trinity at Cambridge. Lord Houghton inquired the reason for the abbot's special solicitude, and the answer given (with a gesture of delight) was "Una tale birra" (Such a beer)—a compliment well earned by the Trinity audit ale.

Abdul Baha, at the head of the Bahaist sect, which it is asserted, has diverted about one-third of the population of Persia from Mohammedanism, is now 70 years of age. He spent 24 years in prison, being released when 65 years of age. At the age of 18 he began his public work, and for 52 years has proclaimed his faith. For it he was imprisoned. He travels royally, is possessed of unbounded zeal, and believes himself divinely appointed.

For years past the sum of $15,000 a year has been set aside out of the German military estimates for the upkeep and development of a pigeon service, and nearly 300,000 feathered messengers were available at the beginning of the war for military service. Beyond these army pigeons, all trained birds belong to civilians, even the pets of school boys and school girls are carefully registered and numbered and may be commandeered by the war department at any time.

Robert Fulton was one of the earliest inventors of the submarine. He constructed a boat in France and gave a trial trip in the Seine at Rouen and at Brest. Compressed air was used and Fulton remained at a depth of 25 feet, steering his submarine in every direction. He also attached a torpedo charged with gunpowder to an old vessel in Brest harbor and blew her up.

RUEBLING HELD FOR MURDER OF WIFE BY CORONER'S VERDICT

Self Defense Claim Upheld By Members of Family, But Man Must Face Trial.

Davenport, Ia., May 1.—Attorneys for Carl Ruebling, the Scott county farmer who cut his wife's throat during a dispute over the division of their farm, refused to let him testify at the coroner's inquest last night, which, nevertheless, held him responsible for the murder.

All of Ruebling's sons and daughters, his children by a former marriage, testified in their father's behalf, saying that Mrs. Ruebling had repeatedly threatened his life. They said Ruebling had cried bitterly after telling them that he had killed his wife and that he asked to see all of his grandchildren before being taken to jail.

Mrs. Minnie Altman, a neighbor, was the strongest witness for the defense. She testified that Mrs. Ruebling had stopped at her house before going home on the fatal afternoon, that she had seemed afraid to continue on her way home, and that she kissed her goodbye and parted from her as if saying a final farewell. The murdered woman also had told Mrs. Altman of an evil premonition that had come in a dream the night before.

The Altman home is a short distance down the road from the Ruebling farm. It was a half hour after this conversation took place that the murder occurred.

FAMILY TROUBLES LED TO SUICIDE OF T. H. ROGERS

West Liberty, Ia., May 1.—The body of T. H. Rogers, a tinsmith, who had worked for J. C. Nichols since the first of the year, was found leaning against a tree beside the road a short distance northwest of town.

Rogers had scribbled a few lines on the bottom of a revolver box, which lay at his feet, and explained that the reason for his act would be found in the letter that had been left in his room. This letter, which covered several pages, dealt with the separation from his wife and told of his long despondency.

The wife is supposed to be living in Illinois where Rogers is said to have considerable property. His two sons are at Clinton, from which city he came to West Liberty. His aged mother lives in Iowa City.

Rogers was about 55 years of age and during his local residence had been sober and industrious.

WOMAN SEEKS DAMAGES FROM ALLEGED DEFAMERS

Waterloo, Ia., May 1.—Some time ago a petition signed by 64 residents of North Waterloo was presented to the city council protesting against the alleged renting of property owned by Mrs. Louise Stranahan to persons of ill repute. Yesterday a complaint was filed in the district court by Mrs. Stranahan against the petitioners, asking for $25,000 for libel, slander and conspiracy.

She alleges that the petitioners conspired to defame her good name and damage her in her property rights. She denies that she has rented any of her residences or apartments to people of ill repute and denies that any disorderly places have been maintained there.

The petitioners, composed of both men and women, held a meeting to consider their future course.

MRS. VAN HORN'S SISTER TELLS OF SUICIDE EFFORT

Mason City, Ia., May 1.—Mrs. Robert Hackett, sister of Mrs. Chester Van Horn on trial here for the murder of her husband, was the last witness on the stand yesterday afternoon. She told of going to the Van Horn home the afternoon the body was found and of remaining there during the night. She said Mrs. Van Horn appeared cheerful.

When Sheriff Marsh came with the subpoena for Mrs. Van Horn to attend the inquest she said the defendant's manner changed. During breakfast Mrs. Van Horn remarked she did not know what she could tell at the testimony, the witness said.

She then went upstairs according to her testimony and found her sister with a razor. Mrs. Van Horn said she was going to kill herself. Mrs. Hackett snatched it from her and they fought over it until the arrival of her brother, Mike Calapan.

DOCTOR USES MONOPLANE IN AN EMERGENCY CALL

Marshalltown, Ia., May 1.—In answer an emergency call to an accident by aeroplane was the experience of Dr. Pearl E. Somers of Grinnell, who received a telephone call from a farm home 11 miles southeast of Grinnell, where a man had been injured in a runaway accident. Aviator W. C. Robinson of Grinnell happened to be near the doctor's office when the call came, and learning of Somers mission volunteered to take the doctor to the scene of the accident in his monoplane. Somers promptly accepted the invitation. The start was made within a few minutes and the distance was traversed in just six minutes or at the rate of 110 miles an hour.

Somers dressed the man's injuries, was again seated in the monoplane, and was driven by Robinson back to Grinnell at the speed of 73 miles an hour.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS, SO PHONE COMPANY WORRIES

Fort Dodge, Ia., May 1.—With 700 people clamoring to the Fort Dodge Telephone company for service, there does not seem to be any hope in sight. In a statement issued by the company officials in answer to the complaints being made they state that on account of the low rate in force in this city they are financially unable to make the installations, which they claim will cost about $40,000.

An appeal from an injunction, restraining them from raising their rates, is pending before the supreme court of Iowa.

A franchise allowing the company to increase their rates, which was approved by the city commissioners and the Commercial club, was defeated by a large majority last year.

IOWA'S AUTO PER CAPITA TO MAKE NEW RECORD

Des Moines, Ia., April 30.—If the auto population of Iowa keeps growing like it has in the last two years there soon will be a car to every 10 persons. For this year approximately 90,000 have been registered. Roy Williams, head of the registration department, expects the number to go up to 140,000, an increase of 35,000 over last year. For two years now the increase has been about that number. With less than 2,500,000 people and three years will see one motor car to every 10 persons, Williams believes.

NEW IOWA LAWS GIVE MANY OPPORTUNITIES FOR BOOSTING TAXES

Cities and Counties Empowered to Go Beyond Former Limits In Many Instances.

Des Moines, Ia., May 1.—The last general assembly made it possible for the cities and towns of Iowa to increase their taxes by considerably over $1,000,000, persons interested in municipal affairs have figured out. Owing to the fact that only part of the cities may take advantage of the new taxing privileges, however, the total amount collected may not reach this total.

A much more important change was the amendment of the new law to allow an increase of the county general fund levy from 20 to 40 mills. Should this be taken advantage of by all the counties, it would bring an additional revenue into the county treasuries of between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

These taxing increases are authorized by some five or six laws. One authorizes cities to increase by 2 mills the levy for construction of sewer outlets, another authorizes the levy of a 2 mill tax in cities for maintenance of sanitary, street, sprinkling, garbage disposal and the like districts. Another permits the levy of a 2 mill tax for support and maintenance of city or town playgrounds. Another permits second class cities and towns to levy 1 mill additional for road purposes.

Besides these laws applying to general classes of cities, there are several special laws which will permit increases in the taxes of several cities.

In case the counties should unanimously take advantage of the opportunity to increase the general fund levy, the effect would be tremendous. It is pointed out. As far back as 1911 the total net taxable value of the property of all the counties was $758,312,366. If each county should levy the additional 20 mills the income on that valuation would be considerably over $10,000,000, and on the present valuation much more.

GENERAL GAINS SHOWN IN PLYMOUTH POPULATION

LeMars, Ia., May 1.—On figures so far reported in Plymouth county the general trend is to increased population in the towns and minor losses in the country districts. Elgin reports 97 persons less than five years ago the largest loss thus far reported by any township. The town of Oyens drops from 94 to 82, and is the first town to report a loss. Kingsley passed the 1,000 mark, having grown from 997 to 1,030 since 1910. LeMars has reported but one ward, the Third, which shows a gain from 1,476 to 1,810 in five years. Lincoln township reports 634 population as against 639 five years ago, a loss of five. Henry is one of the few rural townships that have grown in population having gained four in five years. The figures for this year are 528, as compared with 524 five years ago. Plymouth township with 610 population, shows a loss of 21 since 1910. Washington dropped from 656 to 639. Grant came near holding its own in spite of the incorporation of the town of Craig, and dropped from 730 to 723. Preston is an exception to the rule for the rural townships, and increased its population from 594 to 634, the past five years.

ALL SCHOOL ATHLETES IN "HOOKEY" STUNT

Webster City, Ia., May 1.—Because 20 high school boys "flunked" to go swimming and fishing yesterday they were suspended this morning for 10 days. This wholesale suspension cancels the ball game Saturday with Laurens and may interfere with other athletic events. Among the 20 were several boys from the graduating class and practically every leading athlete in the school.

VAN HOUTEN DIVORCE NOT GRANTED; WAS NOT OPPOSED

Bedford, Ia., May 1.—George H. Van Houten, of Lenox, prominent Iowa politician, was denied a divorce from Selina A. Van Houten by Judge Thomas L. Maxwell in the district court yesterday. The defendant did not contest the petition. The court held the showing insufficient to prove cruel and inhuman treatment.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Houten were married nearly 40 years ago, and their living children have all attained majority. They were parents of 12.

Mr. Van Houten represented Taylor county in two sessions of the legislature. He was secretary of the State Horticultural society for 10 years. He was secretary of the state department of agriculture when it was the State Agricultural society. He ran for lieutenant governor on the republican ticket with Hiram C. Wheeler, when the latter contested with Horace Boies in 1881.

BIG M. E. CAMPAIGN FOR NEW MEMBERS PROPOSED

Des Moines, Ia., May 1.—Bishop Richard J. Cooke, of Portland, Ore., was chosen president of the board of Methodist bishops in the initial session of their semi-annual conference here yesterday. Bishop Luther B. Wilson of New York city, was elected permanent secretary. The session was executive. Among the late arrivals during the day for the conference were Bishops Earl Cranston, of Washington, D. C., W. F. Oldham, former missionary bishop of India, and now general secretary of foreign missions of the church.

A world-wide movement for evangelization was outlined by Bishop Theodore S. Henderson, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and definite plans were expected to be made during the conference before the adjournment next Monday. It was proposed that the church shall inaugurate a campaign to increase the membership of the church 500,000 in 1916. The increase in two years has been 322,000.

IDEAL CONDITIONS FOR FARMING OPERATIONS

Des Moines, Ia., April 29.—Following is the regular weekly bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service, as issued by Director George M. Chappel:

Ideal conditions continued during the week for farm operations and growth of vegetation. Rapid progress was made in preparing ground for corn planting and considerable planting was done in the southern part of the state. Grass and small grains made good growth under the effects of high temperatures and light showers, but a good, soaking rain is needed to insure a bountiful harvest. All fruit trees, except peaches, show an abundance of bloom.

MORE RESIGNATIONS OF POLK OFFICIALS ARE EXPECTED SOON

Booze Parties and Other Incidents Making Big Dent In Court House Life.

Des Moines, Ia., April 30.—With County Attorney Wilson demanding that Chief Deputy Auditor Marion M. Keller resign by May 1, and County Engineer Harry Curtis under fire from the state highway commission, the shakeup at the court house yesterday continued to boil merrily.

Keller has prepared his resignation, it is asserted by persons "on the inside," and it is expected he will tender it to Auditor Alber soon.

Curtis was notified by the state highway commission to meet with that body yesterday at Ames for a conference. The fact that Curtis was under fire did not become known until yesterday.

The engineer, it is said, is charged with general incompetency, although the exact nature of the charges are unknown. Curtis spent the day at Ames with the commission, and persons at the court house are predicting his resignation by May 1.

MASON CITY MURDER IS PUZZLING TO OFFICIALS

Mason City, Ia., April 30.—Mrs. Anna Kaslosky is in serious trouble. What the city and county officers would now like to know is whether Nicholas Jaskvich is telling the actual truth or an infamous lie in order to get even with Mr. Kaslosky for "peaching" on him and giving the first clue which led to the identity of Jaskvich as the murderer of Alexander Kaslosky.

The fact that Mrs. Kaslosky acted as she did when officers first arrived at her home Sunday morning, 20 minutes after her husband was shot to death gives credence to the story Jaskvich is now telling. The latter insists that he has been intimate with Mrs. Kaslosky. This she denies and other boarders in the house say that they have never seen anything wrong with her. And then he states that there was an agreement between he and Mrs. Kaslosky that he was to kill her husband she was to protect him in it, then the two were to get married.

Mrs. Kaslosky denies ever asking Jaskvich to kill her husband, and denies his story in toto. The trouble is that Mrs. Kaslosky did try to keep the officers from the real facts. When first seen she said she did not know one thing about the murder of her husband. She was in bed with him and within five feet of the revolver when the trigger was pulled that sent the bullet through the brain of her husband. She said she saw the smoke from the revolver. Finally she said that she saw the back of a man as he was going out the bedroom door just a moment after the shot was fired. Now she says that she saw Jaskvich. When the two faced each other yesterday and Mrs. Kaslosky told in his presence what she knew it aroused fearful ire in Jaskvich. In the Russian language he hurled fearful epithets at her until quelled by the officers.

IOWA LIVERYMAN HAS WAIST LINE OF 83 INCHES

Ames, Ia., April 30.—Ames claims to own the man who possesses the largest waist line of any man alive. He is George W. Nichols, proprietor of a livery stable, who weighs exactly 495 pounds, wears trousers that are seven feet around at the top and wears a shirt that is seven feet around. Nichols is not a circus freak although he has refused offers to book himself as an attraction.

A Parsons, Kan., shirt factory got his order for a shirt the other day. The shirt is made of cheviot and will cost Nichols $11. Its dimensions follow: Collar, 23 inches; neckband 23 inches; yoke, 26 inches; chest, 66 inches; waist 83 inches; length 44 inches; arm, 28 inches.

Nichols is a healthy man, but he does not navigate very fast. His traveling around town is done for the most part in a buckboard to which is attached a spirited horse. When he gets into the vehicle there is not enough room left in the seat for a society bull pup.

IOWAN GETS OFFER AS AVIATOR FOR VILLA FORCES

Charles City, Ia., April 30.—Gen. Pancho Villa has been trying to obtain the services of an employe of a big Iowa tractor concern. During the last few weeks many telegrams have flashed from Villa's headquarters to Charles City, Ia., and towards the last these messages grew dramatic in tone. They were sent to Floyd Barlow, who, besides being an expert machinist is a bird man of some note. Mr. Barlow is not unacquainted with Mexico. He has traveled over a large share of the country and has made many flights in different parts of it. He is the son of C. A. Barlow of Clear Lake, Ia.

Barlow is very little impressed by Villa's offer of $2,000 a month, under the risks involved and probably will continue on the job at Charles City.

SEEKING DEATH PENALTY IN IOWA MURDER CASE

Des Moines, Ia., April 30.—Assistant Attorney General John Fletcher has filed the state's argument in the Mathias O'Donnell case, which has been appealed to the supreme court. O'Donnell has been convicted of the murder of his wife on January 10, 1914, and sentenced to be hanged September 3 of this year. He is the first man to receive the death sentence since John Junkin six years ago.

Fletcher said that no serious errors were made by the lower court in the admission of testimony and in instructions to the jury. He thinks there is no doubt but that the conviction will stand and that O'Donnell will be hanged, unless clemency is granted.

An attempt was made while the legislature was in session to abolish capital punishment. The bill, which was by Senator Guy Gillette of Cherokee, however was killed in the senate on a report for indefinite postponement.

As the law now is, a jury must say whether a man convicted of murder in the first degree shall be hanged or sent to prison for life.

FORT DODGE.—The chimes for the new Methodist Episcopal church, donated by Mrs. Jonathan P. Dolliver in memory of the late Senator Dolliver, arrived Tuesday and are being installed. The bells, 11 in number, are engraved with inscriptions selected from the Book of Revelations, favorites of the departed senator. The bells cost $6,000.

MISSOURI VALLEY.—Allman Jones, a well known young farmer residing near Loveland, drove in front of a fast freight train on the Northwestern railroad. His horse was killed, the buggy was demolished, and young Jones was dangerously injured, probably fatally.

WATERLOO MAY ADOPT CITY MANAGER PLAN, NOW FIXED AS LEGAL

Councilmen and Mayor Retain Some Authority and Serve Without Pay.

Waterloo, Ia., April 29.—This may be the first Iowa city to take advantage of the city manager plan, as pushed through the recent assembly by Representative McFarlane, of this county. Two city manager plans were provided by the last general assembly, but the McFarlane plan is recognized as being the more important. The plan provides a new way of electing the mayor. On the first Monday after their election the councilmen, elected according to the plan, organize the city government under it and choose one of their number to act as mayor. He may command the police and govern the city by proclamation in time of extraordinary danger, but at other times he has little more authority than any other member of the council. The councilmen serve without pay. The council meets regularly once a month, and more often if necessary. It has the same executive, legislative and judicial powers, practically as the council of a city organized under the general law.

The city manager is elected and his compensation fixed by the council and he holds his office at its pleasure. His duties are:

To see that the laws and ordinances are enforced.

To attend the council meetings.

To recommend measures for the welfare of the city or town to the council.

To exercise supervision of all appointive offices under his direction, performance of contracts and purchases of supplies.

He has power to employ and discharge as occasion requires, summarily and without cause any officer, appointee, or employe whom he has power to appoint. He supervises all public improvements and all public buildings and institutions, including the streets, parks and other property.

He may examine into the affairs of any department or conduct of any officer.

He shall keep the council fully advised of the financial and other conditions of the city or town.

He shall appoint all persons to fill places for which no other mode of appointment is provided.

The manager is required to submit annually a budget based upon expenditures of the last year, making estimates of the needs for the next year. It must be published so objections can be offered before it is adopted by the council. The manager must also give the council each month a detailed report which must also be published.

The act forbids any employment of any councilman by the city manager, and forbids the manager to engage in city politics in any way other than to cast his own vote.

GREAT PERSONAL BOOSTER FACES FEDERAL CHARGE

Ames, Ia., April 29.—The courts of Iowa will not be given first disposition of Harris Dunham," the man who worked in Ames for about a year as a house painter and set himself up to be the fallen idol of the big leagues who pitched the wonderful 24-inning game for the Boston Red Sox in the world's series back in 1906. He left Ames in the night time, after bilking merchants of $400 worth of merchandise on worthless checks. After he was arrested in Utica, N. Y., Dunham was taken to Cincinnati, Ohio, by federal authorities, who will have him tried for defrauding the federal government for alleged impersonation of a United States inspector of schools. Since leaving here he made speeches on "Education" before teachers' conventions.

NORTHWESTERN ENGINEER HAS FORTUNE—IN FRANCE

Council Bluffs, Ia., April 29.—J. W. Frasch, of Council Bluffs, an engineer in the employ of the Northwestern railroad, is about to inherit portions of two large fortunes, according to notification he has received. One inheritance is a share in the estate of an uncle, Herman Frasch, sulphur magnate, who died in Paris last year, leaving a fortune of $25,000. The other is a portion of $150,000 left by his aunt, who died recently in Philadelphia.

Herman Frasch came to America from Germany in 1868. He first was a chemist. Later he engaged in the sulphur business, piling up a large fortune.

Despite the information that he is heir to parts of both fortunes, Frasch has not given up his railroad employment. Some of his acquaintances are skeptical of his prospects.

NEW TYPE OF ENGINES REDUCES TRAIN CREWS

Fort Dodge, Ia., April 29.—Installation on the Illinois Central, between Fort Dodge and Waterloo, of Mikado type locomotives, capable of pulling twice the tonnage hauled heretofore, has caused men who have been running engines or in charge of trains for the past six or eight years to drop back a notch in railroad employment. Eleven crews that formerly ran on the Waterloo district have been cut to five. The transfer of the 900-class engines to the Omaha district also has cut down the number of crews on the west end. Trains formerly were made up of about 1,400 tons, but the new engines will haul 2,800 tons.

GIRLS CAUGHT ON BRIDGE HAVE THRILLING ESCAPE

Sheldon, Ia., April 29.—Two Sheldon young women were caught on the Omaha railroad bridge north of the city by a passenger train going south and only by considerable presence of mind saved their lives. The bridge is a long one and they did not notice the train's approach. There was no time to get across, so one of them lay prone on the ties, just outside the rails and the train passed within a few inches of her. The other girl crawled over the edge of the bridge and hung to a tie, suspended by her hands. The engineer saw them, but not in time to stop his train until it had crossed the bridge. He then backed up and the young women were assisted from their positions, none the worse for the experience, except a few scratches and corn dresses. They were too badly frightened to know what had caused these scars.

INCENDIARISM PROBABLE IN FIRE AT DUBUQUE

Dubuque, Ia., April 27.—Early morning fire in the lumber yards and sheds of Carr, Ryder & Adams, sash and door factory, practically swept five blocks clear of material, with a loss of $150,000, also damaged the A. Y. McDonald pump manufacturing plant, entailing $10,000 loss, and slightly damaged the Key City Gas company's plant. The loss is nearly covered by insurance. Firemen report that flames appeared in several places in the yards at once and incendiarism is suspected by the authorities.

Flanders Still Critical Arena

London May 3 The developments on the northern ...fronts both east and west of the ...ding of Dunkirk in France and the new German offensive movement aimed at the Baltic provinces take precedence in the war news of today

British aviators have discovered and attacked the German batteries which from a distance variously estimated by English observers at from 16 to even 28 miles), hurled great shells at the French port but it remains to be seen whether the bombs dropped did enough damage to put the guns out of action

Newspapers say this bombardment of Dunkirk means that the Germans still cling to their cherished idea of occupying the French coast nearest England and more than one editorial writer today points out that Flanders still remains the critical theater of operations

Special dispatches from Petrograd disagree as to the purpose of the German thrust at the extreme Russian right One theory connects it with probable movements of the German fleet in the Baltic looking to the invasion of the Baltic provinces Another idea is that Dvinsk is aimed at Libau and Riga two strong Russian naval bases and the attack of the most important ports on the Baltic Or the Germans may plan to strike at the railroad running from Petrograd to Warsaw by way of Dvinsk and Vilna Further south the Germans have forced on their reported attempts to get this of of wire entanglements and of land mines and deep pits with spikes at their bottom thus has been accomplished

"The admiral reports that the fleet is filled with intense admiration over the achievement of their military comrades

Casualties Are Heavy

"The casualties in the army necessarily have been heavy The casualties in the fleet were not numerous They appear to have been confined to torpedo boat destroyers and to boats crews engaged in landing operations in which merchant captains and officers and crews of transports also have taken part

"During the operations, Turkish warships from Nagara (in the straits) several times have attempted to intervene, but have always made off directly the Queen Elizabeth was at hand.

"At noon on the 27th however a transport of about 8,000 tons was reported off Maidos and before she could escape the Queen Elizabeth opened fire The third shot hit and destroyed her She sank rapidly but whether she contained troops or not could not be seen "On the 28th and 29th the allied forces rested and improved and consolidated their positions and continued the disembarkation of stores and artillery All counter attacks by the enemy, which were incessant on the 28th, but weaker on the 29th were repulsed.

"The fleet, as well as the supporting army, have begun to engage the batteries. The Triumph bombarded Maidos, which was in flames last night, the 29th."

ICE ON GROUND AT LOS ANGELES TODAY

This Is Coldest May Day In California Since 1881—Frost Does Damage

Los Angeles, Cal., May 1 May day dawned in many sections surrounding this city today with ice on the ground It was the coldest day in May recorded in 34 years, and only once before has the minimum temperatures been equaled. That was in May 1881

Temperatures ranged 41 here down to as low as 24 degrees at other places in southern California Heavy frosts were reported from many sections

PROTEST DECISION IN WAGE DISPUTE

Western Enginemen Dissatisfied With Award of Arbitrators—Will Renew Fight Next Year.

Chicago May 1 The award of the federal board of arbitration by no means ends the dispute between 98 Western railroads and their enginemen and hostlers, but merely postpones the issue for another year is the opinion of railroad men The award was handed down yesterday It advances to some extent the rates of pay to the 64,000 men involved

A dissenting opinion was filed on behalf of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen branding the arbitration as a farce and condemning the Newlands act under which it was arranged as being inadequate for the settlement of industrial disputes. The award becomes effective May 10 and is binding for one year only

Warren S Stone, grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and chairman of the board of arbitration, charged that Charles S Nagel, one of the arbitration board was violently partisan Nagel is co executor of the estate of the late Adolphus Busch and is said to be identified by the union officials as one who is directly interested in the success of the award as it would apply to railroads of which the Busch estate owns stocks and bonds

The railroads were represented on the board by E A Burgess of Louisville Ky assistant grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Timothy Shea of Peoria Ill vice president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers The railroad members were W L Park Chicago vice president of the Illinois Central and H E Byram Chicago vice president of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy As explained by Mr Burgess the essential concessions to the men were

1 Scientific location of rates of pay on the weight of locomotives on drive wheels

2 Overtime pay to passenger firemen and engineers ranging from 44 to 75 cents an hour respectively

3 Engineers of steam power may transfer to electric power when installed without loss of seniority rights after May 1 1915 The board was unable because of the newness of the electric railway service to fix rates of pay in detail, but named $4 36 a day as the minimum for motormen in freight service and $2 75 for helpers

4 Enginemen of milk service trains and other irregular service such as usher and helper receive the rate accorded on through freights an increase mounting to from 10 to 15 per cent

5 The men will be paid for delay while on their cabs at initial and final terminals, and for time in excess of 30 minutes spent in preparing their engines for service.

6 Switch enginemen will receive an advance in daily pay of 25 cents on small engines and 15 cents on large ones

7 Men held a day from home terminals shall after 22 hours idleness, receive a minimum day's pay for 10 hours based on last service out of each succeeding 24 hours until he gets a run

Slight Increase in Pay.

8 Through freight wage rates were advanced 5 to 20 cents, increasing with the weight of engines, and 25 cents on some of the extremely heavy engines

9 Way freight enginemen will receive 10 cents more than through freight men.

10 Surprise tests will be conducted in such a way as not to endanger life, limb or nerves

11 Firemen will be assisted where assistance is available in keeping coal forward and the coal shall be broken into proper sizes at chutes

12. Where firemen on big engines deem an assistant necessary the matter may, if necessary, be adjusted through arbitration

13 Firemen will not be required to clean engines nor will engineers be required to fill grease cups, set up wedges or perform other minor duties about an engine where others are available to do the work

14 The weight on drive wheels of each engine shall be posted where the engineman can have convenient access to the information

Among the requests that were not granted were the automatic release, time and a half for overtime in freight and switching service and the five-hour day in passenger service The award on the surprise test was a matter of bitter contention

CANADA MAY FURNISH 150,000 TRAINED MEN

PRESIDENT WILSON IN SEVERE SHAKE-UP

Airbrakes on Engine Jam and Train Halts With Sudden Jar.

New York May 3 - President Wilson spent nearly three hours here this morning on his way to Williamstown, Mass to attend the christening of his grandson Francis Sayre. He was joined here by Miss Margaret Wilson his daughter who has been spending several days in New York others in the party were Dr Cary T Grayson, the president's naval aid and physician, and Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, his cousin.

While the president's train was passing through West Philadelphia the air brake on the engine jammed and the train came to a sudden stop. Several panes of glass were broken. Every one on the train was shaken, but no serious damage was done The president will arrive in Williamston at 4 o'clock this afternoon

DUNKIRK RIDDLED BY HUGE GERMAN SHELLS

15-Inch Projectiles Tear Craters In Earth 45 Feet Across—City Calm In Crisis.

Folkestone England May 1 Refugees arriving here from Dunkirk, France report that six shells from the German 17-inch guns fell in Dunkirk Friday evening at intervals of 10 minutes. Considerable damage was done to the town The women and children of Dunkirk are leaving in large numbers. This is the second bombardment of this port, the first having been reported yesterday as having occurred on Thursday

Paris May 3 -Dunkirk remained calm and there was no sign of a panic while it was being bombarded by shells from giant German guns, according to the editor of a newspaper of that city, who has arrived in Paris. He said the bombardment began at 11 30 a m Thursday and continued until about 2 p. m Twenty projectiles in all were hurled into the city They fell at intervals of about seven minutes All of them were 15-inch shells, which blasted craters sometimes 45 feet across and sent up great columns of dense black smoke.

Paris, May 1 -The French war office this afternoon gave out the following official statement on the war progress

"No change has been reported in the general situation on the front since the giving out of the official communication last night Ten more shells fell on Dunkirk on the evening of yesterday (Friday) and there were several victims.

GARROS, FAMOUS AIR NAVIGATOR, CAPTURED

Noted French Birdman Forced to Glide Into German Lines When Motor Fails.

Milan, (via Paris), May 3.—A motor which stalled while he was 2,000 feet in the air was responsible for the capture by the Germans of Roland Garros, the famous French aviator, according to an account of the incident given to the Kriege Zeitung, of the Fourth German army and reproduced in the Corriere Della Serra here.

Garros was flying over the Ingelmunster-Courtrai railroad when a train passed. He made a wonderful swoop from a height of 6,000 feet until he was 120 feet from the ground, describing a series of daring circles over the train and then dropped a bomb which blew up a section of track. When sentries opened fire on him at close range he dropped another bomb and rose to a height of 2,000 feet.

Suddenly the motor stopped and the aeroplane swayed dangerously, but Garros volplaned safely and made a successful landing. He sprang out, set fire to the machine and took refuge in a cottage. Pursuing soldiers found him after a long search, crouching in a ditch behind a thick hedge. Asked if he had a companion, Garros gave his word that he had not. He explained that his engine probably had been struck by a bullet.

PRAISE BELGIANS: SHOUT FOR PEACE

Women's Conference at Hague Almost Disrupted By Comments of Partisans of Belligerents.

The Hague (via London) May 1.—The International Congress of Women concluded its sessions here today after appointing a deputation to present to the heads of the neutral states the peace resolution adopted by the delegates yesterday.

The Hague, (via London), May 3.—"A secretary for peace should be added to all cabinets" was the novel idea suggested at a session of the international congress of women, today, by Signorina Rosa Genoli a delegate from Italy who, with Miss Jane Addams, of Chicago, chairman of the congress, seems to have won the hearts of all the delegates. "Provision is made by governments to look after every phase of life except the maintenance of peace between nations" added Signorina Genoli amid thunderous applause.

Miss Addams also was given an ovation for an eloquent speech, in which she declared that the present war had evolved a wonderful national consciousness in the warring nations, but that war was too big a price to pay for such a national awakening Politics, she said was the only field where international unity did not prevail

Miss Laura Hughey, of Toronto, Can., argued that the time had come when women should reoccupy the position of peace makers, which they held in the prehistoric ages.

Women In Row.

The wings of the dove of peace were ruffled late yesterday at the session of the international congress of women. At the instance of Dr Augspurg, of Munich, the entire Belgian delegation was invited to the platform Only two women of the five present came from their box at the side of the stage and made their way to the platform They were welcomed by the chairman, Miss Jane Addams, of Chicago, with both hands, but there was no handshaking with the German delegates.

In moving the final resolution Mrs. Rosika Schwimmer, president of the Hungarian Women's Suffrage association, requested that all the delegates present stand one minute in silent prayer for peace Mme. Hamer, of the Belgian delegation, thereupon asked permission to utter a few words. When this was granted she astounded the audience with the dramatic exclamation:

"I am Belgian before everything and I cannot think as you do. There can be no peace without justice. The war must continue until the Belgian wrongs have been righted. There must be no mediation except at the bar of justice."

Sympathize With Belgians.

On the motion of Miss Florence Holbrook, of Chicago, the word "justice" was inserted in the resolution, which reads

"The international congress of women, of different nations, creeds, classes and parties, is united in expressing sympathy with the suffering of all, whatever their nationality, who are fighting for their country or who are laboring under the burden of war Since the mass of the people of each of the countries now warring believe themselves to be fighting, not agressively, but in self defense and for their national existence, it urges the governments of the world to put an end to this bloodshed and to begin peace negotiations, and emphatically demands that the peace which follows shall be permanent and therefore based on justice and principles which include those adopted by this congress."

Some time before the congress had been considerably upset by Mrs. Amy Lillingston, of London, who declared:

"I was a suffragist and I remain a suffragist. I suffered in jail for it, I am just a plain English working woman, but I represent millions of women who favor the present just war as much as do the men. One hundred and eighty women are said to be waiting at Tilbury to come to this congress to talk peace. All of these English women are willing to accompany their sons and husbands to fight. We are tired of the century old silly platitudes, such as are uttered here."

Mrs. Lillingston insisted on continuing her speech until she was ruled out of order

Kitchener's Comment.

A good story is going the rounds about what Lord Kitchener said the other day after he had inspected some defense works on the east coast. It is short and sweet.

The war minister motored from point to point, walked over the ground but never said a word all afternoon until the moment he was leaving for London. Then he opened his grim mouth.

"Those trenches of yours," he said, "wouldn't keep out the Salvation Army"

Had to Be Broken In.

Shortly after the Civil war a lady in New York asked her colored cook to get her husband to come over and help move some furniture. She noticed that the negro man had several bad scars on his head.

"Was your husband in the war, Dinah?" she asked.

"No, ma'am."

"How did he get all those scars on his head?" she asked.

"Oh, dat's whar we's had words together."

"How could you, Dinah? He seems like a nice man," said the mistress.

"Oh, he's good 'nough now, but it took a lot of work wid de tater masher to persuade him to be good."

A Failure.

"Ma, is marriage a failure?"

"I guess so, my dear. I married your father to reform him."

Backache Is a Warning

Thousands suffer kidney ills unawares—not knowing that the backache, headaches and dull, nervous, dizzy, all tired condition are often due to kidney weakness alone. Anybody who suffers constantly from backache should suspect the kidneys. Some irregularity of the secretions may give just the needed proof. Doan's Kidney Pills have been curing backache and sick kidneys for over fifty years.

An Iowa Case

Mrs. L. S. Carty, 147 Washington Ave., Council Bluffs, Ia., says: "For years I had attacks of backache, with sharp pains through my loins. Colds always made me worse. I had headaches and dizzy spells and the kidney secretions were in bad shape. Doan's Kidney Pills seemed to be just what I needed and two boxes restored me to good health."

Insufficiency in Men.

It has been said that the ideal man is a perfect "transformer" He acts like a reversible battery, that is to say, that after having acted for discharge like an ordinary battery he is regenerated by a nervous current which constitutes the recharging An increase of the muscular and vasomotor tonicity may be produced in one part by diminution in another part of the body, which probably has something to do with apathy or partial laziness. The tendency to this laziness has its roots in the physiological condition. It marks some insufficiency, in various degrees. A person who is "born lazy" has this insufficiency to a maximum degree.

One of Marshall Wilder's Stories.

When I was in Japan and China I went through the prisons and the courts Funny about the Chinese Every ten miles you strike a new dialect. When they arrest a Chinaman it takes three or four interpreters to find out what his offense is I saw one fellow dragged in by the queue the judge asked what the charge was. The first interpreter told the second, the second told the third the third told the fourth and the fourth told the judge that the man had stolen a yellow dog Well, said the judge, I am glad it was not a black-and-tan."

Here's a Triple-Lever Disc Harrow That Beats Them All!

The new Rock Island Triple-Lever Disc Harrow, Bonanza Jr., has, through its many exclusive features, jumped into a class of its own—'way ahead of every other disc harrow made. For years it has led all others in service, durability, ease of operation and speed. Now, with its new third pressure lever, its new steel stub pole and its new double leaf spring steel seat, it is beyond comparison. The first time you see this wonderful triple-lever disc harrow you'll know why it is outselling all other disc harrows at any price.

Rock Island Bonanza Jr. Triple-Lever Disc Harrow

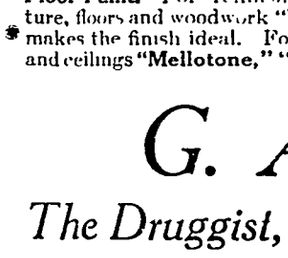
Instead of being angled from the center, the gangs are angled from the ends. The side thrust is delivered directly to the bumpers. No matter at what angle the gangs are set, these bumpers always bump, and the angle or point of contact doesn't change, so the bumpers never cut or wear out.



See the Bumpers They Always Bump

Saves expense, repairs and draft. The inner ends of the gangs are always [illegible]

They roll against each other at one rounded point. End thrust is entirely neutralized by these bumpers.

The new steel stub pole cannot split or break and adds strength to the harrow, making it even more durable than it was before. Neat in appearance—light in weight.

The old seat spring has been replaced by one of spring steel, double leaf type, giving greater comfort to the operator.

The Third Pressure Lever

on the Bonanza Jr. is simple and strong. It is directly in front of the operator and the pressure is applied close up to the gangs, giving more leverage. Bonanza Jr. discs cut just as deep at the outer ends as they do in the center. This means cutting at an even depth always.

New Features Plus the Old Ones

Remember all the new features of the Bonanza Jr. have been added without sacrificing any of the old ones. You can't make any mistake in buying the Rock Island Bonanza Jr. Disc Harrow—it's a sure winner.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

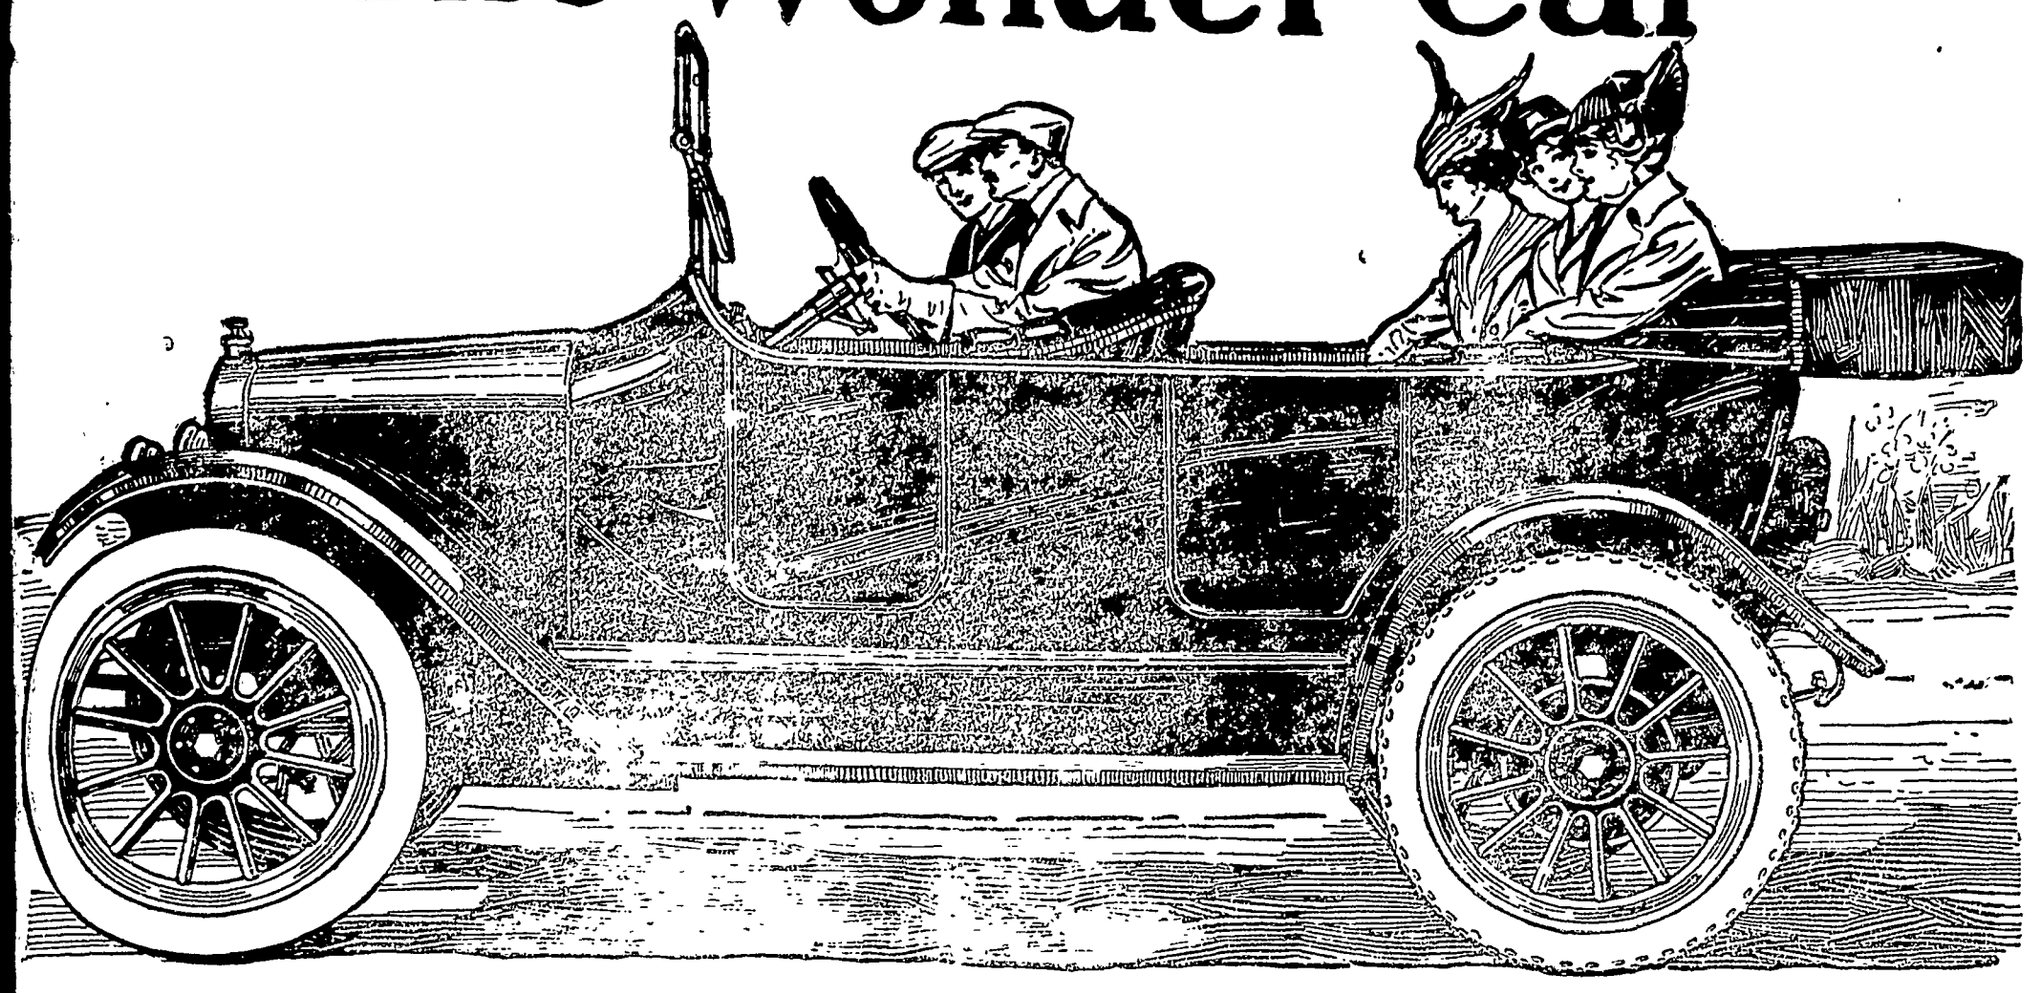
"The Wonder Car"



You will have only yourself to blame if you are "talked into" buying an "unsuitable" or a "theoretical" Car.

The two commonest mistakes made in buying an automobile are—First, Buying a car not suited to your needs.—Second, Buying a car that has not passed the theory stage.

The first mistake—buying an "unsuitable" car—is perhaps made even more often than the second. But for your own sake study your needs sensibly, just as you study your household needs, and buy a car you can afford to enjoy—a car you will have pride in, and yet one that will not be a "ghost of reproach" to your good sense.

The second mistake—buying a "theoretical" car—is perhaps the sadder mistake of the two—because when you have made this mistake, you have on your hands some engineer's or designer's untried theory, instead of a tried, known, successful car. And you have paid a price that, put in the right car, would never have been a reproach—but would have bought an automobile of real pride and joy.

It is because we see these two mistakes being constantly made—because we see sensible people being constantly talked into these "automobile fiascos" that we boast so much about the record of the car we sell—The Maxwell.

38,000 happy satisfied Maxwell owners are driving 38,000 handsome streamline Maxwell Cars to-day—at an up-keep cost that any man of any standing can afford, and at an original cost that is simply a practical investment.

200 Maxwell Cars Every Day

Twelve hundred a week, five thousand a month. That is the actual output of "The Wonder Car" right now and constantly increasing.

Not bare promises that cannot be kept, but actual deliveries to Maxwell Dealers.

Stop! Think a moment. There must be something back of a production so great. There must be the hearty approval and confidence of the public in the car they buy and the car must merit it all.

26 Maxwell cars every hour of the business day. Yes, that is just what the public are buying, and when you order a Maxwell, you get one the day you want it.

Back of each Maxwell stands one of the greatest and most efficient organizations in the industry, and one strong enough financially to insure you against the purchase of an "orphan car" and to give you actual deliveries of a wonderful car on the day you want it.

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. More than 2,000 Maxwell dealers in every part of this country—are always ready to give expert advice, to make adjustments, and to supply new parts at reasonable prices. This splendid Maxwell dealer service organization is perfected and completed by the chain of Maxwell owned and Maxwell operated Service Branches. Sixteen great Maxwell Service Stations are so located throughout the country that a Maxwell dealer can supply any part for an owner within a few hours if not in his stock. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Order a Maxwell from us now, and when you want it delivered, we will give you your car—not an excuse on delivery day

Mr. Presbrey took the liberty of interrupting him. This was an instance when Horace was not only likely to excuse an interruption but might even welcome it. So Mr Presbrey rose to the occasion. He put in a tempering protest

'My dear sir, put that thought from you, once and for all Chetwynd was certainly as eligible as anyone. All is fair in—er—love and war. Ha, ha! Quite so, quite so! Ha, ha! You heard what Mr. Borden, of the committee, said. "Amazingly clever and brilliant idea for a college boy, and well thought out' Those were his very words. I made it a point to remember them so that I might repeat them to Mrs Blagden"

Horace smiled benignly, and then permitted a cloud to cross his face He squeezed Eric's shoulder in consoling grip and said It's hard on you, Eric If it hadn't been for Chetwynd, I am sure you would have carried off the honor I can't help thinking that I should have kept your cousin out of the contest

"It wouldn't have been right sir" said Eric simply He had swallowed hard before opening his mouth

I am sorry Eric went on his uncle kindly

Eric could hardly believe his senses It was the first time he had heard that expression come from his uncle's lips. Somehow it had never entered his head that Chetwynd's father could be sorry for anybody

There were tears in Mary's eyes as they followed Mr Blagden and his guests into the house She pressed Eric's arm

I just know his design wasn't as good as yours Eric she whispered.

Oh I don't mind a bit girlie' he said bravely despite the sore disappointment in his heart It's all in a lifetime" A moment later he muttered more to himself than to her "I wonder when he worked at the design He read novels all the time, so far as I could tell'

I suppose it will be on exhibition at the public library' said Mary, in grudging tones

"I'll see it tomorrow"

Mrs Blagden came down the stairway, dry eyed and eager Even as she shook hands with the Presbreys, she flashed a questioning glance at her husband

Did Chetwynd get it'" she asked

Certainly replied Horace

She beamed You must telegraph the news to him Horace"

He playfully tapped her on the cheek with his slim cool fingers "I already have done so, my dear'

CHAPTER VII.

THE BENDING OF HORACE BLAGDEN

Late the next afternoon Horace received a telegram that puzzled him not a little It was from Chetwynd Who won the prize? Wire me at the Holland as usual'

What puzzled Horace was this what had become of the telegram addressed to his son at the Holland half an hour after the awarding of the prize the day before? But what would have puzzled anyone else who knew Mr Blagden at all was his action in sending a second telegram without inquiring at the telegraph office why the first had not been delivered The thin line between the banker's eyes seemed to have deepened perceptibly after the receipt of his son's query Somehow he had the ugly notion that the first telegram was lying unclaimed at the hotel in New York

Mr Blagden usually left the bank at 4 in the afternoon It was his practice not to say habit, to walk up the street to his club the only one in town that a gentleman could enter without glancing over his shoulder in all directions and there to read the Boston papers and engage in a subsequent game of cribbage with Colonel Harkweather who always left the papers before doing anything else On this particular afternoon however the colonel not only read the Boston papers but scanned the New York dailies and then took up the magazines Finally he went home in disgust It was the first time in months that Blagden had failed to appear He was half way home before it occurred to him that the banker might be ill So he entered a drug store and telephoned to the house on the corner He was not at all relieved to learn from Mrs Blagden herself that Horace had never been in better health. If anything the colonel was more furious than before considering himself a much abused man He kept saying over and over again to himself that he was sorry Blagden was not ill there was now no excuse at all for him that he could see

But Horace sat at his desk much later than usual on this day a troubled frown on his brow He was not thinking of Chetwynd as you might suppose—at least he was not devoting all of his thoughts to the boy It seems there was a very grave cause for suspecting a former employe of dishonest practices during the last days of his employment in the bank Within the past week auditors, in going over the books anticipatory to the appearance of the bank examiner had unearthed discrepancies in the balances There was a clearly defined shortage of nearly $5,000 carried over for several months before coming to light Careful investigation revealed the fact that the shortage was created about the time the assistant teller left the bank in order to make room for the president's son The young man himself, one John Payson after losing his position secured work in the offices of a building and loan society, upon the unqualified recommendation of Horace Blagden He remained in the bank for a week after Chetwynd was installed, instructing him in the duties of office As near as could be reckoned, the embezzlement occurred immediately before or during his week of instruction

Nothing of the kind had happened before in the history of Blagden & Co Not so much as a penny had been feloniously taken from its coffers, not in all the 60 years of the bank's existence No wonder, then that Horace was disturbed

To think that he had employed a man who could stoop to theft' And to think that subsequently he had recommended him to a position of trust It was most upsetting

With a promptness that suggested panic Mr Blagden hired a New York detective and put him on the case For a week or more, that worthy had been devoting his time and intelligence to a study of the past and present habits of the suspected young man, with the surprising result that, so far, he was unable to report to Mr Blagden that they were anything but good. This, of course convinced Horace that the fellow was an uncommonly clever rascal.

The detective was Adam Carr

On this particular day, Mr. Blagden sat in his private office long after the hour for closing, aimlessly fingering the telegram he had received from his son, but intently considering the day's report from Adam Carr It was beginning to enter his mind that Carr was not competent to handle a case so baffling as this appeared to be. He was wondering if it would not be a wise move to dismiss him and employ a Boston man who, it appears, had caught a very clever defaulter after chasing him for three years. But as Horace was a prompt man in everything, he was bound to admit that he was averse to hiring a man who was so slow as all that. He had talked it over with the cashier and three of the directors, and they had advised hiring the Boston man That was another reason why he hesitated

Carr's report for the day brought nothing new to his impatient mind. The ex teller was behaving in a most circumspect manner There was no evidence that he gambled, speculated, or kept a woman in New York Payson had not visited New York in two years so far as Adam Carr could learn and Horace was forced to admit that if he had a paramour at all, she must be in New York She couldn't be in Corinth

The telephone on his desk rang He put the receiver to his ear with mechanical precision and said "Yes." The voice that came out of the little black tube was so loud and vibrant that his eyebrows twitched with pain he held the receiver a little farther away It always annoyed him to have anyone shout in his ear A look of surprise followed immediately Eric Midthorne was speaking

"Yes, I am still here," replied Mr Blagden "What is it?" He listened for a moment to the strident, excited voice and then cut in with the curt remark 'It isn't necessary to shout. I can hear you Yes, I will wait here if it is important But don't be long about it Come up if you must see me."

Three minutes later Eric burst into the room without so much as a tap on the mahogany door

"Dear me, Eric, is this the way to enter a room?" demanded Horace, in that mild tone of reproof that never failed to hurt more than a sharp reprimand

Eric's face was as white as chalk He came directly to the desk, but many seconds elapsed before he could force words through his twisted lips. Horace stared at the boy's convulsed face in actual surprise

'Uncle Horace," began Eric hoarsely, "it was my drawing that took the prize Do you know that? It was my drawing I have just seen it.'

Mr Blagden's brow darkened his grey eyes narrowed and seemed to turn black as coal

'What are you saying?" he demanded

Eric struck the desk a violent blow with his clenched fist. His eyes shot fire

"It was my drawing' Chetwynd stole it'"

Horace opened his eyes very wide A look that no one had ever seen in them before grew as he stared, with parted lips at him who uttered those awful words He closed his lips suddenly to hold back the gush of ice water that seemed to fill his mouth. He swallowed and the chill spread throughout his body He did not realize it at the moment, but afterwards he was to recall that he was experiencing the first touch of a blighting fear from which he was never afterwards to be free the fear of Chetwynd

In an instant he was himself again, a bit greyer than before perhaps, but quite as austere

'What do you mean sir, by striking my table in that manner? Try to govern yourself sir, or leave the room." He chose to resent the boy's actions, rather than his words Afterwards, in analysing his emotions, he came to acknowledge a shameful weakness in shrinking from the real attack

I swear, Uncle Horace so help me God that the drawing sent in by Chetwynd is the one I made I have never seen the one that bears my name I never drew it Oh, it was a dirty trick' It was fiendish' Uncle, you've just got to straighten it out He took my drawing I don't know how or when but it is mine that has his name on it over at the library"

Tears of rage and despair filled his eyes

Mr Blagden had himself well in hand by this time

"You are making a very serious charge against your cousin, Eric," he said levelly "I cannot permit you to go on in this way You—"

"But it is true!" cried Eric wildly "I swear it's true!"

"Do not interrupt me Why should I believe what you say? How could Chetwynd have come into possession of your drawing? You kept it under lock and key, you presented it to the committee with your own hands, did you not? You would hardly go so far as to accuse the honorable judges of substituting one drawing for the other, of placing my son's name on your work or allowing him to do so, if it could have gone that far"

'But it is my drawing and it has his name on it. It wasn't there when I submitted the design to Mr Porter, the librarian."

Do you consider this a sportsmanlike manner in which to take defeat?" demanded Horace sneeringly

"I don't consider it a defeat, Uncle Horace," said Eric deliberately "My drawing won the prize."

Mr Blagden's stern gaze wavered ever so slightly.

"If you placed your drawing in Mr Porter's hands, then what, may I ask, inspires you to make this deliberate charge against my son? It isn't likely he could have wished his name to appear upon it, to have it appear there as if by magic This is not the age of Aladdin."

"I can't understand it any more than you, sir, but it is true, just the same," cried Eric doggedly "Mr Porter says that no one touched the drawings."

"Then, will you be good enough to tell me how Chetwynd could have done this thing you accuse him of doing?" demanded Mr Blagden sternly.

"I think it was done before I submitted the drawing," said Eric.

"Oh," was his uncle's expressive comment.

"I wrapped it up carefully and put it in my drawer the day before I presented it. It was not unwrapped after that. Chetwynd was in my room that evening alone. Mary saw him there and he said he was looking for a scarf pin I had taken from his room without permission. He—he told her I had no business going into his room, that he'd missed several things; and—and—well, he as much as said I'd taken things that didn't belong to me"

Horace smiled with grim derisiveness "It is possible he had as much right to accuse you as you have to accuse him It seems to me his case is as good as yours.'

"I am not a thief!"

"He might say the same Did he find the scarf pin?"

Eric flushed. "He told her he found it. But he lied."

"Eric!"

"He lied!"

Mr. Blagden's face grew deathly white and then turned purple. He sprang to his feet and advanced upon the boy, a furious glare in his eyes.

"You scoundrel! You vilifier! You unhung rascal! How dare you come to me with such a story as this?" He choked, he appeared to be strangling. Eric shrank back aghast. No one had ever heard a blasphemous word on the lips of Horace Blagden, but now Eric was to listen to a torrent of wild profanity that would have shocked even the walls of a ship's forecastle. He was seized with the fear that his uncle had gone mad, utterly mad.

"Uncle!" he cried, putting up his hands as if to shield himself from a blow

"I could kill you where you stand curse you" hissed the man A great light broke in upon him "Ah' Now I understand' Now I can see how a man justifies himself for taking another's life. By heavens, I know how sweet it would be to kill." In his frenzy, he looked about for a deadly weapon.

Then, as suddenly, his whole manner changed He fell back against the table, his jaw dropping, an expression of great horror crossing his face.

"Good God, help me," he groaned, shaking as with the ague. "What is it I have said? What is it that is in my heart? Murder? Oh, my God'

He would have fallen had not the boy leaped forward to catch him by the arm. Mr Blagden shook him off Eric fell away, moving toward the door, ready to flee from this amazing figure, this unknown being.

His uncle turned his sodden eyes upon him, and motioned with a trembling hand for him to stay

Stop' Don't run away Wait, Eric I—I ask you to wait here until—until I—" Whatever it was that he meant to say the words were not uttered Somehow Eric understood. He stood in the middle of the floor and watched his uncle stagger to the couch over near the wall, upon which he dropped as if every vestige of strength had deserted him.

The minutes passed slowly The picture remained the same The wondering half stupefied boy in the middle of the room, the motionless figure on the couch, from whose lips ever and anon came two hoarsely whispered words "My God!"

The shadows of dusk crept into the room through the high windows, the waning light of the summer day looked in upon the strange tableau and vague sounds from the street came, but without the power to disturb Somewhere off in the deserted banking room, a watchman was shuffling and whistling Eric waited for him to open the door and break the spell that had fallen over the president's office. Nothing else, it seemed, could shake the fetters from his feet, or drive the warm blood back into his empty veins Would the heavy breathing figure on the couch never change its limp position' Would the hand never be drawn away from the eyes it covered?

At last, when the room had grown quite dark Horace Blagden moved The boy's tense figure relaxed so suddenly that his legs almost gave way

'Answer the telephone, please," said Mr Blagden, his voice clam once more but weak

The telephone had been buzzing for a minute or longer Eric grabbed up the receiver

'It is Aunt Rena,' he said lazily "She wants to know if you are ill why you are so late coming home uncle"

"Tell her I am all right and will be there at once"

He arose from the couch taller more gaunt than ever it seemed to Eric as he saw him through the gathering darkness.

"Eric," he said from his position near the couch, "we will go home at once Will you get my hat and cane from the closet'"

The boy hesitated. "I can't go home with you now, Uncle Horace. Not after what I've said to you"

There was another long period of silence The man's eyes were half closed

From the Kansas City Star

It is understood that the political speeches of Senator Weeks of Massachusetts, until recently of Hornblower & Weeks, bankers and brokers of Boston, formerly president of the Newtonville Trust company and vice president of the First National bank of Boston, have awakened the greatest enthusiasm in the highest financial circles.

Mr Weeks has assured big business that it was being abused frightfully abused The officers of the United States Steel corporation, the Standard Oil company the Pennsylvania railroad and other similar institutions had suspected as much all along, and when they heard about it from Senator Weeks they knew it must be so

As the senator so cogently says, whither are we drifting? Here is the Interstate Commerce commission sitting on the lid for the railroads and refusing to permit them to fix what rates they please. Here is congress shaving the tariff and telling the big woolen mills monopoly that it must submit to a little foreign competition. Here is the Missouri public utilities commission waiting to see what the Metropolitan is going to try to put over on Kansas City

Oh, my countrymen, says Senator Weeks to the Commercial club and similar organizations, what times are these Only a few short years ago under the fostering guidance of that great statesman, Mark Hanna, none of these outrages was possible. In those shining days business got whatever it wanted. No outsiders were permitted to muss things up. Legislation was handled by real experts.

Andrew Carnegie, he points out, wrote the steel schedule of the tariff bill. So he could be sure of getting it right No president had the temerity to ask the railroads to subject themselves to the supervision of an Interstate Commerce commission. The railroads applied the principle of what the traffic would bear, and everybody—except the shippers and the public—was happy Our great utilities were permitted to write their own franchises and millions were thereby transferred from the pockets of the nickel payers, who never would have used the money wisely, to the bank accounts of eminent financiers who knew just what to do with it.

"And now," he concludes, "need I tell you"—business is harassed at every turn and a government official is on hand to see that the public doesn't get the worst of it. What we need is high tariff and a return to the golden days of that sterling patriot, Senator Hanna."

This speech, wherever it has been delivered to chambers of commerce, bankers' conventions, associations of woolen manufacturers, conferences of railroad presidents and assemblies of street railway financiers, has been held to be a masterpiece of political effort and a wonderful vote getter. Senator Weeks' friends feel sure that if it could only get to what they regard as the "masses," or the "lower classes"—meaning anybody who doesn't pay a supertax on his income—it would set the country on fire for him as president.

Mebbe so. Mebbe so.

Anyway he would be sure of the solid captain-of-industry vote.

ALL THAT WAS LEFT OF NEUVE CHAPELLE AFTER BOMBARDMENT

These pictures of wreck and ruin at Neuve Chapelle show the result of the most violent bombardment in history, for the concentrated fire of 350 British guns on March 10, when hell was let loose for thirty-five minutes was but the final act in a bombardment which raged during October and continued spasmodically during the intervening months.

Heart of a Battleship Is Its Armored Control Room

When a warship sails into action its heart pulses and throbs as eager for the fray as the hearts of any of its crew Yes, a warship has a heart. The heart of a warship is the control room deep down under the deck, situated aft usually abaft the second funnel A writer in the San Francisco Chronicle describes it

Even on big fighting ships the heart is small. Generally it is only 10 feet by 6 and is almost noise proof and eerily quiet It is really a steel vault, entered by a door not unlike the door of a burglar proof safe

From floor to ceiling the walls are lined with dials wires, gauges, electric bells speaking tubes, switches and a great amount of other apparatus which keeps the commander in constant touch with every corner of the ship. It is the most wonderful and the most fearful room on earth or sea.

It is a fortress within a fortress, a steel cell within the steel walls of the fighting engine

To be in the control room during active service is to feel like being in a vault with the door locked on the outside This little compartment, which visitors seldom see will keep alive as long as there is a living soul on board able to hear and answer a call.

A Submarine Is Sighted

It is through the control room that the commander issues his instructions, observes and notes how the battle is going calls the gun crews from place to place directs the engineers, steers the whole fabric and supervises everything If a submarine is seen in any direction, it is through the control room that it is reported

A little bell rings, a voice far away speaks "Submarine on the port bow sir In an instant the answer thrills the gun crews 'Ware submarine on the port bow Enemy's craft Ready' The guns have been ready for some time, and when the chief gunner has laid the gun to his satisfaction bang goes a message the enemy will not forget if it hits him.

If a gun has to cease fire, the order comes through the control room If the enemy lands a shell on deck or anywhere in the warship the doctors are notified that they are wanted at that spot almost as soon as the men have fallen. If the gun crew are dead, it is from the heart of the ship that the order is given for fresh men to fill their places.

In the Conning Tower.

Though the captain himself is in the conning tower above, he knows through the officer in the control room just what has happened to his ship and the extent of the damage If the captain is killed in the conning tower or on the bridge the chief officer in the control room goes up at once to take his place

There are generally about six men in this little throbbing heart of the battleship, including operators and junior officers.

The chief officer gives directions to the torpedo operators, the gunners, the searchlight manipulators and the officers in charge of the ship's equipment. But, besides all this, there are a thousand and one things to attend to during an engagement

Every order has to be given at an instant's notice given distinctly, firmly, without the slightest hesitation or flurry. It is only in the control room that one learns what the phrase "devotion to duty" really means.

Everything goes with automatic precision in the heart of a warship, and as it is the most vital spot on board, special care is taken to preserve it from harm.

Amidst the Shells.

Think of the steady nerves required of those men, cooped up in this small room when the shells are flying around and the hull is being battered by the enemy's guns' A wrong signal might mean disaster, but the organization is so near perfection that mistakes are practically unknown.

There is no rest for the officers in the control room during a fight. They must stay at the ship's heart telegraphing and telephoning to every part of the vessel, without taking notice of the wreckage that is being heaped up on every hand. They know that when the men in turret No. 1 or turret No. 2 cease to reply to their signals something serious has happened.

They know that even when the conning tower has been smashed by shot and shell and the bridge has been swept away they must stick to their switches so long as there is an officer alive to direct operations. Not until the ship is blown up or rammed are they allowed to leave that little town, and then they go down with her

Up above the control room is the conning tower, the brain of the warship, as the control room is the heart.

It is a steel block house If the ironclad is a flagship she has two floors, the top one being used by the admiral, and whenever the action begins the captain shuts himself up in his steel conning tower to direct the fighting.

If the control room is the hottest place on board the conning tower is, perhaps, the most dangerous. These are the two spots toward which most of the enemy's fire is directed, and the chances are against either place remaining intact if the battle is of even moderate duration.

An example of how gunners always try to destroy the head and heart of opposing warships is furnished by the terrific battle of Tsushima in the Russo-Japanese war.

After 15 Minutes.

On one of the Russian battle ships the admiral and the captain were both killed the conning tower within five minutes of the first shot being fired. Up came the second in command to take charge. Before he could get a proper view of the situation, a shell crashed through the conning tower again. This time not only the second in command was killed, but also all the other officers in the tower

The quartermaster saw what had happened and telegraphed the disaster to the control room Then, gathering together some junior officers, he ran to the tower through a hail of shot.

The only officer who could take charge was a young fellow, and he was not used to the business of war. He found the conning tower filled with mangled remains and he fainted on the spot. Somebody roared a message down the speaking tube for both engines to be reversed, for by this time the warship was drifting toward the enemy

But before the order could be obeyed another projectile tore a great gap in her side and the water rushed into her boiler room In a twinkling the ship was half filled. She drifted to the Japanese, full of dead and dying men, the colors trailing in the water. In less than 15 minutes it had been reduced from a spick and span ironclad to a waterlogged, helpless derelict.

A City Under a Manager.

Since January 1, Dayton, Ohio, has been under the care of a city manager The place has over 125,000 population. Some results of the new government plan, as gathered from a paper in the American Review of Reviews by Lent D Upsom of the bureau of municipal research

A purchasing department has already saved enough on supplies to pay all the year's expenses of this branch of administration

Supplies have been standardized and put under specifications for quality and service.

Milk and health regulations have been greatly strengthened.

Three baby clinics and pure milk stations have been established, and the visiting nurse activities have been centralized.

Five district physicians have been appointed to minister to those who cannot afford the services of a private physician.

For giving free legal advice to those unable to employ an attorney, a bureau has been established with a very limited appropriation. Over 100 cases received consideration during the first month of its existence.

The city is preparing for cultivation a number of vacant lots, which will be turned over to citizens free, with the one requirement that a portion of the plot be devoted to the raising of flowers.

School children are cultivating experimental gardens under the direction of paid instructors, and over 10,000 plots are being planted this spring. The direction of this movement is in the hands of 15 citizens, five of whom are appointed by the city government.

A municipal lodging house furnished 1,109 lodgings and 2,969 meals in March, with returns to the city of 925 half days of work on the streets.

A fire prevention survey has reduced fire ruins 20 per cent.

Modern ideas in sanitation, cleanliness, good food, persona, welfare the parole system are being worked in the correctional institutions.

Resistance and a Higher Power

By Elizabeth Towne in Nautilus

Yes, Jesus said Resist not and I say it. And I imagine as well as I said it out of varied experience and proof right. Love can overcome, resistance cannot. And if you raised resistance you may be sure it will take a whole lot more love a much longer time to overcome trouble whatever it is It is not resisting, by finding a point agreement and reasoning from that we can influence people. As the resistance exists both sides find plenty of reasons to prove own view correct. "One wonderful creature is man" ex claimed Franklin, "he can always find reasons for anything he wants to do

Resistance is on the intellectual plane, but love is an entirely different thing. Love can overcome resistance, but resistance can never overcome love nor affect it

Do you remember Aesop's fable of the wind and the sun, and the way with a cloak? The wind bet that he could tear the mans coat whereupon the sun wagered that could not, but that the sun could it off. The harder the wind blew closer the man hugged his cloak when the wind gave up and the sun came out the man quickly laid it aside.

There is in man the instinct of preservation that compels him to resist a force applied to him from without. But give him a convincing reason, or a convincing feeling and he do the thing of his own accord. wind applied an opposing force and roused a resisting force the same plane. The sun applied higher spiritual power that changed conditions but left the man free to choose.

Resistance is the push of one man will against another the push the more stubborn the resistance even unto death. We overcome evil by force of will, we may be strong enough to the appearance of it for the time being.

When you stop to realize that human will is backed by an One will, you can see why let one of your hands set itself compel the other hand to change action. By resistance exercise develop muscle in both hands, but hand can change the other

So, clashings will develop when they never change it.

Resist not evil, then, but overcome evil with a loving wisdom that mutes it.

A FLIGHT IN A TRUNK.

From the Wide World Magazine.

On the morning fixed for my flight we were advised from the nearest port to Caracas of the arrival of a Dutch steamer, and at 9 a. m. I made my way to the grounds of the hospital where I had been accustomed to sit and read, and after saluting the policeman on point duty went to a house near by where I shaved off my moustache, put on blue glasses and borrowed a hat, which completed my disguise. At 8 35 an automobile drove up with two of my friends, who had with them the trunk in which I was to make my escape. I got into the automobile and was driven rapidly away by the back streets until we came to the cart road down the mountains. When we got near the coast I took off my coat and trousers and got into the trunk which was then locked and tied with rope. I opened the little window to give me air and in about half an hour we arrived at the docks where passengers embark.

It was now 10 10 a. m. and we had done the journey in one hour and 35 minutes—25 minutes quicker than it takes the train. I could hear everything very plainly. One of my friends asked at what time the steamer would leave and was told at about 5 p. m. but he could go on board at 4 o'clock if he wished. My heart almost stopped beating. "Goodness!" I thought. If I have to remain in this trunk until that hour I shall surely die.

I was then left and in about an hour I heard my friends return with a cart. The trunk was lifted on to the cart by two men, and after some knocking about I knew it was being opened. When I emerged I found myself in a private room at the Customs house where my friends had taken their "baggage" until the time of sailing. Here we had some cold beer and eggs I wanted them, for I had perspired horribly in the trunk and was excessively thirsty.

We remained in the hotel until 2 40 p. m. Meanwhile one of my helpers had purchased his passage and had gone to the Prefectura to obtain a permit to embark.

When all was ready I got into the trunk and was again taken to the docks. Here the trunk was put on end and I had the pleasure of standing on my head for some time. At last however as I felt myself being lifted on to what I saw was an open railway wagon but the trunk being heavy it was dropped by the men. One of them remarked in Spanish "El bojote no es de pajas" ("This package is not of straw"). I was in fear and trembling ever with the knocking about I should give vent to an exclamation and discover myself but at last I was put safely on to the wagon.

Time wore on and I heard the clock chime the hours and half hours. What agony I was going through doubled up in a trunk on an open wagon with a tropical sun blazing down on it and the temperature 90 degrees in the shade. However all things come to an end and at last I felt myself being hoisted up by a winch and dropped more or less gently on the deck of the steamer. I then heard someone ask for the trunk to be taken to a certain cabin as he had to get some things out of it. This was done after some talking about, during which I was thrown on my head several times.

Boric Acid in Skin Diseases.

From the Los Angeles Times.

Boric acid, or boracic acid as it was formerly called, has become such a common household drug that its value as a remedy for treating many skin diseases is often overlooked. Frequently, however, it is more efficacious than some of the most complicated formulas and even in cases where certain specific remedies are indicated the use of boric acid in conjunction with them is often helpful.

There are certain forms of eczema for example that are made distinctly worse by bathing with pure water because water changes the texture of the skin, and increases the osmosis from the lower skin layers producing detrimental effects. If boric acid is added to the water, however, the tension of the skin is not changed and the solution has a distinctly beneficial effect. As it is also antiseptic without being poisonous, it acts as a preventive against external infections.

Solutions of boric acid are also beneficial, and sometimes curative without other treatment in cases of acne, the disease which causes unsightly pimples on the face. For this condition the solution should be used hot and in large quantities. A heaping tablespoonful of boric to each quart of water makes a solution of proper strength, and a bowl holding at least three quarts should be used. The face should be soaked well for 10 or 15 minutes, a convenient method being that of leaning over the bowl and using towels wrung out of the hot solution. This softens the epithelium, removes the grease and germs, and facilitates the action of any local application that may be made afterward. In some cases this treatment alone is curative.

Romance in Geography.

From Manchester.

Geography is a fascinating study. The history of the human race is written in large characters on the earth's surface for the seeing eye. Most people know that Pike's Peak commemorates the explorations of a daring young officer early in the last century. But how many know that in the name of the Bill Williams river lingers the only memorial to a famous trapper and Indian fighter of Kit Carson's time to whom the Rocky mountain country was an open book before even Fremont "blazed the trail to the Pacific." It is around Hudson straits that names proclaim loudly of achievement and of desperate need. Fancy what the Bay of God's Mercy meant to the man who first gave it that name! Or the heart-breaking efforts indicated by Terror Point? Contrast Repulse bay and Mistake bay with the peace implied in Home bay and Cape Comfort. It is difficult to estimate the exact depth and breadth of the irony that found vent in Navy Board inlet, while Mary Jones bay fairly breathes a longing for the commonplace comforts and safety of home. Resolution island and Hope's Advance bay speak sturdily of the undiminished courage of whalers or explorers in those barren waters.

To the Peace Palace at The Haque.

Builded of Love and Joy and Faith and Hope,
Thou standest firm beyond the tides of war
That dash in gloom and fear and tempest roar,
Beacon of Europe—the wise pilots grope
Where trusted lights are lost. Though the dread scope
Of storm is wider, deadlier than before,
Ay, though the very floods that strew the shore
Seem to obey some power turned misanthrope,

For thou art witness to a world's desire,
And when—oh, happiest of days—shall cease
The throes by which our Age doth bring to birth
The fairest of her daughters, Heavenly Peace,
When Man's red folly has been purged in fire,
Thou shall be Capitol of all the Earth.
—Robert Underwood Johnson, in The Independent.

WHITE MAN'S VEHICLE KILLS INDIAN CHIEF

Was Keeper of the Fire of the Quapaws Which Has Been Burning For Ages.

From the Oklahoma City Oklahoman.

Pins Quapaw, Indian, aged 100, who lived near Grove, Okla., is dead. One of the oldest and most romantic figures of his fast disappearing tribe, after having passed through the century that saw both the greatest rise and the almost total extermination of his tribe, Pins Quapaw received injuries in a recent automobile accident that resulted fatally to him.

Up to the time of the accident, Pins Quapaw in spite of his greatly advanced age, was perhaps the strongest Indian in a tribe of men noted for their strength. For many years Pins had lived in the wild country not far from here near that section called "Devil's Promenade," and for more than half a century he had been the keeper of the fire of the Quapaws, a fire that has been kept burning no one knows how long, neither does any white man know the object of the zealous guarding of the fire and the reasons for its continual burning.

Mysteries concerning the origin, development and customs of this once great tribe will doubtless be buried forever with their last survivors, who are becoming more and more scarce as the years go on. Where they came from the secret of the fire and many other things great would be of tremendous interest to any white man, will perhaps never be known, for the Quapaws are a peculiarly secretive tribe.

The legend of the tribe which includes many unique features, was once told by Pins Quapaw, the old fire keeper, who suffered the ignominious death of being conquered by one of the inventions of the invading paleface. In substance, the legend of the tribe as told by him is as follows:

Women Dominated.

Many many years ago the land of the Quapaws was a wondrous country where the women dominated everything in this tribe, which was one of the most exclusive and at the same time most powerful of the American Indians, maternity counted for everything and paternity virtually nothing. The mother was the head of the family and the recognized ruler. Quapaw women were proud and strong. They scorned wounds and weakness of all kinds. Physically they were the nearest to perfection of any race in the new world. They were graceful, handsome, agile and brave.

Girls were desired by all families. They chose their husbands who came to live with their mothers-in-law to become a part of the family and obey her rule. With them, the freedom of the women began with marriage. Until a girl was married, she was nothing, but upon marriage, which frequently occurred at the age of 15, she at once attained complete liberty. She could dismiss her husband at once if she so chose, but she remained a married woman and was permitted to do as she pleased.

The rule of the mother and the virtual ignoring of the father was the last survival of a system asserted to have been once the general law of the world, the recognition of the mother as the creator of the races and the ruler. Brothers unquestionably obeyed their elder sister and respected their younger sisters. Sons were not obliged to remain under the roofs of their mother's tepees, but were permitted to set up wigwams of their own, taking with them one of their sisters who by that act became the ruler of the new household. If the son married, the wife owed obedience to her sister-in-law. If domestic trouble arose the husband stood by his sister, and his wife in her turn, gave up her husband or sacrificed him in any way for her own brother. Conjugal life was a slight thing but brothers and sisters remained steadfast to each other unto the end.

Adverse to Work.

Old Pins Quapaw was perhaps the strongest Indian in a tribe noted for stout healthy braves. Up to the day of his death he had the strength of the ordinary Indian of 30. The tribe which bears his name, holding to the traditions of old will not stoop to any kind of work other than fishing and hunting, in both of which they are experts, but not in the way of the white man.

They do most of their fishing with a strange poison, the secret of which has never been learned. "Uncle Bill" Tibbans, who has lived among them for many years, says he lived with them more than a year before the secretive Indians took him into their confidence sufficiently to permit him to join them on one of their fishing excursions. That was more than 20 years ago, and at that time the streams were filled with fish of many varieties.

The party went up the Neosho river a few miles above what is now Miami, to where it spread out into a pool 60 feet or more across. The men divided into two parties, one going up and the other down the stream 50 or 60 yards. Then they entered the stream and, thrashing the water with their feet and with sticks, returned, driving all the fish before them into the pool.

In the meantime one of the men had been grating some mysterious kind of roots, resembling horseradish, together with a handful of small red berries into about a gallon of water. This was thrown into the pool at various points. In a couple of minutes minnows came to the surface belly up remained a few seconds and then disappeared. In 10 minutes all the small fry were on the surface, apparently dead. The larger ones soon began to go through the same performance. With a long handled scoop net, one of the Quapaws nearly filled a bushel basket with fish from 15 to 24 inches long, within 20 minutes.

Some of the fish were cooked on the spot but Uncle Bill" hesitated about eating them. The Indian surmising his reason, took several spoonfuls of the poisoned mixture, and, mixing it with a cup of water drank it down. It had not the slightest effect on him. To all appearances, the fish remaining in the stream were affected by the poison only through their respiratory organs, and experienced no lasting injury.

These Indians killed their game by means of arrows tipped in this mysterious poison, which seems to render the animal struck by one of them senseless or unconscious for the time being.

On Giving Advice.

C. F. Brady, a rancher who lived near Artesia called on the editor of the Norwalk Call, seeking advice on domestic difficulties. Then Brady returned home and shot his wife and committed suicide. It is never safe to inject newspaper opinion into family affairs. Back in Nebraska a few years ago a woman gave us a dollar to pay for roasting her husband, who was cutting some high capers with another man's wife, and when the poor woman read what we wrote about her husband (we gave him a dollar's worth and advertising was cheap in those days), she promptly swallowed a death-dealing dose of carbolic acid. Keep away from the newspapers when grievous griefs overtake you. If you must talk, tell your troubles to the police.

AN INDIANA MAN TELLS OF WESTERN CANADA

He Is Perfectly Satisfied, and Tells of His Neighbors Who Have Done Well.

Walter Harris, formerly lived near Julietta in Warren township, Indiana. He now lives at Hussar, Alberta. In writing to his home paper in Indiana, he says that the failure is the man who always blames the country. He fails to see his own mistakes, has missed his calling and is not fitted for farming. The two seasons just past have been entirely different. In 1913 plenty of rain came in June and a good crop followed, but the fall was dry and but little snow in the winter followed by a very dry summer, and a short crop. Only those that had farmed their land properly were able to meet expenses.

For example, last year the Crowfoot Farming Company, south of here, threshed from 1,250 acres 38,000 bushels of wheat. One-half section made 26 bushels, the poorest of all. This year on 1,350 acres they threshed nearly 26,000 bushels. Last year's crop sold at 75 cents from their own elevator. What they have sold of this year's crop brought $1.00 at threshing time. Eight thousand bushels unsold would bring now around $1.25. The manager and part owner was raised in Ohio and farmed in Washington several years. He and his wife spent last winter in Ohio. She told me a few days ago that the climate here was much better than Ohio.

A man by the name of George Clark threshed 75 bushels of oats, 45 bushels of barley and 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. He had 15,000 bushels of old oats as well as wheat and barley in his granaries that have almost doubled in price. He came from Washington, where he sold a large body of land around $200 that he bought around $3.00 per acre. He then refers to a failure. A large company in the eastern states, owning a large farm near Hussar pays its manager $3,000 a year. The farm has not been a success. Probably the manager's fault. Mr. Harris says conditions are not as good as could be wished for, but on the ending of the war good crops, with war prices, will certainly change conditions, and it seems to me that the one who owns land that will raise 100 bushels of oats, 75 bushels of barley or 40 bushels of wheat is the one who "laughs last."

The above yields may seem exaggerations to many, and are far above the average, but you should remember that the man who fails is counted in to make the average, and there are instances on record here that would far exceed the above figures.

Nor is grain the only profitable thing that can be raised here. There are many fine horse ranches, some of them stocked with cayuses and bred to thoroughbreds, and others imported from the old countries. They run on the range nearly all the year. The owners put up wild hay to feed them if the snow should get too deep for them to get the dead grass. There are several hundred in sight of here most of the time. There are several cattle ranches north of here that have from 500 to 7,000 head of cattle. One man I know sold $45,000 worth of fat cattle this fall. He winters his cattle on farms where they have lots of straw and water, paying 75 cents a month per head, or if there is enough straw to winter 400 or 500 head they buy the straw and water and have a man to look after the cattle.—Advertisement.

Keeps the Heat in the Oven and Out of the Kitchen

"Fireless" and Range Combined—The secret is in the insulated oven, which seals in the heat just like a fireless cook stove. A turn of the damper does it—changing your range into the best and easiest used "fireless" ever invented. This "fireless" oven is the big, new feature of the NEW PERFECTION, the finest range you can put in your kitchen. Has a cabinet top with a spacious warming shelf and plenty of room behind the burners for keeping food hot.

3 Kinds of Cooking

This insulated oven cooks three ways. You can adjust the flame for the quickest kind of quick baking, or the slow, steady kind you need for baking bread and roasting meats. Seal the oven and turn out the flame and it keeps an even, steady heat for six or seven hours—this is your fireless. The insulation keeps the heat in the oven and out of the kitchen—a blessing in hot weather and a great fuel saver all the year 'round.

Burns Economical, Clean Oil—This latest NEW PERFECTION burns oil. Your fire is ready by striking a match—no dirt, smoke or odor—no more lugging in coal or wood and carrying out ashes. All you need are matches. Cheap as well as clean and handy. Safe, too—none of the dangers of gasoline. For best results use Perfection Oil.

Price Low—The price of this NEW PERFECTION with the Insulated Oven is wonderfully reasonable. It costs little more than a good fireless cooker, less than the average coal range, while giving you the service of both. You can see it at your dealer's in two sizes. Ask him for the latest NEW PERFECTION With Blue Flame OIL COOK STOVE with the Fireless Cooker Oven. Look for the triangle trademark.

THE observance of the second Sunday in May as Mothers' Day originated with a Philadelphia lady, Miss Anna Jarvis, who observed the first anniversary of the death of her mother by wearing white carnations, her mother's favorite flower. The happy thought then occgrred to her that all mothers, whether living or dead should be so honored, and the second Sunday in May, the date of her first observance, should be recognized as the time for this tribute. To make the distinction clear, white flowers are worn as a tribute to the dead and bright flowers in honor of the living.

Judge D. F. Coyle gave a decision in court here last week that will be of interest to every person in Iowa, and especially the farmers who have pupilc sale every year. Judge Coyle took the case from the jury and decided where there was by bidding at a public sale the purchaser is not compelled to take stock or articles sold. The case in question was taken into court by a purchaser of a span of horses at a public sale in this county in January. The party purchasing the team had told some one he was going to buy them at the sale and it reached the ears of several interested parties and they decided to run up the price. The team was "struck off" to the highest bidder, but the party refused to take them. He was sued by the owner but Judge Coyle decided in favor of the defendant.—Estherville Democrat.

BROTHER KILLED IN WAR

One of those little black-bordered missives that by the hundreds carry sad war news into the homes of relatives, found its way into the Record office this week, addressed to our foreman Mr B T Sparrow. The letter was from a brother in British Columbia, stating that their brother was killed in action during an engagement on the France-German frontier. All three brothers offered their services to their home country, England; the one in Canada is doing guard duty; the Mr Sparrow here was unable to enlist on account of not coming up to some of the physical requirements or measurements. Getting in close touch with the war in this manner gives us a deeper conception of the suffering that exists in the countries across the ocean. Every great good to be accomplished calls first for some great sacrifice, and it is hoped that the brave soldiers who are now sacrificing their lives are paying for universal and everlasting peace among all nations—Kanawha Record.

KLEMME FARMERS MAY HAVE ELECTRIC LIGHTS

Prof. F. E. Paine Explains How They Can Secure Them Easiest

At the request of Mr C. A. Arnold, Prof F. D. Paine of the Electrical Engineering Department of the Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, visited Klemme on Tuesday, April, 6th, for the purpose of making a complete investigation of the possibilities of serving the farmers in the near vicinity of Klemme with electricity or light and power. Mr. Paine is making investigations in different parts of Iowa to obtain data from which he can publish a bulletin for all farmers on "Electricity for the Iowa farm." While his investigations here were primarily for this purpose, he expects to give all the results derived from individual cases to the person in question so that he may decide whether to use electricity at all, and if so, what to use. The great question at Klemme, states Mr Paine is whether there is enough farmers who wish to use electricity to make the distributing system from the town plant practical. With the present system of direct current it would not be possible to try and build lines to the farms and expect good service. If a distributing system were built it would mean changing the plant over to alternating current. This would necessitate the sale of the present generators and storage battery. To make the above changes the farmers must be the ones who will influence the size o the plant and its equipment. Iowa farmers are just beginning to demand service from town plants. Through Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin there are hundreds of miles of farmer lines. The average farmer looks upon electricity as a luxury. It is not a luxury, but a necessity, and the farmer needs it for light and power more than the average resident in town. The average farmer to-day is progressive. Those who are using electricity on the farm to-day realize that they have made a great progressive step. They find that they not only have a great convenience but in many ways cheaper than other forms of lighting by means of power. While it is true that each farmer could own his own small plant, and obtain electricity for some light and power, the the initial cost would be greater, the amount of power available more limited, and the service poorer than if he were using electricity from a distributing system. The Light company needs the business, the farmers need the service. There are surely enough progressive farmers around Klemme who will demard enough service so that it will pay the Light Company to make the change. Mr. Paine promises information in the near future on the general conveniences and applications of electricity and data on comparative costs.

KANAWHA AFTER LIGHTS

A body of citizens met at the hall Tuesday evening to discuss the light proposition, Mr D. C Faber, an electrical engineer also meeting with them. The matter seems to have broadened into these three different questions—shall we have a kerosene engine system or a small steam outfit, or a larger steam outfit with a view of selling heat for business and private places and for churches and the school house. The latter outfit would probably be supplemented with a small kerosene engine to provide day current as needed. At the meeting Mr. Faber outlined the advantages of the various plants, and also strongly advised securing a competent engineer to give a preliminary report previous to election, and if the proposition was voted upon favorably by the people then continue the services of the engineer until the plant was installed.—Kanawha Record.

LANDSCAPING POPULAR

The land experts of the horticultural department of Iowa State colleges are busy giving assistance to many Iowa towns and rural communities in the beautification of streets, parks, school grounds, play grounds and cemeteries. Many requests from farmers for farm stead planting plans indicate also that there is a decided movement toward a "rural Iowa beautiful." At the present time the horticultural department has work under way at Fayette, Eldora, Delmar Junction, Randall, Harlan, Indianola, Fairfield and near Forest City for a rural social center.

THE KLEMME TIMES

M. M. MAGNER, Publisher.

KLEMME, IOWA

Hebron one of the oldest cities in Palestine has always been famous for its oriental water bottles, made of goat skins. Here are to be found large tanneries where these receptables are turned out by thousands. Lying on the ground in rows may be seen hundreds of goat skins awaiting purchasers. Each skin is inflated, either with water or with air so that the buyer may know it is well tight. The majority of the skins used come from Arabia, while a large number are also received from the Lebanons. They are brought to Hebron by the camel caravans and are bought by the tanneries and turned into bottles. They pass through many processes and a tanner will spend a week on a single skin before it is rendered watertight and serviceable. From Hebron these old "bottles" are sent to all parts of the east, thousands going down into Egypt and the Sudan every year. They are also used as rafts. A number of inflated skins are attached to a light wooden frame, which then not only readily floats, but is capable of carrying quite a heavy load. Such rafts are to be seen on the rivers of Syria and also on the Euphrates and Tigris.

It is likely that the English shall learn some new tastes and new habits when their men come home. They may bring back with them a taste of French bread, strong coffee, chocolate (which is not cocoa), cheap wine and black cigarets. Even Englishmen, after long residence in France, come by custom to prefer coffee to tea, and the full flavored cigarets of the French Regie (Caporals and Marylands) to the lighter kinds popular in this country. French soldiers brought with them from Algeria the taste of absinthe, and English officers brought back with them from Egypt in 1885 the cigaret habit. We may take it, too, that the British soldiers will bring home with them many fragments of the French language. The Boers gave them the word "commander." This war has given the English no new terms so far, but it will probably add a good deal of French to their slang.

A Texas politician making his final campaign statement apologizes to the telephone girls to whom he was fretful when the excitement was running high. We mention the matter to show an unevil world that Texas character is so gentle and kind that even our fiercest politicians remember in their calm, unruffled moments that no gentleman ever permits his wrath to explode upon a defenseless telephone girl without sending at the proper time an apology and a box of chocolates.

The British war office gives to its prisoners of war the following daily rations: One and a half pounds of bread, meat eight ounces, fresh vegetables eight ounces, butter, one ounce, condensed milk one twentieth of a pound, tea one half ounce, coffee one ounce, sugar two ounces, salt, one half ounce.

Dr. Max Yoder of St. Paul, Minn., who attempted to enlist was told that he was six pounds overweight and the recruiting officer told him that to reduce he ought to take long walks and avoid meat and beer. Faithfully Yoder trudged over long walks, ate sparingly and turned cold on beer. At the end of the week he had gained six pounds.

The present population of Italy is nearly 36,000,000, about 10,000,000 less than Great Britain. Its area is 110,659 square miles, 10,000 square miles less than Great Britain. SALE OF IOWA LANDS RECALLS HUGE GRANT ON NAVIGATION PLAN Eastern Concern Well Paid For "Installing Navigation" on Des Moines River.

Fort Dodge, Ia., May 8.—Edward H. Litchfield, of New York, owner of more than 15,000 acres of Webster county farm land, acquired for practically nothing as a part of the old river land grant, recently has quietly disposed of more than 1,600 acres at an average price of $150 an acre.

The Litchfields acquired title to these lands through the grant of 1846, made by the United States to the state of Iowa for the purpose of making the Des Moines river navigable, and through the grant of the state of Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation and Improvement company. Litchfield, Burrows, Chapman and other New York men constituted this company.

They did some work on the lower Des Moines river by way of putting in a few locks and dams, and finally made settlement with the state by which they received title to the odd numbered sections of land for five miles on each side of the river from Keokuk to the Minnesota line. They made a good bargain with the state in their settlement. The several members of the company then divided the lands among themselves. Litchfield has been the greatest money maker by the deal.

The navigation of the Des Moines never was much developed although it is a matter of history that a steamboat once made its way up the river as far as Fort Dodge under the command of A. F. Blackshire a Fort Dodge pioneer as captain and F. E. Beers who still lives at Gilmore City, as first mate.

IOWA DENTAL SOCIETY IN SESSION AT WATERLOO

Waterloo, Ia., May 8.—Six hundred dentists are here to attend the annual convention of the Iowa Dental society. All of the papers and addresses are directed to the purpose of prevention, rather than cure. In referring to the antiquated tooth puller conception of the profession, Dr. Redman president, says this year's gathering lays special emphasis on preventative dentistry.

"The dentist can no longer be regarded as a tooth carpenter," said Dr. Redman. "It is the first duty of any dentist to save a tooth and not to pull it except where all other means fail. The tooth puller has no more standing in dentistry than the old fashioned surgeon who advocated amputation of a limb in case of minor injury."

IDA GROVE WOMAN GETS PEARLS FROM AN ESTATE

Ida Grove, Ia., May 8.—Mrs. Sarah Moore, a well known resident of Ida Grove, has received a string of pearls by express as her share of the estate of an aunt who died recently in Fayette county, Pennsylvania. The pearls came into the possession of Mrs. Moore's aunt when the latter was a small girl as a family heirloom, and remained in her possession for nearly 72 years. Their age has removed none of their luster or value and local jewelers claim they are well worth between $4,000 and $5,000.

Mrs. Moore owns a home and is in fairly good circumstances. She has not decided whether she will keep the gems or sell them, but in the meantime she has placed them in the safety vaults of one of the local banks.

IOWA COMPENSATION CASES FOR 10 MONTHS TOTAL 2,117

Des Moines, Ia., May 8.—There were 10,200 industrial accidents in the state in the 10 months since July 1, 1914, when the workmen's compensation law went into effect, according to figures given out by Welker Given, secretary of the Iowa industrial commission.

Of the total number of injuries, he reports there were 2,117 cases in which the victims were laid up longer than the two weeks necessary to draw compensation under the law. The total paid out to injured persons was $69,000 or an average of $32.59 for each case. The total premiums collected by insurance companies for industrial insurance in the same period was $400,000, according to Mr. Given.

JOHN W. BUDD NAMED POLK COUNTY ENGINEER

Des Moines, Ia., May 8.—John W. Budd, assistant city engineer, was elected county engineer yesterday to succeed Harry Curtis, removed from office last week at a salary of $2,500 a year.

In electing Budd in preference to some other candidates the supervisors were forced to raise the salary of the office from $1,650 to $2,500. It had been reported that the salary of Curtis was $1,800. It became known yesterday that he had received only $1,650.

DUBUQUE—Eugene Adams, chairman of Dubuque's municipally owned athletic field committee, has announced the purchase of a piece of ground just across the road from the present park which will be converted into an annex containing another baseball diamond and tennis courts. The price paid was $6,300. A municipal park installed last year proved a great success.

NATE KENDALL WILL NOT TRY FOR GOVERNORSHIP

Des Moines, Ia., May 6.—Nate Kendall will not be a candidate for the republican nomination for governor, according to an interview which he gave out here. The former speaker of the house and Sixth district congressman came here from his home at Albia to appear before the supreme court in a case which he has pending.

Mr. Kendall said that he had had a number of letters urging him to enter the primary campaign, but he felt there were already enough candidates in the field.

LEAVES TOWN ON EVE OF MARRIAGE, AFTER PASSING BAD CHECKS

Greene County Officials Seeking Man Who Was Social Success For Short Time.

Jefferson, Ia., May 7.—J. R. Howard, a young man who came to Jefferson a few weeks ago departed very suddenly for Chicago on the fast train, leaving his fiance behind him.

Mr. Howard came here and bought a bakery on a contract without paying anything down at the time. He was a good baker and did a considerable business. Shortly after coming he joined one of the local churches and became engaged to a local girl.

The marriage was to have taken place on Saturday, and Mr. Howard made elaborate preparations for this event. He bought a great many things at the stores and gave his checks freely. A clothing store and two jewelry stores received them in payment for merchandise bought. When presented at the bank payment was refused. There are several hundred dollars outstanding in checks and accounts.

An information has been filed and the authorities are now on his track. Letters have been found that indicate that his name is J. W. Moore and a picture which he had taken recently will also be of service in the search. His friends think he will be able to explain all.

The deserted girl is in a frenzy of grief but her family relatives think she had a lucky escape in not completing the nuptial contract.

CARLIS TO MAKE CONTEST ON MERITS OF CHARGES

Mason City, Ia., May 7.—It is not probable that Louis Carlis, of Cedar Rapids, secretary of the insurgents of the Modern Brotherhood of America, who was indicted by the grand jury of Cerro Gordo county for criminal libel will be tried at this term of court. Sheriff Marsh returned this morning from Cedar Rapids, where he served papers on him, and Carlis gave bonds in the sum of $1,000 for appearance. According to suggestions made when Mr. Carlis was arrested some time ago and brought to this city it is quite probable that when the case comes up for hearing the attorneys for Carlis will ask for a change of venue. This would be based upon the fact that Mason City is headquarters for the Modern Brotherhood of America, and has been since the organization of the society and stands well in the community. The indictment is based upon a circular issued April 4, signed by James H. Hughes, president M. B. A. insurgents and Louis Carlis recording secretary. Soon after the circular appeared Mr. Hughes withdrew from the insurgents and is not made a party to this suit. The alleged libelous article reflects on the honesty of the officers of the brotherhood, mentioning particularly Mr. Hanley, president, Mr. Ralz secretary, and Mr. Gale treasurer. In conversation with Mr. Carlis he claims that the statements contained in the alleged circular are the facts to the best of his knowledge and belief and will make his contest on the merits of the case. Officers of the regulars declare they are not the truth, have no semblance of the truth, and are defamatory in the highest degree.

CONSOLIDATED SCHOOLS IN IOWA NOW TOTAL 100

Des Moines, Ia., May 7.—In the first four months of 1915, 20 consolidated schools have been organized in Iowa making the total now 100. The last district to be organized was at Monmouth, Jackson county, according to A. M. Deyoe, state superintendent of public instruction.

"Increased state aid provided by the legislature will tend to increase the number of such schools," Mr. Deyoe said. "The amount of money for each school was not made any larger, but a bigger fund was provided. We had barely enough for the last biennial period and the number of schools now is nearly five times as great as two years ago."

The state provides $100,000 annually to aid consolidated schools that reach certain standards of efficiency. The more schools there are the higher are the qualifications made, Dr. Deyoe said.

CLAIMS FORMER WIFE IS GUILTY OF BIGAMY

Knoxville, Ia., May 7.—Clarence Phillips of this city has caused the arrest at Oskaloosa of his former wife, Ona Gullion Lathrop on a charge of bigamy. The woman is in jail at Oskaloosa, unable to give bail.

Ona Gullion, daughter of a farmer residing southeast of Knoxville, married Robert Lathrop in 1913. On April 11, 1914, Lathrop secured a divorce and on April 22, eight days later, the woman married Clarence Phillips of Knoxville. Mrs. Phillips spent the winter in Artesian, S. D. Returning here about three weeks ago she asked her husband for $5, so that she could visit with her parents at Lovilla and with friends in Oskaloosa. At the latter place she met her former husband, Robert Lathrop, and married him within three days without going to the trouble of securing a divorce from her second spouse, it is alleged.

ATTEMPTS SUICIDE WHEN ENGAGEMENT IS BROKEN

Magnolia, Ia., May 7.—John Coffman, a resident of this section, attempted suicide at Yorkshire, in the eastern part of Harrison county, where he had gone in an unsuccessful attempt to "patch up" a broken engagement with his former fiance, Miss Maud Newman. The young woman returned his ring a short time ago. Coffman, who is 22 years of age, brooded over the estranged relations and evidently went to the young woman's home with a determination to kill himself. He took poison shortly after his interview with her. The young man was given first aid treatment and then rushed to an Omaha hospital, where he is reported to be in a serious condition.

LE MARS—The body of Mrs. A. P. Brown, who died in St. Paul, Minn., was brought here for burial. She was the wife of A. P. Brown, who was formerly mayor of LeMars and postmaster here under President Harrison's administration. Mrs. Brown was 80 years of age.

MASON CITY CONSIDERING DRASTIC JITNEY MEASURE

Mason City, Ia., May 5.—Mason City commissioners have before them what some call a drastic jitney ordinance. It calls for license ranging from $75 to $125, according to capacity of jitney; a map of the route proposed must be filed, a $4,000 indemnity bond given for five-passenger cars and an additional $1,000 for every passenger over five; drivers must be over 21 years of age, no defect in eyesight, not addicted to use of liquor. In addition to these there are minor requirements galore.

PLANS NOW COMPLETE FOR REORGANIZATION IOWA NATIONAL GUARD

Two Sioux City Companies Will Be Part of Second Regiment, Hiatt Commanding.

Des Moines, Ia., May 6.—Plans for the reorganization of the Iowa National Guard were perfected at a meeting of the advisory board of the militia held at Cedar Rapids. The changes will be effective as soon as Adjt. Gen. Guy E. Logan can prepare the orders.

One entire regiment of infantry will be dispensed with. The present numbering of the regiments will be abandoned and the three new infantry regiments will be known as the First, Second and Third regiments. At present the Iowa regiments are known as the Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth regiments.

Col. John E. Bartley, of Tipton, has been placed in charge of the First regiment, which will be made up of companies in the following cities: Dubuque, Cedar Falls, Washington, Keokuk, Fairfield, Burlington, Manchester, Vinton, two at Waterloo, two at Cedar Rapids and machine gun company at Tipton. The band will be located at Cedar Rapids.

Col. N. P. Hiatt, of Webster City, will command the Second regiment, which will have companies in the following cities: Webster City, Le Mars, Ida Grove, Eagle Grove, Sheldon, Charles City, Boone, two at Fort Dodge, two at Mason City, two at Sioux City. One company of the 13 will be selected as a machine gun company. The band will be located at Mason City.

Col. E. R. Bennett of Des Moines, will command the Third regiment will have companies in the following cities: Shenandoah, Villisca, Winterset, Glenwood, Corning, Council Bluffs, Red Oak, Oskaloosa, Ottumwa, Grinnell, Ames and two in Des Moines, the band of the Third regiment will be located at Clarinda.

Col. R. P. Howell, of Iowa City, will command the cavalry. Four troops have been organized in the vicinity of Iowa City of farm boys who own their own horses. Colonel Howell will have the following staff: Capt. Charles Dewey of Washington, adjutant; Capt. John W. Coggeswell, of Iowa City, inspector of small arms practice; Lieut. H. S. Merrick of Ottumwa, squadron quartermaster commissary.

In making up the three new regiments, companies have been taken from the former four regiments and rearranged so that the First regiment will be in the eastern part of the state, the Second in the northwestern part of Iowa. In arranging the companies in the various regiments Adjt. Gen. Guy Logan says that efforts will be made to permit as many companies as possible to retain their present designation as to letters.

The council authorized the disbanding of three companies located at Fort Madison, Cherokee and Charlton. The inspectors recommended that these organizations be let out.

MAHIN HAD CLOSE CALL ON TRIP TO EUROPE

Clinton, Ia., May 6.—Frank W. Mahin, recently appointed as United States consul to Amsterdam, has arrived in Holland after a rather exciting trip of which he writes to friends in Clinton.

His ship was halted and searched many times and one of the passengers, a man with a German name was removed by a British warship.

On another occasion the ship passed only a few yards from a floating mine. The mine was sighted in time and a course was steered to one side. At the same time a Dutch steamer was seen to be heading directly for the mine. It was warned of the impending peril by blasts from the whistle of the Nieuw Amsterdam, the liner on which Mr. Mahin was a passenger.

FAYETTE SETTLES LONG DRAWN TELEPHONE FIGHT

Fayette, Ia., May 6.—The most important civic accomplishment of the year has been the solution of the telephone nuisance from which the town has suffered for several years. Two companies (without franchise) were preparing to rebuild. The local Commercial club appointed a committee to work on the problem and probably no town in the state has ever been through a worse telephone war or worked out a more satisfactory solution.

Efforts to get the office of the two companies together were unavailing, meetings of the stockholders of the local Mutual company only made the deadlock worse and the town council did not see fit to take sides or any definite action in the matter.

After all other attempts had failed injunction suits were begun against both companies and as a result the two companies have came together in a written agreement for the operation of one joint exchange under such terms as will give Fayette good telephone service.

AMES COMMENCEMENT FROM MAY 28 TO JUNE 3

Ames, Ia., May 6.—This year's baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class at Iowa State college will be delivered by a former president, Rev. Dr. A. B. Storms, now pastor of one of the great churches of Indianapolis. The commencement day address will be delivered by President F. W. Gunsaulus of Armour Institute, Chicago.

The commencement exercises at Ames will continue for the week from Friday, May 28, to Thursday, June 3, concluding with the annual reception of the president of the college to the seniors and their relatives and friends.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS FOR PERSONAL USE ARE LEGAL

Des Moines, Ia., May 6.—Attorneys have been investigating for the last two weeks measures passed by the Thirty-sixth general assembly. They are advising their clients that the legislative work was done thoroughly and that practically every point in the handling of liquor has been covered. However, the express and railroad companies have the right to transport liquor in interstate commerce to Iowa, where the booze is intended for personal use, the attorneys say.

SOME STORM DAMAGE IN SOUTHEASTERN SECTION

Council Bluffs, Ia., May 4.—Caprices of a young tornado, which passed over sections of Cass county Sunday night, included the blowing of a church at Massena from its foundation.

The storm blew over silos, barns and other buildings and destroyed a number of orchards. Losses in this county alone are estimated at $40,000. No one was injured.

Massena was struck with the full force of the tempest. The church was toppled over and blown several yards from its foundation.

PROHIBITION WORKER DIES IN IOWA HOME; WAS 1914 CANDIDATE

Malcolm Smith Was Leader of His Party—Sought Governor's Chair.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., May 5.—Malcolm Smith, well known temperance worker and prohibition party leader in Iowa, died at his home in Cedar Rapids, early yesterday morning. His death was due to a hemorrhage of the brain.

Mr. Smith was for many years traveling representative in the middle west for the Sinclair Packing company. He was candidate for the office of governor upon the prohibition party ticket last year. Two years ago Mr. Smith was married to Mrs. Ida B. Wise, of Des Moines, a temperance worker. Their marriage was the culmination of a romance which began three years previous when Mrs. Wise and Mr. Smith were elected to the directory board of the Iowa Constitutional Amendment association, the launched.

Mrs. Smith now holds the office for the second term of president of the Iowa Women's Christian Temperance union. Mr. Smith was an active worker in the Presbyterian church in Cedar Rapids and was founder of a Sunday school for Bohemians which became the foundation for a permanent church organization for these people.

Funeral services will be held at the home in Cedar Rapids Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

IOWA LEGISLATURE FORGETS TO PAY ITS LAUNDRY BILL

Des Moines, Ia., May 5.—The Iowa legislature, which adjourned two weeks ago, would be in danger of being nabbed by a constable for jumping debts if it were an ordinary mortal. It jumped one of its debts all right, and at present the creditor is scratching his head and doing other similar stunts in an effort to figure out how he is going to get his money before the assembly meets in 1917.

And the bill that was jumped? The most natural one, of course—the laundry.

The amount was about $217, and was for laundering towels used by the senators and representatives and members of the great third house.

The laundry bill was overlooked when the omnibus measure was prepared and passed.

MRS. VAN HORN CLEARED OF MURDER CHARGE BY JUDGE

Mason City, Ia., May 5.—Mrs. Chester Van Horn has been cleared of the charge of murdering her husband.

Judge Edwards sustained the motion for a directed verdict of acquittal. He ruled there was no evidence to show Van Horn did not commit suicide, that no motive was shown and there was no evidence to connect the defendant with the crime.

Mrs. Van Horn wept through the half hour the judge was delivering his ruling.

Chester Van Horn was found dead in bed at his home near Clear Lake, November 20, 1914, and his wife was arrested for murder December 31, 1914. The case has been on trial since Monday.

SALIX IS DISTURBED BY SMALL CYCLONE

Salix, Ia., May 5.—Thousands of dollars' damage was done to buildings, fruit trees and crops yesterday when a small cyclone struck west of this town. Windows were blown from houses and barns. The twister came up from the southwest about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, being about a quarter of a mile wide.

BISHOP ESTABLISHES RECORD; RAISES $8,000 A MINUTE

Fort Dodge, Ia., May 5.—Bishop William A. Quayle, of St. Paul, presiding at the dedication of the new $100,000 Methodist Episcopal church here, today raised $40,000 in five minutes, an average of $8,000 a minute. This amount frees the church of all indebtedness.

ROCKWELL CITY FARMER LOSES NINE HEAD OF HORSES

Rockwell City, Ia., May 5.—A large barn on the Ehler farm just east of town was struck by lightning last night and entirely destroyed by fire, together with nine head of horses belonging to George Hayes, the tenant. The barn also contained 300 bushels of grain and a lot of harness. Mr. Hayes had insurance to partially cover his loss, while the building was well insured.

MASON CITY—The charge against John Adams has been changed from murder to manslaughter. Adams secured friends from Wright county who gave necessary bonds of $7,000. He claims that he was in no way responsible for the death of Tony Ralphus, that while he was driving at a moderate speed he saw two men starting to cross the road, that he sounded his horn, one of them stopped while Ralphus stepped in front of the car. He has secured the services of two prominent legal firms of this city to defend him.

STORM LAKE—While insane, Mrs. Minnie Rader, of St. Paul attempted to throw herself and her little 4-year-old son in front of an Illinois Central passenger Bystanders noticed her queer actions and prevented her from committing the rash act. The woman was taken before the insanity commissioners and was committed to the Cherokee hospital. Mrs. Rader is about 30 years old.

SHELDON—Sheldon now has a commercial club of 140 members, and strenuous work is being done by the committee. At a meeting $250 was appropriated for good roads, $75 for prizes in connection with the acre corn growing contest for Floyd, Carroll and Baker townships, and $30 for prizes for the best kept lawns and back yards in Sheldon.

DAYTON—The First National bank of this place let the contract Saturday evening for a new bank building on the lot it recently purchased on Main street. It will be one story with a fine frontage and will be made modern in every way.

SIOUX RAPIDS—Senator Kenyon is to deliver the Fourth of July speech at Pickerell Lake, Monday, July 5. Quite extensive improvements have been made at Pickerell Lake and no doubt it will be a popular picnic ground this season.

MASON CITY—Paul Prehm, the lightweight wrestler, has been added to the Mason City police force and during the summer will do duty on a motorcycle. He will do special duty during the afternoon and evening will be devoted entirely to traffic violations. The city officials are going to do all in their power to curb wreckless automobile driving.

DES MOINES—United States district attorneys have been instructed by the attorney general to prosecute all members of the national guard who steal property belonging to the government. A fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment for not more than five years is the penalty attached on conviction for this offense.

GERMANY WARNS BY UNITED STAT[illegible]

Recent Note Informed [illegible] That Kaiser's Governm[illegible] Would Be Held Responsib[illegible] In Case of Attack.

Washington, D. C., May 8.—[illegible] the German admiralty proclaim[illegible] waters around Great Britain and [illegible] land a "war zone" and warned [illegible] vessels against the dangers [illegible] therein, the United States did not [illegible] mit Germany's right to place [illegible] in the way of American vessels [illegible] There was no distinction drawn [illegible] as to whether the representatives [illegible] the United States covered Americans [illegible] traveling on belligerent or [illegible] craft but officials informally [illegible] later that the note had been purposely [illegible] phrased as to cover both contingencies. The language of the American note, [illegible] everywhere recalled last night, [illegible] possible index of the policy to be pursued. The decision at the time, particularly over the misuse of [illegible] of belligerent vessels, the Lusitania itself having flown an American flag to escape attack from German warships. The United States reiterated with Great Britain over the use of the American flag and says the same thing to Germany.

"If the commanders of German vessels of war should act upon the presumption that the flag of the United States was not being used in good faith and should destroy on the high seas an American vessel the lives of American citizens would be difficult to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights which it would be very hard indeed to reconcile with the friendly relations now existing between the two governments.

"If such a deplorable situation should arise, the imperial German government can readily appreciate that the government of the United States would be constrained to hold the German government to a strict accountability for such acts of the naval authorities and to take such steps that might be necessary to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of the rights acknowledged on the high seas."

Officials, however, were careful to point out that if no American lives were lost there might be many mitigating circumstances which would prevent a move from the present incident of vital interest that the United States otherwise might have in it.

It was indicated, for example, that a marked division of opinion had existed among legal authorities as to whether a hostile vessel need give any warning to a merchantman traveling without convoy, for the exercise of right of visit and search to determine the presence of contraband. Such conditions obviously would imperil the safety of the attacking vessel itself. On the other hand it had been urged that under no circumstances can an unarmed merchantman be attacked unless assisting capture or attempting to run blockade.

Rome Notifies Turkey [illegible] Pact Is No Longer Operati[illegible] —Tantamount to Declar[illegible] ation of War.

Geneva, Switzerland, via Pa[illegible] May 8.—The Tribune publishes a dispatch from Rome saying the Italian government has decided owing to recent uprising in Tripoli to n[illegible] Turkey that it considered void the treaty of Lausanne. Such a notification, the Tribune says, "would amount to a declaration of war."

Passenger trains from Italy are crowded with Germans and Austrians. A number of German correspondents from Milan and Turin have arrived in Lugano.

At Stein... ...bruck on both sides of the valley of ... the river Fecht they attacked after a ... preliminary fire of artillery which last... ...ed for hours. All these attacks re... ...sulted in our favor with heavy losses ... to the French.

In the eastern theater of the war ... the troops we sent against the city of ... Libau took possession of this town yes... ...terday. Sixteen hundred prisoners 18 ... cannon and four machine guns fell in... ...to our hands.

In the southeastern theater of the ... war. The pursuit of the defeated enemy ... by the army under General Mackensen ... and such troops of our allies as joined ... this army, was continued steadily ... throughout yesterday. MANY NOTED PERSONS ON DEATH LIST

Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, Charles Klein, Herbert S. Stone, H. L. Fisher Are Among Missing.

MANY OTHERS AMONG DEAD

List of Survivors Fails to Show Names of Many Prominent Americans and Titled Europeans

Washington, May 8.—American Consul Frost, at Cork, cabled the state department late today that among the list of identified dead of the Lusitania's American passengers were Charles Frohman, Mrs. Amelia McDonald and Patrick Callon.

London, May 10.- Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt apparently perished when the Lusitania went down, according to a message to Ambassador Page from the United States consul at Queenstown.

London, May 10, 4 48 a. m.—The Times Queenstown correspondent says that some of the survivors who have arrived there report that Alfred Gwinn Vanderbilt was drowned.

Queenstown, May 8, 4 36 a. m.—Every effort to find Alfred Gwinne Vanderbilt and Charles Frohman among the survivors of the Lusitania landed here has failed.

New York, May 8.—Herbert Stuart Stone, elder son of the general manager of the Associated Press, is another American passenger not accounted for. Young Mr. Stone was well known as the one time head of the book publishing firm of H. S. Stone & Co., and the founder and editor of the Chap Book and the House Beautiful, two successful magazines.

Washington, May 8.—Dr Howard L. Fisher, brother of Walter L. Fisher, former secretary of the interior, who was on the Lusitania, going to the American Red Cross unit in Belgium, cabled to his wife here from Queenstown today that he was safe and well.

A state biological survey, suggested by the Ohio academy of science, is being undertaken with state appropriation of $2,500, a number of the colleges of the state are co-operating. The preparation of duplicate material and separate collections for the colleges and other educational institutions is the primary feature of the work.

GERMAN PRESS PRAISES SINKING OF LUSITANIA

Berlin Newspapers In Colossal Type Hail Feat as "New Triumph of Germany's Naval Policy" and Declare That "England Has Got What She Deserved," Says Copenhagen.

London, May 8. The Exchange Telegraph company has received today the following telegram from Copenhagen:

"Berlin newspapers print the news of the sinking of the Lusitania in colossal type and hail the successful torpedoing of the ship as a new triumph for Germany's naval policy. The general impression is that England has got what she deserves."

The Exchange Telegraph company has received a dispatch from Berlin by way of Amsterdam which reads:

"Hundreds of telegrams of congratulation are being sent to Admiral Von Tirpitz the German minister of marine on the sinking of the Lusitania, which is considered by the Germans to be an answer to the destruction of the German squadron off the Falkland islands.

The news of the loss of the Lusitania was received with mixed expressions of amazement and enthusiasm."

Wealthy Travelers Last to Leave Sinking Vessel—Women and Children Put Off In First Boats—Scores Reported to Have Been Wounded By Explosions In Ship's Holds—Many Drowned Struggling In Water—Many Die After Reaching Shore—Queenstown Vast Morgue.

London, May 8.--1:51 p. m.--The British government today made the following announcement: "The statement appearing in some newspapers that the Lusitania was armed is wholly false."

London May 8. More than 1,200 persons lost their lives, the British admiralty estimates, when the Cunard line steamship Lusitania was torpedoed and sunk yesterday afternoon off Old Head, Kinsale, on the Irish coast.

This statement was given out by the admiralty today:

"The best available information sets forth that the Lusitania had aboard 1,241 passengers and a crew of 665. This gives a total of 1,919 souls on board the liner when she was torpedoed.

"An admiralty statement this morning placed the number of survivors at 658. Later a report from Ireland said 45 more had been brought in, making 703 known survivors and a death list of 1,216."

Of those who were saved, 640 were landed at Queenstown, 11 at Kinsale and 52 others are reported to be aboard a steamer. It is possible that a few others have been landed by fishing boats at other points. One dispatch said that several survivors had been landed on Sovereign island, near Galleyhead.

In addition to the living brought ashore the bodies of 45 who died of injuries or were drowned have been landed at Queenstown. Five more are at Kinsale and it has been reported that an armed trawler accompanied by two fishing boats had picked up 100 others. The work of compiling the list of those saved is progressing slowly because of the indescribable confusion at Queenstown. But apparently few first cabin passengers are among the survivors.

The United States consul at that port can account for only 51 Americans saved out of 188 who were aboard. His roll does not include the names of Alfred Gyynne Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, Elbert Hubbard, Justus Miles Forman, the author, or Charles Klein, the playwright. Of these Americans 106 were in the first cabin; 65 in second and 17 in the steerage.

First Cabin Last To Leave.

The heavy loss of life among the first cabin passengers is believed to have been due to the calmness and self-possession they displayed in face of danger. Most of them were at luncheon when the steamer received her death blow and declined to join the rush for the boats and life belts. They believed the Cunarder would remain afloat until assistance could arrive. A considerable proportion of those at Queenstown are members of the crew, including Captain Turner with the first and second officers. All the other officers are believed to have perished.

There is no evidence, however, that the time honored rule of the sea, "women and children first" was violated. At least one of the survivors, a Toronto newspaperman, gives evidence that there was no panic among the crew and that the sailors acted promptly in getting the passengers into the ship's boats.

Apparently every precaution had been taken against a surprise attack by a submarine. Lookouts were on the alert constantly as the giant steamship speeded toward the Irish coast. Difficulty was experienced in launching the boats because of the heavy list of the Lusitania almost immediately after she was torpedoed. Several of the frail craft evidently capsized as they were launched, or soon afterwards.

Many of the passengers owed their rescue to life belts, which kept them afloat until they were picked up by boats. Among this number was Lady Mackworth, daughter of David T. Thomas, the Welsh "coal king", and Julian De Ayala, Cuban consul general at Liverpool.

Had No Warning.

Investigation has failed to reveal that the steamer was given warning of the proposed attack by the submarine, which appears to have been lurking off the Irish coast bent upon destroying the largest and fastest ship engaged in trans-Atlantic traffic.

The lookouts sighted the periscope of a submersible 1,000 yards away and the next instant they saw the trail left by a torpedo as it flashed on its course. Then came a terrific crash as the missile pierced the liner's side, followed almost immediately by another, which littered the decks with wreckage.

The course of the liner was at once turned towards shore. Four torpedoes apparently were fired at the Lusitania, but only two of them found their mark.

The loss of life caused by the torpedoes themselves, and the explosions they caused, must have been terribly heavy. The tragic freight of bodies taken to Queenstown bears evidence of the havoc wrought. Many of those taken ashore were seriously injured and more than a score died after they were removed to Cork and Queenstown hospitals.

A long line of stretcher bearers marched from the piers as tugs and trawlers arrived. The people of the Irish city opened their homes to those who had been saved and everything possible is being done for their comfort.

Probably no event of the war has caused such intense excitement in London as the sinking of the Lusitania. Enormous crowds surrounded offices of the Cunard line all night, scanning anxiously the bulletins received from Queenstown. The company announced that an accurate list of survivors would be compiled as speedily as possible, but that the immediate needs of those saved were being given first attention.

Queenstown, May 8, (via London)—The various craft that yesterday went out from here to the scene of the Lusitania disaster, returned to Queenstown last night and early this morning. All of them brought survivors in greater or lesser number. It is now estimated here that 600 will be the outside number of those saved. No trace has been found of either Alfred G. Vanderbilt or Charles Frohman.

The latest rescue boats to arrive are bringing mostly bodies of the dead picked up from the water at the scene of the disaster. The dead now here number 124 and many of them are women.

The naval and military authorities of Queenstown are rendering every assistance possible in the removal of dead and in assisting the injured to hospitals. The manager of the Cunard line has taken ample hotel accommodations, as well as rooms in lodging houses, and here the surviving are being sent. Queenstown has never witnessed such a scene before. The dead are being conveyed to morgues and undertaking establishments and numbers of motor cars have been brought into service to take the injured to hospitals. The less serious injured are being helped ashore by sailors and soldiers. Both men and women rescued. If they are able to walk refuse to remain in their hotels. They haunt the docks, waiting and watching for friends and relatives.

Many of the survivors are still bewildered from their terrible experience and their accounts of the sinking of the Lusitania are not entirely clear. It is to be noted however, that one and all unite in eulogizing the manner in which the ship's officers behaved. Five minutes after the Lusitania was hit with the second torpedo amidships, she had listed to such an extent that the lifeboats on one side could not be launched at all. The work of getting as many people as possible, for the most part women and children, into the lifeboats that could be got clear was at once undertaken by the captain and officers and men of the Lusitania, and performed efficiently and with heroism.

The scene as the big liner went down is described by the survivors as heart-rending beyond words. Battling for life, the passengers called to relatives or friends or bid each other goodby. The small boats which had gotten away from the side of the liner picked up a good many survivors, who with life belts or clinging to wreckage, were floating on the surface of the water. But soon the boats were all crowded. Those boats were in turn picked up by rescuing steamers coming at full speed from shore points, but in many cases four or more hours elapsed before rescuers reached the scene. In many cases the only work left for the rescue workers to do was to collect from the water the floating bodies of the dead. Several passengers were taken aboard trawlers severely injured, only to die before they could be transferred ashore.

SAVED BY A "HUNCH."

Boston, May 8.—A premonition of disaster was responsible for the fact that Edward B. Bowen, a wealthy shoe dealer, whose name appears on the "list of saloon cabin passengers who sailed on the Lusitania," heard reports at his home in Newton of the disaster to the liner. "Friday night," he explained, "a feeling grew upon me that something was going to happen on the Lusitania. I talked it over with Mrs. Bowen and decided to cancel passage."

RESCUE BOAT SWAMPED.

Dublin, May 8.—The motorboat, Elizabeth, has arrived at Kinsale and reports that at 3 30 o'clock yesterday afternoon she picked up two lifeboats containing 63 and 16 survivors of the Lusitania, respectively. A Cork tug took the rescued to Queenstown. They were mostly women and children. The passengers said that, owing to her list to port, the Lusitania could not launch many of her lifeboats.

188 AMERICANS ON BOARD.

New York, May 8.—There were 188 American passengers in all aboard the Lusitania, according to a compilation made late yesterday at the Cunard offices. The British numbered 956, and other nationalities made up the remainder of the 1,253 passengers aboard.

BULLETINS.

BATTERIES SILENCED.

Paris, May 8.—A dispatch from Tenedos to the Havas agency says that although the bombardment of the Dardanelles forts is being continued by the allied fleet, all of the Turkish batteries as far up the straits as Nagara, at the end of the narrows nearest Constantinople, have ceased firing and apparently have been destroyed.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system witho t results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

Elbert Bede Says:

To man love comes after business—if they can help it.

The country that has good roads is on the highway of success.

The worst children, of course, are the ones that aren't yours.

Some people gather knowledge with the brain, others with the nose.

Everyone is inclined to give the industrious, honest man, a fair show.

The greatest trouble some people have is listening to the troubles others have.

We suspicion that some parents lay the plans for the elopement to save all the expense and trouble of a regular wedding.

Some wives act as if they would be the most surprised persons on earth if someone would tell them how crooked their husbands are.

Nearly every family has kin that they refer to with a kind of awe and others that they don't refer to at all to pretty profitable business.

It is hardly wise to form conclusions on a man upon what his wife says about him—whether her remarks are lauatory or deragatory matters not.

If others had the same infomation upon which to base an opinion of us as we have ourselves, a lot of us would not be considered so important.

One of the easiest ways to swindle a man is to tell him that you have a proposition that you wish to present only to the hard-headed, cautious business man.

We have just discovered how woman got her name. When the Creator made her he said, "woe, man" In the transition of languages the "e" has been dropped.

An exchange speaks of new fashion sweeping scant feminine draperies to the fashion limbo That's an improvement, we suppose upon exposing the limb. Oh!

Sir Thomas Lipton is a pretty shrewd business man even if he does spend a million on a single boat race He's got his own way of getting free advertising and has never asked for a line of it.

LEAD ARSENATE IS EFFECTIVE FOR ALL BITING INSECTS

For a garden and orchard spray for biting insects, arsenate of lead is as effective as paris green and is less likely to harm the foliage. It also sticks well to the leaves. Lead arsenate may be prepared at home and is less expensive than the commercial brands. However, sometimes the home mixture is not altogether successful, due generally to impure materials purchased. By carefully following this formula of the Iowa experiment station, arsenate of lead may be prepared satisfactorily.

Lead asetate (sugar of lead), 30 ounces. Sodium arsenate, 12 ounces. Water or spray mixture, 50 gallons. Dissolve each separately in a small quantity of water, a gallon apiece will do, mix and dilute to 50 gallons with water If used in water alone the precipitate is more finely divided if the lead acetate solution is first diluted to 25 gallons or more, then the solution of sodium arsenate added and the whole diluted to 60 gallons The sodium arsenate dissolves in water quite readily

Lead acetate dissolves rather slowly, so it is well to dissolve it several hours before it is to be used. It dissolves more readily if a little acetic acid is added to the water

Sentiment In Newspaper

We recently looked in a newspaper expecting to see an account of how a young man had gone wrong. Not a line about the young man could be found. A broken hearted wife or relatives had gone to the editor and asked him to say nothing and the tears had won the promise from him We have gone through the same thing ourselves many times. An editor is human he has his likes and dislikes; he loves and he hates; his strength between love and duty is just like that of the average citizen. We remember one case in particular. We had let a certain thing go by because a tearful mother, bowed down with grief, had come to us and begged the favor. A big headed man jumped on us about it and called us a coward for so doing. A short time afterward the shadow fell across his threshold, and he came running and begging us to say nothing. "Yes" we replied, "but don't you remember the time when you called me a coward for keeping still?" "I know," he replied, "but I was wrong. It is different now." And we listened to him. There are things an editor cannot supress. There are other things that he cannot forget with propriety. As far as we are concerned, we would rather lessen the grief of a parent than throw out a morsel for the gossiping people to feed upon. We would rather wipe the tears from the eyes of a mother than to have "nerve" enough to join the heartless crowd of lying tongues and sink the iron deeper into her tender soul. So when in this neighboring paper we failed to find what we wanted, we made no comment. Set down deep in our heart we admired the editor and thought more of him, because he had a heart that was tender and he would rather listen to the jibes of an unfeeling public than the sobs of a broken hearted mother, wife and sister.—Ex.

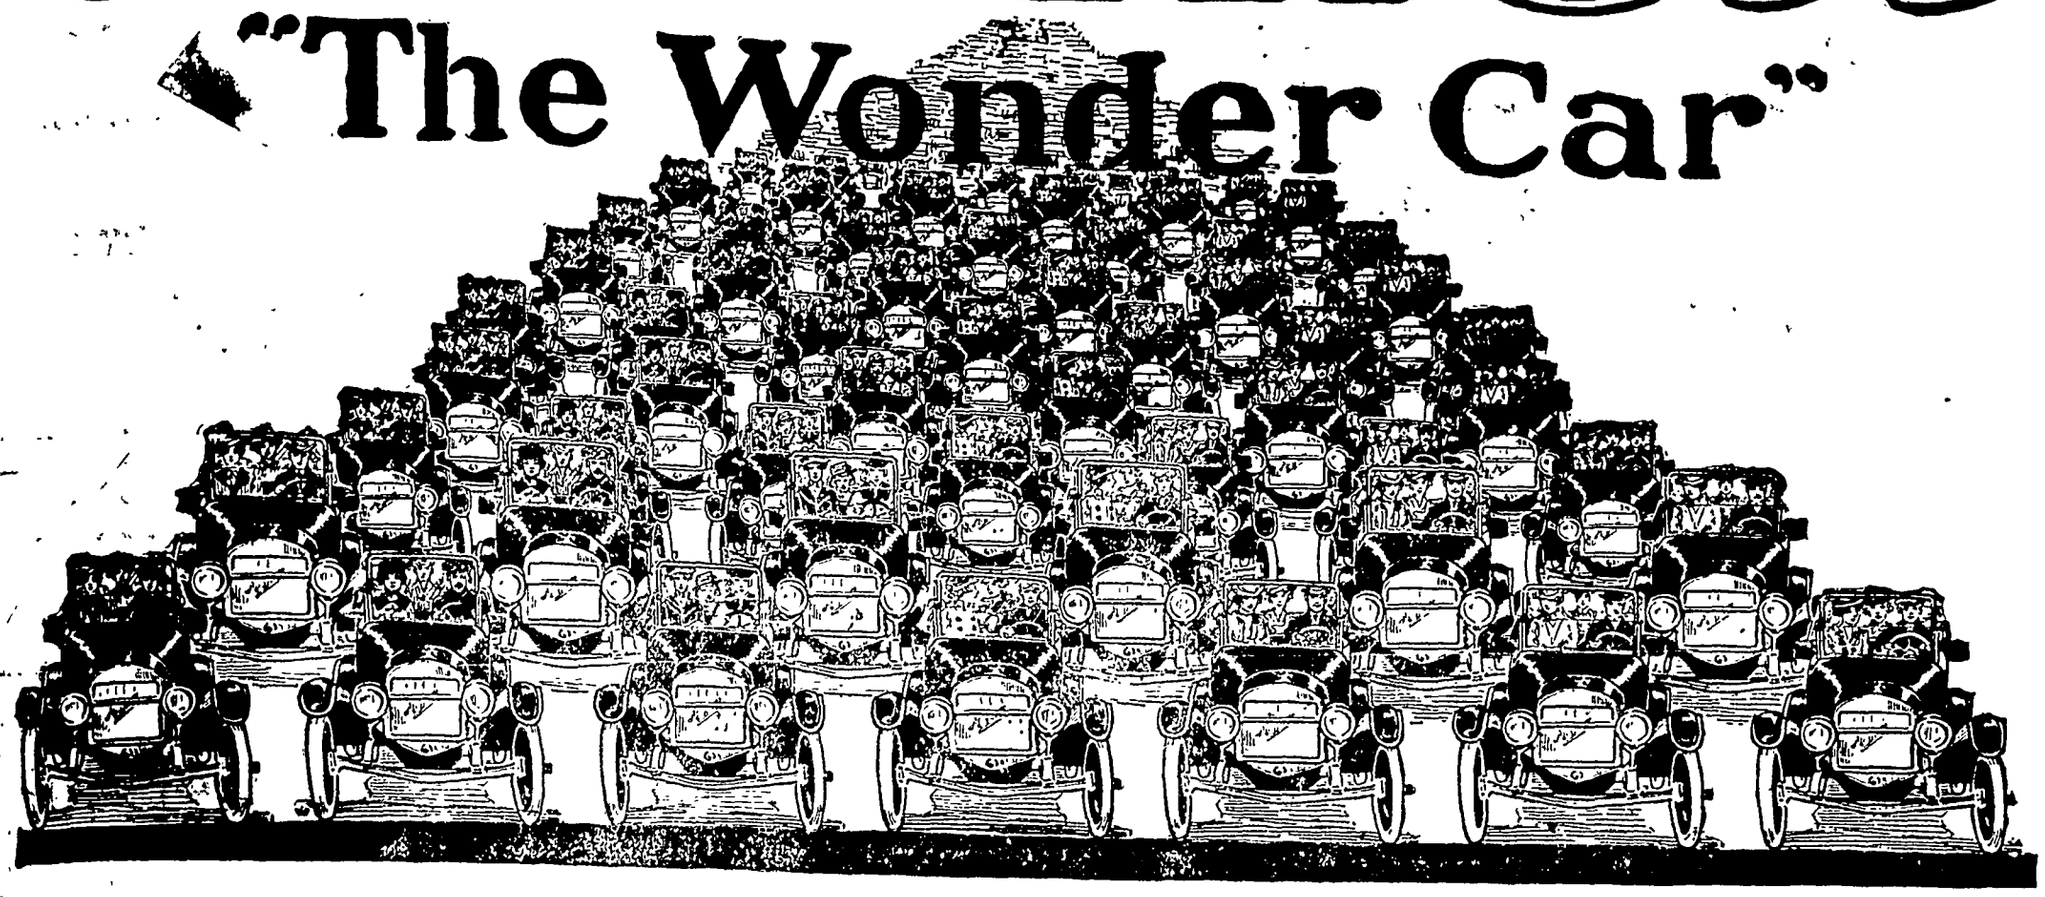
Maxwell

"The Wonder Car"



38,000 owners have given the "acid test" to 38,000 Maxwells in the last 18 months

Every car made in the gigantic Maxwell factories is just as finely finished, just as handsome an automobile as if it were especially made to be exhibited at the New York Automobile Show, or some dealer's fancy Showrooms.

BUT—and here is a great big BUT—38,000 of these Maxwell Cars have actually been turned out and have actually been driven thousands of miles by 38,000 Maxwell owners. These owners have driven their Maxwells up hill and down hill—over all kinds of country roads and over city streets, everywhere that four wheels will go.

Most of these 38,000 Maxwells have been rained on, snowed on, and put to every kind of a rough and tumble test that time and use can give a car—and that's what we mean by the "Acid Test."

If you have any neighbors among these 38,000 happy owners, ask them to tell you all about their experience with their Maxwells.

If you don't happen to know any neighbors who own Maxwells, here are a few facts to think about—things to consider—then you can come in and see this "Wonder Car" and add up these facts for yourself.

But don't forget this—the Maxwell we will show you is an exact duplicate of these 38,000 tried and true Maxwells that have stood the rough and tumble "Acid Test."

And Here Are Some Vital Points to Think Of

Satisfaction and Service in a Nutshell

To the automobile owner satisfaction and service means a car of beauty, refinement and comfort combined. One that possesses the many conveniences, is easy and simple to operate, properly designed and constructed of the best materials and whose operative cost is very low. He wants motor car efficiency and maximum service.

All This Has Been Accomplished in the Maxwell

Through the high ideals and standards, wonderful engineering genius, remarkable resources and the accumulated experiences gleaned from years of automobile experience, the Maxwell organization have accomplished what a few years ago many said was impossible.

The Maxwell is Not the Result of an Experiment

It was not luck or the result of an experiment on the public, but good hard business judgment that made the Maxwell of to-day possible.

Able engineers spent months designing this powerful, efficient, light-weight car. The best metallurgists in the world's famous laboratory (the Maxwell's own plant) tested materials and formulated new heat treatment that gave this car a remarkable light weight and yet the great strength which it possesses and which stands all the abuse heaped upon owner-driven cars.

It was real genius that gave to the Maxwell the powerful motor that enables Maxwell owners to go wherever four wheels will travel, over all roads, up all grades, through any sand, any mud.

Beauty and Comfort as well as Strength

And Maxwell builders added to this "wonder car," not only all the conveniences, power and durability, but also the refinements and beautiful lines of the much higher priced cars. Pure stream lines, crown fenders, fine upholstering and all the little details that make Maxwell owners proud of their car.

Every Feature of Mechanical Construction

Every feature of mechanical construction that is to be found in cars selling at many times its price will be found in the Maxwell. And in addition there are many mechanical features that are strictly of Maxwell design. How we have improved the lamps, made them rattle-proof by using extra braces and eliminated the hinges, made them dust-proof, easy to clean and adaptable to use in any desired position; the manner in which we have protected one of the best radiators that money can buy from the many twists and strains of the car, in fact, constructed a full floating radiator—the way in which Maxwell has provided for proper lubrication and thorough cooling of the motor and has given one square inch of braking service for every twelve pounds of weight; how our engineers have equipped Maxwell cars with a spring tension fan that adjusts itself to any pressure on the belt, makes the "Wonder."

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. More than 2,000 Maxwell dealers—in every part of this country—are always ready to give expert advice, to make adjustments, and to supply new parts at reasonable prices. This splendid Maxwell dealer service organization is perfected and completed by the chain of Maxwell owned and Maxwell operated Service Branches. Sixteen great Maxwell Service Stations are so located throughout the country that a Maxwell dealer can supply any part for an owner within a few hours if not in his stock. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Order a Maxwell from us now, and when you want it delivered, we will give you your car—not an excuse on delivery day

Military Funerals.

It is not universally known what is meant by a funeral "with full military honors." In such a funeral the body is borne on a gun carriage. If the dead soldier was a cavalryman his sword and helmet are fastened to the pommel of his horse, which is led behind the gun-carriage, with spurs attached, stirrups, with the toes turned backwards. A firing party, double, from the deceased's regiment, fires three volleys over the grave, and the "Last Post" is then sounded by buglers.

Beauty in Righteous Acts.

Postponement of a righteous act is never right. The sooner we sow the seeds of love, the sooner we begin to reap the bountiful harvest of happiness and joy. The sooner we give to the world the best we have, the sooner the best will begin to come back to us—if not in visible material things, then in what is much to be desired—spiritual and mental delights.—Unknown.

Persistent.

The croaker generally has little to say, but is willing to keep on saying it.—Indianapolis Star.

Their Days of Fate.

Certain days of the week or month have constantly been marked ones in some persons' lives. Nearly all the chief events of Thomas a'Becket's career, including his murder and the translation of his body, occurred upon a Tuesday. Henry VIII and his three children—Edward, Mary and Elizabeth—expired upon the same day of the week—Thursday.

An Ideal Man.

An ideal husband is one who remains unconscious of the fact that his wife is growing stout.—Topeka Capital.

Ungracious Papuans.

Papua is the largest island in the world, if one classes Australia as a continent and disregards the vague lands of the polar regions. It is a fertile and blooming realm. It has climate in variety to suit almost anyone. But it is inhabited by simioid anthropophagi with a rather ungracious distaste for Europeans.

Cleans Paint and Varnish.

Here is a good way to clean painted and varnished surfaces: To half a bucketful of warm water add a tablespoonful of salts of tartar; wash the paints with a rag dipped in this, and it will remove every speck of dirt. Rinse in clear warm water and dry with a chamois.

Peter the Great.

What Alfred the Great is to early Britain, that Peter the Great, in his crude way, is to Russia. If ever a race of people found adequate expression in one person, that race was the Slavic race in their great czar.—Century.

Lubricating Troubles

The Standard Oil Company is making a motor oil that has done away with all common lubricating troubles

Seven years ago their experts used this new but tested oil on the market 1,100 gallons were sold the first year. Then motorists found it out.

1909's demand was for 335,000 gallons—1910's was for 1,118,400. In 1914 nearly 7,000,000 gallons were used in the Middle West alone

Polarine has gained in sales an average of a million gallons yearly simply because its use eliminated the annoyance and delays incident to unsuitable lubricating oils. Hundreds of thousands of good cars have been saved from the scrap heap by its use Use it in your motor See what it does Polarine maintains the correct lubricating body at every motor speed and temperature.

It is produced by experts, with the help of perfect facilities, in the largest plant of its kind in the world.

WORK TO BEGIN AT ONCE ON UNCLE SAM'S RAILROAD IN ALASKA; NEW LINE WILL RUN FROM SEA 416 MILES INLAND TO FAIRBANKS

© HARRIS-EWING

W. C. Edes, government engineer who will be in immediate charge of the building of the new government railroad in Alaska, is already on his way to the far north, where he will begin work on the road at once. In the accompanying map the dotted line shows the proposed construction, including the branch to the Matanuska coal road. The heavy black line shows the road already built from Seward to Turnagain Bay. The Copper River & Northwestern Railway, which forms a part of the rejected route from Cordova, also is indicated on the map.

GERMANY WANTS MUCH IN CASE OF VICTORY

Berlin Official Says Nothing Would Be Left to Allies—Would Ask Huge Indemnity.

Berlin, (by mail)—A picture of Europe completely reorganized, with Germany and her allies dominating everything and levying upon their fallen rivals a tribute of from 120 to 150 milliards of marks ($30,000,000,000 to $36,000,000,000) is drawn by Rudolph Martin, former minister of the interior of Germany in a pamphlet entitled "The World War and Its End" that has just been issued

The huge indemnity which the author believes will be demanded by Germany when she dictates peace terms in London, after two years of fighting, is estimated on the basis of war costs of 30 milliards of marks, to be sustained by Germany, Austria and Turkey, in the proportion of 16 10 and 4 respectively

As Germany at the end of the Franco-Prussian war made the French pay two and one-half times what it cost to conduct the conflict so, the writer believes, Germany will make the allies pay similarly at the end of the present war In addition 75 milliards will be demanded for the support of dependents of those killed

The writer sees Germany firmly established along the present French coast in a position to control both London and Paris and possessed of an air fleet of many thousands of machines and 20,000 airmen He sees England forced to consent to the construction of a tunnel under the English channel, equipped with four railway tracks and an automobile roadway at both ends of which the German forces are in control

Russia Dismembered.

Russia he pictures as completely dismembered, its territory divided up among neighboring powers, its coffers depleted to the point of bankruptcy, its menace to the German empire forever gone. In the process of dismemberment he predicts the organization of new states.

Sweden, the author believes, will receive Finland Germany the Baltic provinces and Poland. Austria will take the entire south of Russia, including Kiev and Odessa Turkey will receive the entire Caucausus, including the government of Saratow. Russia will have to retire both from the Baltic, the Black and the Caspian seas

Servia is to go to Austria-Hungary, Egypt to Turkey a part of Arabia to Rumania, provided the latter allies itself sincerely with Germany, Austria and Turkey, and every other state which similarly joins this group will be properly rewarded.

Not only does Alsace-Lorraine remain German, but Belfort is to join it once more as a German possession. Belgium not only becomes German along with the Congo, but is to pay an indemnity of 6¼ milliards of francs within a few years of the close of the war

Regarding the disposition of the colonial possessions of the allies the writer goes into little detail, beyond stipulating that England and France must lose Egypt, India, Algiers, Tunis and Morocco, as penalty for inducing their inhabitants to bear arms against Germany.

Suez Canal to Turks.

The Suez canal the writer sees permanently in the hands of "our ally, Turkey" After the conclusion of peace he hopes English ships, instead of longer paying tolls into the pocket of the English owned Suez Canal company, will have to pay them to "our ally Turkey"

The heavy indemnities proposed, the writer frankly says are for the purpose of so weakening Germany's enemies that it will be years before they can even contemplate war against her again. They are supplemented by taxation and military system from present Belgium to the new Russian border that will strengthen Germany indefinitely

He would establish as one of the most important basic principles of the governments of the conquered provinces that every young man who, according to the rules laid down in the German empire, is capable of bearing arms shall serve in the army For the Pole, he suggests service in Erfurt, and for the Frenchmen from Calais or Belfort, as well as the Belgian, service in Bavaria or Wurtemburg The garrisons in Poland, Frence and Belgium, meanwhile, he believes should be made up of seasoned Prussian, Saxon or Bavarian troops.

With the historical example of Luxemburg as a precedent, the writer prescribes that the taxation laws of the empire shall apply to the conquered territory quite as much as the military rules.

Binding Twine Problem.

From the Iowa Farmer

The most interesting problem that confronts the farmers of America just at this time is the binding twine outlook But, you say why should farmers worry over that proposition" Will not the International Harvester company and other big concerns take care of that" And what about the penitentiaries in several states that are manufacturing large quantities of it, will they not afford an abundance?

Well, the answer to such questions all depends upon Mexico The average citizen has not thought much about our dependence upon that country for anything, but here we are absolutely helpless as far as binding twine is concerned except as we can procure the usual supply of sisal from our rebellious neighbor on the south

The government has taken cognizance of a condition of unusual moment by ordering a warship to chaperon some big ocean vessels to Yucatan that they may bring to this country a large shipment of sisal grass that is ready for the American market. Every year we import from that country sisal grass enough to make 200,000,000 pounds of twine That enabled binding twine factories to furnish a needed supply to grain growers in this country But we are confronted with another peculiar condition on account of the big demand for wheat made by the European war and the high prices that prevail an unusually large acreage has been sown It is announced that there are 62,000,000 acres sown to winter wheat Hitherto the biggest wheat crop ever grown in this country ran around 50,000,000 acres The increase in spring wheat acreage is estimated at 3,000,000 acres Add this to the increase in winter wheat acrage and the total reaches about 24 per cent Last year's big wheat crop cleaned up about all of the surplus twine on the market and with the increase this season the tax on binding twine production is going to be enormous

It is going to take all of the available supply of sisal from Mexico, the West Indies and the Philippines and then some The war in Mexico has seriously crippled the production of the sisal plant, or at least the harvesting of it Last year we got from that country 190,000 tons of sisal grass and we imported 20,461 tons from elsewhere making 210,547 tons The year before our imports were 133,869 tons, and 214,567 tons in 1912-13 Last year our sisal imports were 60 per cent higher than the average of the two years before Corn binding by machinery is greatly increasing the demand Western provinces of Canada should this year have 13,000,000 acres in wheat and as much in oats and barley

With all of this vast increase in the grain producing acreage and the possible restriction of raw material from which binding twine is made it no only means a shortage of binding material but it also means a sharp advance in the price

The Wonderful French Soldier.

Frederick Palmer in Collier's Weekly

How completely war has revealed the nature of the different peoples Its lightning flashes throw national characteristics on the screen in vivid outline

The pity of it is that it took war to win back the prestige which the French had lost in war Though to no people does life mean more than to the thrifty French, no soldiers were ever readier to give their lives more freely Officers could not hold back many regiments who broke away and charged often with fatal results. Young lieutenants of St Cyr, the French West Point wore their white gloves and white plumes The army insisted on its blue coat and red trousers. Sentiment, manneur, against Prussian hard headedness

The French had contempt for trenches. They wanted to go at the enemy in the open and not to "dig in" So it is with American soldiers They, too, are impatient of burrowing and lying still.

"Let's go after them" as I've often heard our men say "Allons" say the French When in doubt a Frenchman charges so does an American The French either want to get out of their trench and go to meet the enemy's attack or evacuate the trench When they do evacuate it, they may take it back an hour later with a whirlwind attack. This puzzles the British, who light another pipe and hold on—and are not as quick to go either way as the French.

"Here was a thing only the French could do," a British officer told me. "When the Germans were massed on a road and deploying for attack, down that road through the French infantry came a French battery hell-for-leather on the gallop They swung around in line without taking their guns from their horses. Their guns were already loaded. Evidently they knew exactly the range they would have to fire They had calculated the time they would take to reach the spot where they began firing and how far the Germans would be advanced at that moment Bang! Bang! Bang! they poured in the shells which tore up the charge and stopped it. Then hell-for-leather they galloped away They seemed to have calculated, too, how long it would take the German guns to get into action, for they had hardly gone when German shells began to break over the place where they had been Only the French could do that"

Whenever I think of the French army I think of the power of democracy Whenever I think of the German army I think of its magnificent machinery of organization with the sun shining on the eagle of the war lord's helmet and the brave, willing soldiers who accept as law his word spoken through his commanders.

Whenever I think of the British army I see the tall, long-legged, aristocratic officer and Mr Thomas Atkins, regular, taken from the scum of the streets and drilled into a soldier who will stick until that officer tells him to go. Character—character—the stubborn English character.

Did Not Want Vengeance.

From the Dayton News.

The papers are full of human interest stories pertaining to war, in fact, one grows weary reading them But here is one that is a little different, for it shows that in this old world all is not hate—that there are those who do not seek revenge

It seems that a certain English woman had a husband on board the Goodhope that was sunk by the Germans in the South seas—thereby becoming a widow, without a soul on earth to fight her battles for her She and her husband had been very devoted, and it was naturally believed she would rejoice to know that the enemy which sank the ship upon which her husband had lost his life had been sent to the bottom of the sea. So a neighbor who had learned the news of the sinking of the ship off the Falkland islands, rushed over to the widow to tell her "the good news."

"That only means more sorrow," said the widow. And she refused to rejoice at the death of those who had made her a widow. She even went further, and said that if she could obtain the names of the widows of the sailors who had been destroyed, she would write to them and extend her sympathy.

It is a little story, it is true, and amounts to nothing in the great world-sorrow that is upon us. But it tends to show that there are those who have not vengeance in their heart. Would not the Nazarene use just such stories if He were on earth today?

THE LAST OF THE STRONG YOUNG MEN

Ernest Poole in Saturday Evening Post.

Two million men, I was told in Berlin, from 16 to 21, had already volunteered. Fifteen thousand boys of 16 were already at the front Impressions like these kept piling in, until in this hub of the nation I felt an ominous constant drain, day by day and week by week, of the last of the strong young men.

I felt a deep anxiety and a steady, grim resolve It was not so much. "We are sure to win." The phrase I heard more often was "We are fighting for our country's life." By degrees I got a feeling such as I've never had before—the feeling of a city united for one purpose, bound together by one question. "Is it to be life or death?"

At all hours, day and night, I saw troops march by on their way to the trains I met one small company late at night—200 recruits in citizens' clothes with sachels and small boxes, heavy boots strung over their shoulders. One of them was leading a shaggy little dog by a chain, perhaps the company mascot. I saw a whole regiment march along, an hour before daybreak, in a cold, dense rain. They were in full field equipment The street was empty except for one girl. Holding an umbrella over the baby in her arms, she hurried along beside one of the soldiers I caught a glimpse of her face as she passed, and she looked terribly alone.

I remember one day when I too fell in line I heard the approaching boom of drums, and down the street came a solid mass of men, women and children blocking the way from wall to wall. The music broke out with a crash, and now in the center of the throng I saw tall, husky German boys of from 18 to 24, come swinging along in marching step. There were flowers in their helmets, flowers even in their guns Some of these guns were carried by wives and others by young girls and boys, and one by an eager old woman who hurried along by a man in the ranks. Most of these women were laughing or smiling. A Red Cross wagon went ahead

I had often marched to a band, but never with men so soon to die. Despite all one's natural common sense something seemed to swell and rise with the regular tramp, tramp of thick boots, and the steady look in the faces of these simple German youngsters. These were not the men who made treaties or broke them, but only the men from the fields and mines, the mills and shops and factories—simply the men who were going to die.

By my side marched a little shaver not more than 8 years old, taking prodigious strides to keep up. Every now and then, like me, he would look at those rows of motionless faces, steady eyes, and as the music crashed and boomed the look on his face grew more and more tense Suddenly, eyes radiant, the little chap burst into tears.

When the Crows Mobilize.

Walter Prichard Eaton in Harper's Magazine.

The crows are masters of mobilization. Such mobilizations have frequently been investigated. Usually they prove to be for the attack on some enemy.

Thoreau speaks of the crows "bursting up above the woods where they were perching, like the black fragments of a powder mill just exploded." When they are gathered for war purposes their cries will lead you to the spot where they are fighting, and these same bursts of black fragments above the trees, usually following an especial uproar of cawing, will direct you to the center of the battle.

Walter King Stone, the illustrator, and Charles Livingston Bull have told me of a mobilization they once witnessed, when the crows gathered for hours and the two observers were able to penetrate the woods to the exact spot beneath the feathered explosions. There they found a great horned owl, flying low in the trees, with a dead crow in his talons. Whether this was the original cause of the battle, or whether he had grabbed the crow in one of the descents of the birds about his head, they, of course, could not say. He was evidently struggling to find a dead tree where he could take refuge. He was saved probably by the coming of night.

Crows have even been known to attack foxes, as Winslow Homer's painting is the most famous witness.

A farmer near my home, who has observed crows for many years and has the reputation of knowing more about them than anyone else in the neighborhood, tells me that almost invariably in his experience the cause of a large mobilization is either a big owl or a hawk. The little screech owls are also attacked, but by lesser numbers. He has also personally seen the crows attack a fox, while it was crossing an open field, and once he watched a flock of nearly 100 crows worrying a Skye terrier dog, which was so thoroughly frightened that it was running in circles. I have seen crows attack a cat also, but the cat always is wise enough to make for cover.

FIND OUT
The Kind of Food that will Keep Well.

The true way is to find out what best to eat and drink, and then cultivate a taste for those things instead of poisoning ourselves with impure indigestible food, etc.

A conservative Mass woman says:

"I have used Grape-Nuts 5 years for the young and for the aged; for fulness and in health; at first followed directions carefully, later in a few of ways as my taste and judgment suggested.

"But its most special, personal benefit has been as a substitute for coffee and served dry with cream when stomatic troubles made it important for me to change diet.

"Served in this way with the addition of a cup of hot Postum and a little fruit it has been used at my noon meal for six months, during which time my health has much improved, nerves have grown steadier, and the gradual decrease in my excess weight adds greatly to my comfort.

"Eric," he said at last, abject weariness in his voice, I am about to ask a great favor of you Will you let this matter rest for awhile I don't know what came over me It was not like anything that ever has happened to me before not in all my life I seem to have gone utterly out of my head Wait' Please do not speak Listen to me I am about to confess something to you When you first came into this room and said that that Chetwynd had taken your drawing I felt that you spoke the truth I do not know why I should believe this of my own son but but I was no more able to help it than it was in my power to check the working of my mind The horrible ill of anger the dreadful language, I cannot explain I do not understand myself Wait Yes I do understand It was because I knew that you knew It was because there was no one else on whom I could cast my rage and shame I hated you Eric in those few moments You will never know how I hated you Perhaps you can make stand why I wanted to be proud of Chetwynd You struck that price deadly blow You were responsible for my awakening I cried out as the sleeper does when he is rudely disturbed from serenity of peaceful slumber I cried out in anger against the awakening I wanted to kill you It was in my heart to do so I love Chetwynd He is all that life holds for me Do you follow me"

"Yes, sir," said Eric, still in a maze

"It is not too late for me to save him. He shall not go down By God he shall be a man I will lift him up I will force him up He shall not falter again I have never failed in any undertaking I will not fail in this He must be absolved There is no alternative He must stand right with the world, with me and with himself Now listen to me Don't let a word escape you I thought it all out as I lay there on the couch You can ruin him perhaps or at least cast discredit on him It is my duty to prevent that very thing happening You have got to let this matter rest"

"But, uncle" began Eric

Mr Blagden came a few steps nearer Even in the dim light Eric could see the exalted light in his eyes

"There is no alternative He must be spared so that I may help him while my hand is strong while my love is great and capable of generosity I shall have to ask you to say nothing about this until I have talked it over with him There may be some mistake I may be wrong in my conclusions God knows that I hope I am I would give all that I possess if I could be sure that you have lied to me, if I could drive out of my mind that first revolting doubt But it has taken root the seed of distrust is well sown I doubt my son I can only hope that his side of the story may not be so dark as I fear It There may be extenuating circumstances A great hope took root in his soul and he voiced it It is not improbable that you tried to profit by his ideas You may be as culpable as he is in an indirect way Stop Do not defend yourself It isn't necessary I am merely theorizing I recall that the two designs, as presented are along the same general lines the same thought is expressed I noted a similarity He may have been justified in keeping you from tenifizing on his ideas and his experience If he discovered in any way that you being a better draughtsman than he concluded to benefit by his ideas after coming into possession of them, either innocently or maliciously

Eric's indignation burst its bounds

"You know that isn't true Uncle Horace he cried out I never saw his design, I never talked with him about it"

"What are you going to say if he declares that you did like" began Mr. Blagden harshly

But he could not deceive himself He bit his lip and turned his face away for an instant

"No, Eric,' he went on in an altered tone, "I won't put it that way I am about to bare myself to you and it is best that we should understand each other"

He paced back and forth across the room several times his brow knitted his hands clasped tightly behind his back.

Eric felt a sudden keen sense of jubiliation "Are you going to have Mr Presbrey talk it over with him" he asked.

Mr Blagden stopped in his tracks and starred at the questioner

"No," he said bringing his lips together in a thin line This is not a matter for Presbrey at least not at present My boy I am desperate quite desperate I don't know why I should believe this thing you have told me as I said before but I do believe it I am convinced that your drawing has won the prize that goes to Chetwynd I don't know how it all came about He may not have been wholly responsible but the fact remains that the drawing is yours I am a fair man I grant that it is your design But above all things, I am a Blagden The name has been dragged in the dust by one member of the family your mother That, of course, is something you could not have helped But you can help me now in the effort to keep it from being further dishonored I shall expect you to do so. It is hard, I appreciate, for you to sit calmly and see the prize go to another under the conditions. But that my boy, is just what you will have to do."

He spoke slowly, emphasising each word with a sort of snapping of his tongue as the breath escaped from the confinement of his throat

"What do you mean?" asked Eric, perplexed.

"Just this the situation must remain as it is. You have nothing to lose, while I, your aunt, even Chetwynd—ah we have so much to lose But three people know of this, I fancy—we three. Unless—ah, but I am sure you could not have been such a fool as to say anything to Mr. Porter before consulting me. I can see by your face that you did go so far as that"

"You mean," said Eric, in low, unsteady tones, "that I am to let Chetwynd have the prize without a word for myself?"

"Yes. That, and nothing else."

"But I will not submit to—"

"You will do just as I say, sir" said his uncle calmly. "As I have said before, it is for the good of the family. We must think of that, you and I, as we—"

"Why should I think of your family" cried Eric recklessly "Your's never though of mine You and Mr Presbrey have read my mother and father into hell fire You haven't left me anything to be grateful for I won't

"Stop, sir' Not another word. The uncle contaminated' An hour before he would not have believed it possible But now' Where would it end? How far would an ill-wind carry that hitherto unswerving craft out of its established course? What was Horace Blagden's estimate of himself to be as time gave it a chance to develop?

As for the tall, gaunt man who strode beside him, what were his thoughts' What must they have been, to drag down his shoulders in this way and to lower a chin that never had drooped before?

They entered the gate in the stone wall guarding the sanctity of the grey house on the hill Not until then did Horace Blagden give sign of the thoughts that were burning in his brain He stopped checking Eric with a word

It did seem to me, Eric on seeing the two drawings, that the one bearing your name was crudely done I could not understand it I was amazed, and I must say I was gratified Now I understand You could not possibly have made the design attributed to you But the thing that puzzles me most, is how Chetwynd, with his traing and his extra preparation for the contest, could have produced such a miserable botch He has had the best of instruction in New York I- I can't see why he did not do better"

Eric had his own private opinion, but he could not bring himself to the point of advancing it at this time Mr Blagden would find out soon enough, without his help Still, the boy could not quell the secret joy that filled his soul as he contemplated the happy times ahead of Chetwynd, and the bitter things that his uncle and aunt would have to swallow The thought of this actually revived his fallen spirits The future would pay handsomely for the present he could afford the gloom of today in view of tomorrow's glory

Perhaps he didn't consider it worth while," he explained

Horace eyed him sharply "If he did not consider it worth while, why should he have gone to the trouble to But there, we were to say no more about it He shall explain for himself We can't judge him unheard"

They went forward As they came into the shaft of light thrown out by the open hall door, the older man again stopped This time he grasped Eric's arm in a grip of iron

'Eric" he began in a low, tense voice 'you heard me say back there in the office that I could have killed you Will you be able to appreciate my state of mind when I tell you now that it was in my heart to kill you if you refused to accede to my demands in this matter? There is a revolver in my desk drawer You were not to have gone out with that awful story on your lips But that is not all It would have died there in that room, for no one would be alive to repeat it'

'What do you mean, sir'" asked Eric, a strange chill running through him He looked into the haggard face of his uncle as it stood out clearly in the light from the doorway It seemed to him that Mr. Blagden suddenly had grown very old

'I should have killed myself as well," said Horace Blagden quietly

The boy stared at him in utter amazement Suddenly it was revealed to him what all this really meant to the head of the Blagden family He was conscious of a choking sensation in his throat, there was a rush of moisture to his eyes A great, perhaps unwelcome wave of pity for the man swept over him

"It's all right now, Uncle," he murmured brokenly

As they entered the hall, Mrs. Blagden emerged from the library She sent a swift, searching glance into Eric's eyes, a glance expressing doubt, anxiety and no little antipathy

Eric smiled, a bitter, scornful little smile, the real inwardness of which she was never to grasp.

He could account for her uneasiness. He had but to go back for a few minutes to that second call on the telephone She had said to him then, in accents of real despair and dread

'You are not telling him of Chetwynd and Mary, are you? You can't be such a beast, such a dog as to forget your promise to me. If I thought you were telling him, I'd turn Mary out into the street this very minute, because I know your uncle would insist on it himself when he got home Have you breathed it to him" Speak' Why do you hesitate?"

"No, it isn't that Don't be worried, Aunt Rena," he had said.

CHAPTER VIII

WHEN FRIENDSHIP CEASES.

Chetwynd returned from New York two days later He was closeted with his father for more than two hours, emerging with the air of a whipped dog thoroughly cowed, but filled with rage against Eric Midthorne and his own father A hang dog look of defiance crept into his sullen face as the hours went by, hours that were bringing him up to the minute when he would have to face Eric in the library, just before the dinner hour, in accordance with the edict pronounced by his father

Friendship In Politics.

From the Dayton News.

John H Myers, who recently made the race for mayor of Oklahoma City, is either a humorist of is extremely wise in the ways of the world—and politics Certainly he is philosophical, for he says that since the primary 650 people have told him that they voted for him, whereas he received less than 100 votes, and adds "Still I do not question the results."

In filing his statement of expense, after the election, he puts down an item of $5, which he says he gave to "moochers," meaning thereby the fellows who "work" candidates for whatever sum of money they can obtain "This was to get rid of them and not with the idea of getting their support," he says.

There is wisdom—"to get rid of them." Every man who runs for office finds it cheaper to give the "moochers" a little something than to allow them to take up his time He doesn't count in getting their support. He knows that support doesn't come from those who are most under obligations. If there is a tragedy in in American politics, it is that the people who are under obligations to a man do not vote for him Somebody went to James G. Blaine once and told him a certain man was against him. "I do not know why he should be," Blaine said, "I never did anything for him in my life." There was as fine a bit of irony as was ever expressed, but it had experience back of it. Blaine had known many men for whom he had done something, to oppose him, but he didn't know why a man for whom he had never done anything, should be against him.

If You Could Have a Perfect Day.

If you could have a perfect day
To dream of when your life were done,
Would you choose one all clear, all gay—
If you could have a perfect day—
The airs above the wide greenway
Sheer virgin blue with crystal sun?—
If you could have a perfect day
To dream of when your life were done.

Or would you have it April's way,
Haphazard rain, haphazard sun,
Divine and sordid, clear and gray,
Dyed like these hours' own work and play
All shot with stains of tears and clay,
Haphazard pain, haphazard fun—
If you could have a perfect day
To dream of when your life were done?
—Edith Wyatt, in Poetry.

LIFE WAS A TRAGEDY, SAID IOWA WOMAN

Mrs William Litzenberg of Montezuma, Iowa, suffered from stomach troubles for a long period She grew weak as a result of the failure of her digestive processes She was always tired.

Then came Mayr's Wonderful Remedy and showed her the way back to health again.

The first bottle, the very first dose, put Mrs Litzenberg on her feet She wrote:

"I have taken four bottles of your Wonderful Remedy I can't be thankful enough for it. I must say that it is the best medicine that I ever tried.

"I was so weak that I did not think life was worth living—had no appetite—everything I ate worked against me, but now I can eat anything at all that looks good I feel so strong—have been able to do a good day's work ever since I took the first bottle."

Mayr's Wonderful Remedy gives permanent results for stomach, liver and intestinal ailments Eat as much and whatever you like No more distress after eating, pressure of gas in the stomach and around the heart. His Bid.

Between the blonde young woman on the other side of the car and her stout neighbor next to the left there interposed a space of perhaps four inches in width Clinging to the strap just in front of the blonde young woman was a cheerful individual whose uncertain footing was, it seemed, not wholly due to the jolting and jerking of the common carrier, Presently he fastened an ingratiating smile upon the young woman

'Madam," he murmured, "If you'd lemme sit down in that plache there by you I'd -I'd vote for woman shuffrage"

AFTER SUFFERING TWO LONG YEARS

Mrs. Aselin Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"After my little one was born I was sick with pains in my sides which the doctors said were caused by inflammation. I suffered a great deal every month and grew very thin. I was under the doctor's care for two long years without any benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try it we got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking the third bottle of the Compound I was able to do my housework and today I am strong and healthy again. I will answer letters if anyone wishes to know about my case."—Mrs. JOSEPH ASELIN, 606 Fourth Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy we know for woman's ills. If you need such a medicine why don't you try it?

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

OBITUARY OF META SCHLAWIN

Meta was the only daughter of Wm and Gretchen Schlawin, born April 15th 1906 in Ell township. April 28th she was suddenly taken sick with appendicitis. Physicians were summoned but the inflamation had advanced too far as to allow an operation. A nurse was given care of the patient and more than a week was spent in subduing the inflamation and fever. On Sunday May 8th she was operated on by Drs Egloff of Mason City and Missman of Klemme, and it was found that she not only had appendicitis but also a severe abscess on the colon, for which she was operated on also. The double operation was successful and for two days the little girl was improving, but the next day inflammation set in again, and could not be arrested. She began to fail, and all efforts to restore her were futile, She had to endure very severe pain, of which she was relieved by death on Thursday, May 13th at 10:30 at night.

She reached to an age of 9 years and 26 days. She is survived and her untimely death mourned by her sorrow-stricken parents, two brothers, four grand parents and many relatives and friends

The funeral was held on Sunday morning, May 16th and interment made in Calvary cemetery, Klemme, Iowa.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to heartily thank the many friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us in many ways during the illness and bereavement of our beloved daughter. We also wish eo sincerely thank those who gave the many beautiful flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schlawin, and family.

A small boy went up to a soda water clerk and said:

"Give me a ptomaine cocktail."

"What's that?"

"I want a ptomaine cocktail."

"That's a new one on me. Explain what it is."

"Well, I've just escaped from my home and I can do what I like. Now, every time I have seen anything I particularly liked, my mother would say, 'No, you can't have that. It's got ptomaine in it.' And so I want a ptomaine cocktail, with all the ptomaines you can squeeze in. I'm out for the time of my life."—Life.

Captain Lawson was owner and pilot of the New Orleans. The Mississippi broke its banks. There were miles of rushing waters, says the National Monthly. Only an experienced eye could tell the channel. Captain Lawson had been at the wheel for 36 hours. He was exhausted from loss of sleep. Rastus, a colored pilot aboard, was called to the captain.

"Do you see that north star?" asked the captain.

"Yas, boss."

"Well, hold this boat on that star."

"Yas, boss."

When the captain awoke an hour later his boat was winding in and out among the trees. The captain was indignant. "I thought I told you to hold this boat on the north star?" he cried.

"Lor', boss, we done passed dat star long ergo."

The Tightwad's Advantage.

Of course the tightwad is awfully uncomfortable, but as a general thing he does not have to embarrass himself by asking his acquaintances to go on his note at the bank.—Galveston News.

KLEMME, IOWA

It has been said that we may gauge the civilization of a country by the quality of sulphuric acid it consumes. The total output of this acid is now about 5,000,000 tons, according to the fourth edition of Prof. G. Lunge's treatise on its manufacture At least 1,000,000 tons a year have been made in Germany and that country has been importing about 100,000 tons besides. Sulphuric acid is made principally from iron pyrites but also from zincblende. It is essential in the manufacture of high explosives but there is scarcely a process of manufacure into which it does not enter It is said that there is no branch of chemical technology that has been more thoroughly developed than that of the manufacture of sulphuric acid, but so keen is the competition that improvements are taking place all the time

Intercourse between Russia and England began in the middle of the Sixteenth century by the one route that is still open, via the White sea. It was a hazardous and costly voyage. The crews of two of the three ships with which Richard Chancellor made his first trip in 1553 were frozen to death, Sir Hugh Willoughby among them On his second venture in 1556 Chancellor brought back with him a Russian ambassador Osip Nejea Two of the ships were never heard of again and the Edward Bonaventura, after four months at sea, was wrecked on the Scottish coast Chancellor many of the crew and seven Russians perished but Osip Nejea was among the survivors and the English lords and merchants went out in state beyond Shoreditch to welcome this "duke of Muscovia

Large quantities of paper shirts are being supplied to the Russian army by a company in Yokohoma. Kamiko," as paper clothing is called in Japan is made of Japanese paper manufactured from mulberry barks. The paper has little "size" and is soft and warm It is very strong, and at the same time very flexible, and after being worn a few hours it offers no more interference to perspiration than ordinary cotton clothing After becoming wet the material is so strong that it can be torn only with difficulty In the manufacture of these garments, after being cut to pattern, the seams are sewed together and hemmed The buttonholes are reinforced with linen or some other fabric The material is not washable

The skin of the mole is much sought after for the manufacturers of furs, and those made use of in this country have heretofore been imported from Europe, but it is entirely likely that we will supply this demand by the home product at no distant time The biological survey of the United States has recently made some examinations into the qualities of the domestic mole for this purpose, and it has been discovered that the animal of the northeastern part of this country is superior to the foreign animal the fur being fine and having other advantages A report of the investigation has been printed and the cultivation of the mole for its fur is recommended as a profitable industry.

The origin of playing cards is uncertain although it is probable that they appeared in Europe in 1350 It is asserted, however, that the Arabs, Saracens, or Moors, introduced them into Europe by way of Spain They are said to have been brought from the country of the Saracens to Viterbo in Italy in 1379 The earliest known mention of European cards occurs in 1392. Early in the Fifteenth century the use of playing cards spread all over Europe. A duty was first placed on playing cards in England in 1615 It is estimated that 15,000 000 packs are annually manufactured in the United States.

James R Mann the republican floor leader in congress knows just how long it will take him to make a speech. SECOND TRIAL UNDER WAY AT DES MOINES FOR ASHLEY MURDER

Supreme Court Reversed Former Conviction on Questions Asked by Attorney.

Des Moines, Ia., May 15.—Alfred Thomas, convicted last fall of murder in the first degree, was placed on trial in the district court yesterday for the second time He is alleged to have murdered his fatherinlaw James W Ashley, at the latter's home, near Grimes, on August 8, 1914

Thomas was convicted by a jury in Judge De Graff's court, but the supreme court reversed the decision and remanded the case back to the Polk county courts for retrial

According to the charge against Thomas, he shot his fatherinlaw after he had gone to his home to visit his wife and children, who were staying there as a result, it is said, of domestic troubles in the Thomas home. When he was refused permission to see his family he killed Ashley with a shotgun, it is charged

The case was sent back to the district court because of objections sustained by the court to two different questions propounded to Frank Ashley, son of the murdered man One was as to whether the son had ever seen Ashley hugging or kissing Thomas' wife and the other involved the matter of conduct on the part of the fatherinlaw

Neighbors declared at the time of the killing that Thomas thought his fatherinlaw was alienating the affections of his wife and children

SAYS WOMAN SLEW SELF WHEN DENIED INTERVIEW

Marshalltown, Ia May 15 -Word received here tells of the death by suicide of Mrs. William L. Busby an Iowa girl, wife of the senior member of the firm of Busby Bros. owners of theaters here, at Waterloo and at Quincy Ill Mrs. Busby shot herself through the head in the stateroom of Capt. Walter Wisherd, of the steamer G W Hill, which was at dock at Quincy

According to Captain Wisherd Mrs. Busby came on board the steamer just before it was due to sail for Keokuk, and asked a private interview with the captain He refused, he says, and demanded that the interview take place either at his home or in the presence of another officer of the boat Upon his refusal, the captain says Mrs Busby drew a revolver He closed the stateroom door and Mrs Busby sent a bullet through her right temple

Mrs. Busby was formerly Myrtle Snooks, of New London where her parents, Rev and Mrs J H Snooks, reside She was 32 years old and a beautiful woman

CLAIMS DOCTORS GOT NO ATTENTION FROM STATE LEGISLATURE

Member of State Health Board Voices Complaint Before Eclectic Society.

Des Moines, Ia., May 15. "It is a known fact that the legislature did not do one thing for which the physicians of the state have been asking for years. There are people who would cut the throats of the members of the medical profession and they seem to have imbued the members of the legislature with the same feeling."

Thus spoke Dr G F Severs, member of the state board of health, in his address yesterday afternoon before the Iowa State Eclectic Medical society in session at the Savery hotel In his paper, Dr Severs said the state board of health had been denied everything that had been asked of the legislators Notwithstanding all of the effort made by the medical profession and laity he said, the legislature had refused to enact a law providing for adequate vital statistics for the state

Dr F M Andrews, of Lincoln, Neb., gave a paper yesterday of interest to the medical profession His paper was followed by that of Dr J B. Horner of Lamoni and one by Dr R F Price, of Milo Papers which will arouse considerable discussion at the sessions today are the paper upon the use of scopolamine to produce twilight sleep to be given by Dr W E Brown, of Cedar Rapids, and the paper upon the use of medicine in the treatment of cancer in preference to surgery by Dr Milo B. Stine, of Des Moines A banquet will be served this evening at the Savery hotel

WON BET ON CAR SPEED, BUT MACHINE WRECKED

Melvin Ia May 15. A resident of one of the towns in this vicinity who has managed to conceal his identity, won a wager of $1 that a car in which he was riding could not reach a speed of 56 miles an hour As an offset to his small winning he has several glaring cuts and bruises, acquired when the car turned over At the time of the upset it was going just 52 miles an hour, according to the speedometer, and that was the best speed it had been able to maintain Two Melvin men and two outsiders were in the party The driver and his seatmate who had the bet were the only ones hurt The two men in the rear seat climbed over the back of the rig when they saw how things were headed The driver of the car an employe of the Durfee garage was pinned under the machine, and so badly hurt that he was taken to a hospital at Sibley So far the identity of those concerned has been concealed The machine was badly wrecked

MINISTER ENCOURAGES AUTOMOBILE CONGREGATION

Mason City, Ia., May 15. Here is something new under the sun Nothing like it has ever been undertaken in this section of the country Dr Osgood of the Baptist church, believes in the automobile and that it can be used on Sunday for religious purposes just as well as for pleasure or commercial purposes. He has made arrangements so that those who came to church in autos next Sunday can have their machines properly parked and looked after during the services He has appealed to every automobile owner to attend church and promises that he will preach an automobile sermon providing that he can get the carburetor working properly and the proper supply of literary and religious oil to burn He says that the bible has an auto text but is leaving it for the people to find prior to the delivery of the sermon

WIFE OF FONDA DOCTOR KILLS HERSELF AT AMES

Ames Ia., May 15 Mrs Cora Patterson, aged about 50, wife of Dr M F. Patterson, of Fonda, Ia thrust the blade of a pair of scissors into her throat, closed the scissors and cut her throat The jugular was severed and she died in five minutes.

Despondency over her own and her husband's ill health are attributed as the cause. She was visiting her sister, Mrs L W Hubbell, here Knives and other sharp instruments had been taken from her in the last few days

As the Hubbells were about to leave their home in an automobile, they heard a scream from the house and Mrs Patterson was found dying against the bathroom door

IDA GROVE COUNCIL WILL IGNORE PAVING PROTESTS

Ida Grove Ia May 15. The city council of Ida Grove has decided to ignore the remonstrance against paving that was circulated some time ago and passed the resolution of necessity by a vote of 4 to 1. It is proposed to pave 21 blocks of streets and seven blocks of alleys. The council decided to leave it to a vote of the people of the town whether bonds should be issued for paving the intersections and alleys, or whether the abutting property should pay all the expenses. A special election has been called for June 14 on this question

PHONE COMPANY WOULD "PASS BUCK" TO PATRONS

Council Bluffs Ia. May 15.—District Manager Frank Elgin, of the Iowa Telephone company, said that if the city council levied a tax upon its poles and wires, the company would simply do as it did when an occupation tax was placed upon its gross business and add the cost to the patrons monthly bills.

COSSON ADMITS HE DESIRES GOVERNORSHIP

Council Bluffs, Ia., May 13.—While in this city for a few hours on the way to deliver an address at Clarinda, Attorney General Cosson frankly admitted that he is a candidate for the republican gubernatorial nomination He isn't following the usual line in seeking this preferment, however He is not talking generalities and dodging issues, but is boldly and frankly taking issue with those who stand for local option in the matter of law enforcement

O'BRIEN COUNTY MAKES FAIR GAIN IN POPULATION

Primghar, Ia., May 13 Unofficial census returns compiled by the county auditor's office give O'Brien county a population of 18,552, as against 17,262 in 1910 The figures for the towns are as follows Sheldon, 3,319, Sanborn, 1,453; Hartley, 1,112, Primghar 918 Paullina, 874, Sutherland, 809 Calumet, 205; Archer, 140, and Moneta, 87 Best percentage gains were made by Primghar, Sanborn and Sutherland, each showing almost a 25 per cent increase, while the little town of Moneta made a 100 per cent gain.

LAD[illegible]R AND SISTER SHARE FORTUNE WHEN WOMAN CAN BE FOUND

Relatives Here Separted During Civil War—$30,000 For Each Of Four Heirs.

Perry, Ia., May 14—John Davenport, a laborer, who is employed by the Milwaukee company in construction work, is seeking the address of his sister, from whom he was separated when they were children Finding her means a fortune of $30,000 to each of them as well as to two other sisters.

The Davenport children became separated during the civil war and one daughter, Lydia Davenport, was adopted by a man named Cooley when she was 6 months old The Cooley family lived in Greene county, near Herndon, and the girl grew to womanhood there A number of years ago she married and went to Kansas to live The death of an uncle in Indiana left a fortune to his brother's children, but the estate cannot be settled until Lydia Davenport is found.

When last heard of, she was living in Oklahoma City, but authorities there state that she moved to Perry The brother is making a search for her here, but thus far has been unable to locate her because he does not know her husband's name He has not seen his sister since she was a baby and is depending upon the newspapers of the state to help him find her He is located at Rhodes Ia., and is directing the search from that place

COURT ORDERS RETURN OF LITTLE GIRL TO MOTHER

Des Moines, Ia., May 14.—Judge Utterback rendered a decision in favor of the defendants in the habeas corpus proceedings brought by Mrs Maggie Austin of Sheldahl, against her daughter Carrie Fast and the latter's husband, W N Fast for the custody of 4 year old Katheryn Jensen daughter of Mrs Fast by a former husband

The plaintiff in the action declared that subsequent to her daughter's marriage to Fast which followed a divorce from her first husband she took the child to rear the parents declaring they could not support it Later the parents separated and divorce proceedings were begun by the wife

Recently the suit was dismissed and the wife decided to return to her husband It was then the wife's mother petitioned for the child, declaring the stepfather had abused it

THOUGHT HE WAS ROBBED; HAD JUST CHANGED CARS

Fort Dodge Ia May 14 J W Van Alstine a Gilmore City banker, thought he had been robbed of 400 half dollars He visited a local bank and secured the halves known around that prosperous section of the state as "chicken feed" placed the silver under the seat of his new car and drove to the garage where he had purchased it a few days before When he returned he cranked up an auto which he thought was his and made the trip to Gilmore City a distance of 20 miles On arriving, he ransacked the car for his money, but it was not there He wired back to the Fort Dodge police and notified them of the robbery He then turned his car and made a record trip back When he drove into the garage, the man who had sold him his car apprised him of the fact that he had taken another car of the same make, which belonged to another man The sack of half dollars was found where it had been placed in Mr Van Alstine's car

WOMAN INSTANTLY KILLED BY FALL DOWN STAIRS

Marshalltown Ia., May 14 Pitching headlong down the cellar stairs at the home of her daughter Mrs J C Crawford 112 North Third avenue, Mrs. Mary H Pete aged 70 was instantly killed when her head struck the stone wall and cement floor of the cellar, breaking her neck Dr A Angelsberg who lives next door was immediately called but Mrs Peet was dead the minute she struck the floor the spinal cord having been broken by the force of the fall

Mrs Peet had come over to her daughter's house and finding Mrs Crawford in the cellar stood at the head of the stairs and called down to her "I came over to get that clothes line," she said, and the next minute Mrs Crawford was horrified to see her mother pitch suddenly forward and fall down stairs

IOWA CROP BULLETIN.

Des Moines Ia May 14 Following is the regular Iowa crop bulletin for the week ending May 10

With the exception of the last day the week was cool the average daily deficiency of temperature being about 6 degrees Light to heavy frost occurred on the morning of the 7th and heavy to killing frost on the 9th Considerable damage was done to ruck and in some localities fruit was injured especially on low ground Ice formed in many localities on the morning of the 9th Showers occurred on five days, but the rainfall was much below the normal except in the northeastern counties where the amounts exceeded two inches Corn planting was retarded by the cool, showery weather but everything is in readiness for planting and that work will be rushed during the coming week The wet cool weather was, however beneficial to grass and small grain which are in excellent condition

IOWA CITY The University of Iowa will be in operation practically the year round It has been officially announced that the summer session will last until August 27 which is four weeks longer than any previous session On June 21 a 10 weeks' summer school will start, composed of two sections—one of six weeks and the second of four weeks A student may attend either of these divisions or both

EVANS PROBABLE WINNER IN A. O. U. W. ELECTION

Des Moines Ia., May 12.—The hottest election contest in the history of the Iowa Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. is in progress here today between E. B Evans of Des Moines, present grand master workman, and the former auditor, J L. Bleakly, of Ida Grove At noon the ballots were only partially counted, but indications seemed to point to the re-election of Evans.

Phil Carlin, of Sioux City was chosen grand foreman without opposition

TELLS OF HER LOVER COMMITTING MURDER, AFTER LONG SILENCE

Could No Longer Bear Burden of Secret and Told Story to Authorities.

Davenport, Ia, May 12.—A woman with whom he had formerly lived, and whom he had told of the crime, was responsible for the arrest of Verne Madden, 20 years of age, on the charge of murder

For 18 months the woman, Ruth Lambert, 23 years of age, kept the terrible secret. Several times she walked to the police station to tell the authorities all the details of the murder, but each time she lost her nerve on reaching the door of the police station She says the untold story weighed on her mind until she could withhold it no longer.

Finally she unburdened herself and young Madden was found enjoying himself at the carnival here and arrested He has confessed that he was in the gang that did the murder and has named his accomplice. He has not yet admitted however, that he fired the fatal shot

His arrest clears up the murder of John B Stoessel, a well to do mechanic Stoessel was murdered at midnight, November 7, 1913 He was found dying on his doorstep with a bullet through his body The authorities could find no clew All efforts of the police and detectives proving futile, a reward of $2,000 was offered by officials and family relations.

The Lamber girl says, as does Madden in his confession, that robbery was the motive, Madden being a member of a gang that had commited several burglaries and holdups.

SAYS GERMANS DID NOT CAUSE FIRES AT ATLANTIC

Des Moines, Ia., May 12.—After investigating rumors with regard to the origin of several fires at Atlantic, Ia., the state fire marshal's force has reported that German sympathizers had nothing to do with them

Charges had been made that a barn containing 23 horses intended for shipment to the allies, was burned to prevent the animals from being shipped to the war zone. It was also reported to the state department that several cars loaded with food supplies consigned to England were burned by German agents.

The state agents report that a barn containing 23 horses was set afire by an incendiary on April 23. The structure and contents were totally destroyed. However, there is nothing to connect the Germans with the act, but there appears to be a clue connecting the case with fires which occurred a year ago at Atlantic in which $90,000 worth of property was destroyed, it is said

Five fires have occurred at Atlantic since April 23, 1915, the total loss to date being about $65,000 This has caused the fire marshal's force to begin a search for the incendiary

WILL TEST FEATURE OF NEW COMPENSATION LAW

Des Moines, Ia., May 12.—Mrs. Rachel Shivers, widow of the late Samuel Shivers, a city fireman, who was killed on March 14 when a chemical fire extinguisher burst, yesterday filed a claim against the city under the workmen's compensation act

The trustees of the firemen's pension fund for which the city annually makes a levy has allowed Mrs Shivers a pension of $20 a month

Mayor Hanna and Eskil Carlson, city solicitor assert they do not believe Mrs. Shivers is entitled to compensation from both sources and are preparing to make a test case of her claim under the compensation act, which will involve its validity in that respect.

YOUTH KILLED HIMSELF FOR MOTHER OF FOUR

Davenport, Ia May 12 —Frank Hoffman kissed his mother goodby Later a note was found on the levee wall of the Mississippi river, together with his hat and coat. The body has not yet been recovered. Hoffman was 25 years old Mrs Garvey, who has a family of four children says she spurned the youth's affections.

DID CITY OR AUTO THROW PEBBLE THROUGH WINDOW?

Paullina, Ia., May 12.—The city council of Paullina is in a quandry to know who should pay for damages caused by the throwing of a pebble by an automobile--whether it is the city which owns the pebble or the man whose automobile threw the pebble

Some time ago John Cowan, jr., was driving his car through Main street, when the tire struck a pebble and hit it just the proper blow to send it through a plate glass window. He paid for the window, but now wants the city council to pay him and they don't know whether they should be responsible

The automobile owner says the pebble should not have been in the street.

INQUIRY FROM TEXAS ON WOMAN NOW AT CHEROKEE

Fort Dodge, Ia May 11 - Jane Smith the mysterious woman found on the Great Western tracks near this city, where she awaited the coming of a train to end her life, again is the subject of inquiry A man, writing in Bohemian from Rosenberg, Tex., sends a perfect description of the woman and asks for information concerning her He states that a certain Mrs. Howly disappeared from that city and he is of the opinion she is the same person now in the Cherokee hospital for the insane.

ALLEN TO CAMPAIGN ON PACKERS' TRUST CHARGES

Des Moines, Ia., May 12.—Senator Joe Allen of Pocahontas, who spoke here last night, declares he will make his campaign for governor on a platform favoring investigation of the alleged packers' trust in case he decides to make the race He reiterated his charges made during the legislature session that Iowa is in the grip of such a trust and that as result Iowa's cattle industry is suffering severely.

DUBUQUE—Dubuque is overrun with tramps. There seems to be an absence of the yegg element, but a small sized reign of terror prevails among housewives at the insistance of demands for handouts. The institution of a rock pile is being considered by the city authorities. The system of locking them up for the night and turning them loose the next morning has proved inadequate.

MOBS BRI[illegible] ROME UND[illegible] MARTIAL L[illegible]

Cabinet Crisis Following [illegible] sale Resignations L[illegible] to Wild Demonstrations for War.

PACIFIST LEADER M[illegible]

Troops Save Former [illegible] Bertolini From Injury [illegible] Hands of Rioters—[illegible] Delays Action.

Rome, (via Paris), May [illegible] —The agitation in Rome assumed almost a revolutionary character. The entire city has been occupied by the military.

Rome, (via Paris), May [illegible] Dispatches from Milan say serious rioting has broken out that city over the present situation. The adherents of opposing political factions have resorted to the use of fire arms the situation is described as grave.

The disorders were precipitated by the resignation of the [illegible] cabinet last night

Rome, (via Paris) May [illegible] Victor Emmanuel today received [illegible] order named the following statesmen Signor Manfredi president of the senate, Signor Marcora president of the chamber of deputies, and Giolitti, a former premier but now leader of the party in Italy in favor of neutrality.

These are the first evidences of political development of the day and were observed with deep interest because of the resignation yesterday of the cabinet on the ground that it did not have unanimous support of the constitutional parties of the country in its international policy

The king has not yet announced whether the resignations will be accepted

The members of the cabinet were impossible to bring the difficulties separating them from the following Signor Giolitti Two names headed the resignations for the reason that he preferred to follow his course in Italy rather than appear before parliament when it meets May 20 and give to the world an exhibition of internal division in Italy which probably would be accompanied by recriminations and accusations. To do so would be considered for Italy.

The action of the cabinet leaving Victor Emmanuel free to choose such men he considers best adapted to lead Italy in the present grave crisis

Speculation is Rife.

Both Signors Ma[illegible]ra and [illegible] have been mentioned as premiers.

According to palace gossip the king has the right to reject the resignations of the cabinet this morning Rome is filled with the wildest conjectures as to what the outcome will be. Some believe that the king will summon the cabinet before the chamber of deputies for discussion, the course being guided himself by these discussions to reveal whether to argue that Premier Salandra has the confidence of the majority of the deputies or that Giolitti and that Giolitti must be called to take the place of Salandra.

More dispassionate observers express the opinion that the king probably will choose a new cabinet composed of men who have not taken part in the recent exchanges of the last week

Another suggestion is that there has arrived for the formation of a great national cabinet similar to that of France, a ministry to include the leading figures of all parties to the end that there shall be entrusted the momentous decision now before the country.

London, May 14 Great demonstrations in favor of war are reported in dispatches from Rome It is said that grave events are looked for in the near future. So far as is known King Victor Emmanuel has not accepted nor declined to accept the resignation of the cabinet tendered last night

The council of ministers, says the Reuter's Rome correspondent, continues to show that it did not possess the unanimous assent of the constitutional powers regarding its international policy. Realizing the gravity of the situation the premier has decided to hand its resignation to the king. An official note to this effect was issued last night

Gabriel D'Annunzio the author invited Premier Salandra and expressed to him the feeling of fraternity which exists in France toward Italy He spoke of the enthusiasm of the admirable determination, endurance and determination of the French nation, which was devoted to all its efforts toward victory in the present war

Throughout the day the excitement of the people increased and serious riots occurred Deputy Bertolini, a former minister in Giolitti's cabinet, who was observed in a street demonstration, was attacked by a mob. The car in which he was riding were smashed. Bertolini would probably have been injured had not cavalry arrived on the scene in time. Among those present, among whom was Luigi Pospigliosi, of the commanders of the papal guards, gone to his rescue. The rioters were obliged to draw their swords and two of the rioters were wounded. Meanwhile police and carabineers had hastened to the spot and dispersed the crowd.

Deputy Paota, who was minister of finance in the Giolitti cabinet, was also attacked, while driving in a carriage, but he succeeded in escaping. The socialist deputy, Dr Graziadei of the University of Bologne, has expressed neutral opinions and declared that he considered that the army was not sufficiently prepared for war. He put in serious danger of his life but was saved by carabineers from the infuriated people, who cried "Death to the enemies of the country"

THINK SLAVS CAN HOLD THEIR FOES

London Is Confident Russian Hordes Are Able to Check Austro-German Rush—Rout Enemy in East.

London May 17 London observers are of the opinion that the Russian situation today is perceptibly brighter and this in spite of the fact that the Austro German victory in Galicia is becoming more and more obvious and that it is certain the Russians have lost heavily in men and ammunition

Confidence in the strength of the Russian ally of Great Britain is maintained because of their ability to deliver a counter attack as has been shown by their success in East Galicia and Bukowina where the Austrians are reported to have been routed and to be retreating along a front 60 miles wide It is consequently hoped in London that the Russians may retrieve on the Prut their fortune on the Dniester

It is reported also that the Russians have checked the Germans in the Baltic provinces

FRENCH ARE HOLDING CONQUERED TERRITORY

Paris, May 15 The French war office this afternoon issued the following statement on the progress of hostilities

"There have been no changes in the situation since last evening in the section to the north of Arras Here the fighting continues under conditions set forth in our last communication We have progressed 500 yards in the direction of Souchez. In this sector there have been [illegible] changes

NEW AUSTRIAN HOWITZER WORSE THAN "BIG BERTHA"

Tarnow, Galicia May 15 A giant howitzer of new type played an important part in assisting the Austrians to smash the powerfully fortified Russian position at Tarnow The howitzer is of the same calibre as the 42-centimeter guns and its work certainly is not less terribly effective

When the Austrians occupied the Russian position they found men dead without wounds far from the places where the projectiles of the howitzer exploded The air pressure from these projectiles swept the Russian wire entanglements away and the shell in exploding, threw fragments of casings a mile The effect of this shell fire on the nerve of the Russians is described as having been very great

This artillery and 305-centimeter mortars assisted in demolishing the Russian entrenchments on top of a hill The correspondent who visited the former Russian position says the evidence everywhere showed the destructive character of the Austrian fire. The ground was dented with funnel-shaped depressions where shells had exploded after burrowing deep in to the earth Some of the depressions were 50 feet in diameter and 20 feet deep.

TURKS TAKE BACK FOES SENT TO FIGHTING ZONE

London, May 15 Fifty British and French nationals who were deported from Constantinople to the Gallipoli peninsula by the Turkish authorities, have been brought back to the capital through efforts of United States Ambassador Morgenthau according to a Reuter dispatch from Athens

The deportation of British and French citizens to the zone of violent fighting in the Dardanelles region was decreed by Turkey on the ground that shell fire from the allied fleet was killing Turkish noncombatants whose homes are on the peninsula As soon as the order was issued Mr Morgenthau was requested by the British and French governments to file a vigorous protest in their behalf

REPULSE "MAJORITY" OF FRENCH ATTACKS, CLAIM

Berlin, May 15, (via London) The German general army headquarters today gave out the following official statement

"In the western theater Neat Steenstraete we repulsed attacks made by the enemy during the night

"On the St Julien-Ypres road we again attacked and made progress Three English officers and 60 men and one machine gun fell into our hands

"The number of unwounded prisoners taken by us (in this region) since April 22 has increased to 126 officers and 5,422 has increased to 126 officers and 5,450 men to which more than 500 wounded men must be added

"To the southwest of Lille heavy artillery fighting was not followed up by the enemy with infantry attacks

"On the Lorette heights the majority of the attempts at attack made by the enemy were kept down An attack from the north on the high slope which reached our trenches was beaten off The enemy suffered heavy losses"

Dernburg, Kaiser's Press Agent, To Leave Before Being Invited.

DR BERNHARD DERNBURG.

Washington May 17 Dr Bernhard Dernburg often referred to as the unofficial spokesman of Emperor William in the United States has made plans to leave the country of his own initiative within a short time

It became known in official quarters here today that in view of the intimation that President Wilson and the cabinet were displeased with Dr Dernburg's speech justifying the sinking of the Lusitania and some of his other public utterances which they believed might be calculated to array sentiment of Germans in the United States against the Washington government, friends of Dr Dernburg here have persuaded him to leave the United States

To Cuba or South America

Just when Dr Dernburg would leave or where he would go was not made known, but it was believed he would sail for Cuba or South America

Dr Dernburg's activity in the United States since the beginning of the war has been closely observed by the president and other high officials here, who came to believe in the last week that a continuation of his speeches and statements might in the event of a critical turn in relations with Germany menace the domestic welfare of America

Dr Dernburg himself issued a statement last night declaring he had never discussed matters that had arisen diplomatically between the United States and Germany Officials here made no comment on that beyond pointing to Dr Dernburg's utterances in Cleveland and New York recently seeking to justify the attack on the Lusitania

Dr Dernburg's public comments, especially since the killing of Americans on the Lusitania, have been so extremely offensive to President Wilson Secretary Bryan and other high officials of the government that the laws have been searched at the department of justice for a statute that might apply to him

Under section 211 of the penal code as amended in March 1911, the use of the mails for matters of a character tending to incite arson murder or assassination" is prohibited under the penalty of five years' imprisonment in jail or a $5 000 fine As Dr Dernburg approved of the killing of American citizens on the Lusitania and favors further acts of the same character on the part of the German government, it is believed that he might be punished under this statute providing he uses the mails to further such propaganda

It is believed that Dr Dernburg could be expelled even without the aid of this statute. The power of this government to expel him if it regards his presence as injurious to the public interest is incontroverted by European nations

New York May 15 -Dr Bernhard Dernburg declined today to discuss the statement from Washington that he would soon leave the country of his own initiative Remaining secluded in his apartments here he refused to see newspaper representatives. In answer to a note inclosing a copy of the Washington dispatch he returned the reply

PORTUGAL REVOLT MENACES REPUBLIC

Revolutionists Are Reported to Be in Control of Capital—Troops Unable to Restrain People.

London May 17—A news agency dispatch received here from Madrid declares there has been received in the Spanish capital information of a grave revolutionary movement in Portugal. The report is that revolutionary committees is in control of the situation at Lisbon

This information has reached the Spanish ministry of the interior Revolution is said to have broken out at Coimbra, Oporto, Lisbon and Santarem

Fugitives reaching Badajoz describe the situation as extremely menacing Telegraph and telephone communication has been severed and the troops appear to be powerless to control the people

The Fabra News agency from whose agent this dispatch comes, gives it out under reserve but at the same time says it believes the information probably is correct"

Indications of a serious revolutionary movement against the present republican government of Portugal have not been lacking On the contrary reports from this country for six months past have almost all referred to political disorders There has been serious dissatisfaction with the administration of affairs and the government has been freely criticised as drastic to an impossible degree, the president and his advisers have been called outlaws, political assassinations have not been unknown there have been bread riots at Lisbon, followed by the proclamation of martial law throughout the republic, there has been much plotting on the part of the monarchists and the arrest and incarceration of numerous monarchist leaders, the army and navy have been suspected in their allegiance and officers of each branch have been arrested There has been established the so-called republic of northern Portugal under the presidency of General Barreto and there have been labor disorders of a serious nature

A dispatch from Madrid to Reuter's Telegram company says it is reported there that Dr. Alfonso Costa, former premier of Portugal, has been assassinated in Lisbon.

COULD EQUIP GREAT ARMY IN ONE MONTH

Uncle Sam in Pinch Could Put 500,000 Fighting Men in Field in 30 Days—Navy Could Be in Battle Trim in Record Time, Experts Declare.

Washington May 17 With officials of both the war and navy departments maintaining an outward appearance of calm, it became known today that the slightest intimation from Germany that it intends to declare war on the United States will be followed immediately by vigorous steps of preparation

Although the present condition of both the army and navy is anything but what the officers on the board of strategy would have it, the fact that for months Europe has been largely dependent upon the United States for munitions of war has made it possible for the United States to prepare for any emergency in far less time than ever before when danger was threatened.

It was stated here today by a prominent official that the government is in touch with establishments which could supply every necessity of an army of 500,000 men within four weeks. The men could not be mobilized before their supplies would be ready for them.

The same official was responsible for the statement that the government has at hand the facilities for bringing the navy up to fighting trim in a record breaking manner With the exception of battle cruisers, every deficiency of the navy could be corrected within a month's time. Even the lack of submarines, especially seagoing submarines, could be made up within a space of three months, according to this official.

INTIMATED GERMANY WOULD ARBITRATE BUT UNCLE SAM ASKS POSITIVE ASSURANCE

Influential German Newspaper, the Vossische Zeitung, Says That High Government Officials in Berlin Favor Submitting Differences to Court of Arbitration—Washington, However, Indicates That Nothing Less Than Strict Guarantee Will Meet With American Approval.

SHOWING OF OPTIMISM NOT BASED ON FACTS

Official Circles Confident Kaiser Will Yield—Strong Turkish and Austrian Influences, Backed by Vatican, Bringing Pressure to Bear Upon Imperial Government—Country Can Only Wait, But Meantime Speculation Runs Riot—Note Not Yet Delivered, Gerard Reports.

London, May 15.- The Exchange Telegraph company has received the following message from Amsterdam

"A telegram from Berlin states that the Vossische Zeitung announces that high government circles in Germany favor the submission of the question of the Lusitania's sinking and the difficulties with America arising therefrom to a court of arbitration"

Washington, May 15 -The suggestion of arbitration contained in dispatches to London from Berlin by way of Amsterdam was received among officials here with the informal comment that such a course was among the considerations which had occurred in Washington, but it was pointed out that it probably would not be satisfactory unless assurances were given in the meantime and the submarine warfare on merchant shipping was suspended.

Among well informed diplomats today the belief existed that Germany's reply would afford a means of settlement through diplomacy

It was thought not improbable that Germany would suspend submarine warfare while the diplomatic discussion was in progress and might suggest that if the British government notified all its merchant ships to sail unarmed, the right of visit and search would then be exercised to prevent contraband from reaching its destination

Another suggestion which was regarded as not unlikely to be made by Germany was that the belligerents give assurances that no contraband be carried on passenger ships. It was believed Germany might insist on retaining the submarine as a destroyer of commerce, but would offer to make no attacks on non-combatants if crew of merchantmen were unarmed and did not offer resistance when encountered

Hope of Averting Strife Not Based On Any Tangible Facts

Washington D C May 17 -With President Wilson bound for New York to review the Atlantic fleet and Secretary of State Bryan sitting on the lid, official Washington has settled down calmly to wait for the reply to the German government to the American note.

A feeling of hope that no severing of relations with Berlin will result from the note and the developments which have led to it continues to be apparent High officals today talked in a hopeful strain and said they thought there were evidences that Germany would seek a friendly way out of the difficulty.

Optimism Based On Hope.

This optimistic view is based, it is admitted on inference and deduction rather than information Actually, there is probably not a man in Washington even in the German embassy who really knows what course Berlin will take. At any rate Ambassador Von Bernstorff insists he has had no instructions from his government and that he has not predicted to the newspapers what would be done

The delay of a day in the transmission of the note and the fact it could not be presented before today at the German foreign office, of course delays by so much the answer of the Berline government The earliest that a detailed reply is expected is the latter part of the coming week It may not be that soon and 10 days or two weeks would not be an unusual time for the formation of a reply of such importance Acknowledgement of receipt is expected promptly

Strong Influence For Peace.

The best informed opinion here continues to be that if the kaiser and Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg dictate the course of the German government there will be peace but if Admiral Von Tirpitz and the ultra-military group dictates it there will be a break. Reports that the influence of Austria and Turkey will be thrown toward peace with America and that the influence of the Vatican will be swung in that direction are current but these, like the predictions as to what Germany will do, seem to be based on impressions, not information.

What Would United States Do?

It is apparent, however, that the American note to Berlin has made all Europe and the entire civilized world sit up and take notice Despite the utter unpreparedness of the United States for war, there is some realization of the truth that if the United States is compelled to enter the war will sooner or later be an affair of tremendous importance. To throw the vast and unmeasured resources of the United States into the scales in the present war could not fail to affect the result in the long run, though it migh not affect the situation for some months.

If war comes, the very first thing the government here will have to decide is whether to take an active or a passive part in the struggle. Although many predict there would be little actual participation of Americans in the war the temper of the American people might dictate otherwise.

Would Encourage Neutrals.

Many here continue to believe that Germany will avoid a break with America for fear that if this country does declare war it will encourage neutral powers of Europe now wrathful at Germany but hesitant about war, to leap into the fray on the side of the allies.

Not only is Italy apparently ready to join the allies, but Rumania, Greece, Holland, Norway and Sweden, it is quite conceivable, might throw their weight into the balance, in an effort, once for all, to smash Prussian militarism.

Some Say Kaiser Wants War.

The belief that Germany is eager to drag the United States into the war on the theory it would compel this country to keep its war munitions and supplies at home, has many adherents here. Many officials take that view. Such a view finds believers among some of the foremost officials in the government

Some evidence of a convincing sort can be put forth to sustain this theory, but it is quite clear that if Germany takes such an attitude it will in the long run prove to have been short sighted

German-Americans Loyal.

The developments of the last 24 hours have served to make one thing quite plain It is that there need be no real apprehension about the attitude of the great bulk of German-Americans in this country if war comes. They will support the government as loyal citizens. The tenor of the most of the German-American press indicates that. Moreover those who know the German-Americans of this country have never had any real doubts about it, so far as the large percentage of this class of the population is concerned

President Wilson and party were cruising leisurely down Chesapeake bay early today aboard the naval yacht Mayflower, on their way to New York, where the president will review the Atlantic fleet next week The Mayflower is to pass out of the Virginia capes at noon today and arrive at New York early Monday. The return trip will begin Tuesday night, the presidential party reaching Washington early Thursday.

A cablegram from Ambassador Gerard, in Berlin, sent at 7 o'clock last night, and reaching the state department early today, stated that the ambassador had not then received the American note. State department expected further advices soon Meanwhile officials sought to trace the note and hasten its delivery Having knowledge from Ambassador Page that the note was relayed from Rome yesterday afternoon on the Italian telegraph lines, official felt assured that it would reach Ambassador Gerard today

Secretary Bryan had sent two messages to Ambassador Gerard after the note itself left the telegraph offices here—one notifying him that it had been sent and another advising him that it had been arranged to release it for publication at 5 a. m Friday, and therefore to present it to the German foreign office as early as possible Ambassador Gerard acknowledged both.

MINERS PRAISE WILSON BUT ARE OPPOSED TO WAR

Indianapolis, Ind., May 15.—President Wilson's "efforts to keep this country at peace with all the nations of the world" were indorsed by the executive board of the United Mine Workers of America in a resolution adopted today. A copy of the resolution was sent to the president.

The resolution advises that the American Federation of Labor call a congress of all the trade unions in the United States. "In the event that war is apparent, or that a special session of congress be called to consider this momentous question"

The labor congress, according to the resolution, would meet in Washington at the same time as the United States congress "for the express purpose of voicing the disapproval of labor toward any program involving this country in war."

NEBRASKA REPUBLICANS PRAISE WILSON'S STAND

Omaha, Neb., May 15.—A resolution upholding President Wilson and his advisers in their course "for the preservation of the national honor" was passed at a meeting of the Nebraska State Republican club. The meeting was attended by all the prominent republicans of the state. It was the first held in recent years at which the different leaders of various factions of the party in Nebraska attended The resolution was introduced by Ross L. Hammond, of Fremont, national revenue collector and republican nominee for governor last fall.

One nice thing about all there reform movements is that we emerge from them all without any great injury.

Balancing the scales of justice too nicely quite often results in short-weighting some parties to the action.

Most folks use the overhand stroke to give a dollar and the underhand one to retrieve two in place of the one.

At first it seems quite a treat to a man to hand his wife money but the novelty is not long in wearing off

During good times a man squanders his money and then during hard times blames society for the inequalities of life

AND ALONG CAME RUTH

"Is Elsie sick?" asked Ruth as she made her usual morning visit."

"She isn't very well," replied her mother, and I am trying to find an egg to cook for her, but some of these have been cooked and I don't seem to be able to tell the fresh ones from the cooked ones."

"Oh. that's easy, let me show you," volunteered Ruth, spinning them on the kitchen table, "you see the fresh ones spin like everything, while the cooked ones hardly move around once. Here is a perfectly fresh one, it spins more than all the others. Now in boiling an egg for a sick person, just put it in a quart of water in a covered vessel away from the fire for eight minutes. Don't put it right over the fire in the usual way, for it won't be half so delicate to the taste, nor will it digest so easily."

"Oh. Ruth, you're such a help," declared her aunt, "and now go upstairs and see Elsie."

MUST PUBLISH COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

One law passed by the last legislature and promptly signed by the government was what is known as the Grout bill, and under the provisions of this law, which will take effect July 4, it will be necessary for every town council to publish the report of their proceedings in a newspaper if there is one in the town, just as the county supervisors are compelled to give publication of their proceedings. A town council has the expending of all the money raised by the town by taxation or otherwise, and under the present system they need make no report of their doings except a summary at the close of the year, and not always then which gives the people no chance to express a sentiment either for or against a proceeding except they attend the monthly council meetings. Under the new law they will be compelled to publish a report immediately after a meeting.—Graettinger Times.

NEVER TOO LATE TO REFORM

The other day the Democrat was told about a young man in a town less than fifty miles from Emmetsburg whose early career was somewhat checkered but who had, during the past few years, more than redeemed himself. He was a rather unruly boy in school and before he attained manhood had served a term in the state reform school. He came home, cut out bad habits, applied himself diligently and has since accumulated simething like $125,000 worth of property. He was recently elected a member of the council of his home city, which is a place of considerable importance We mention this matter to show young men that it is never too late to make an effort to reform—Emmetsburg Democrat.

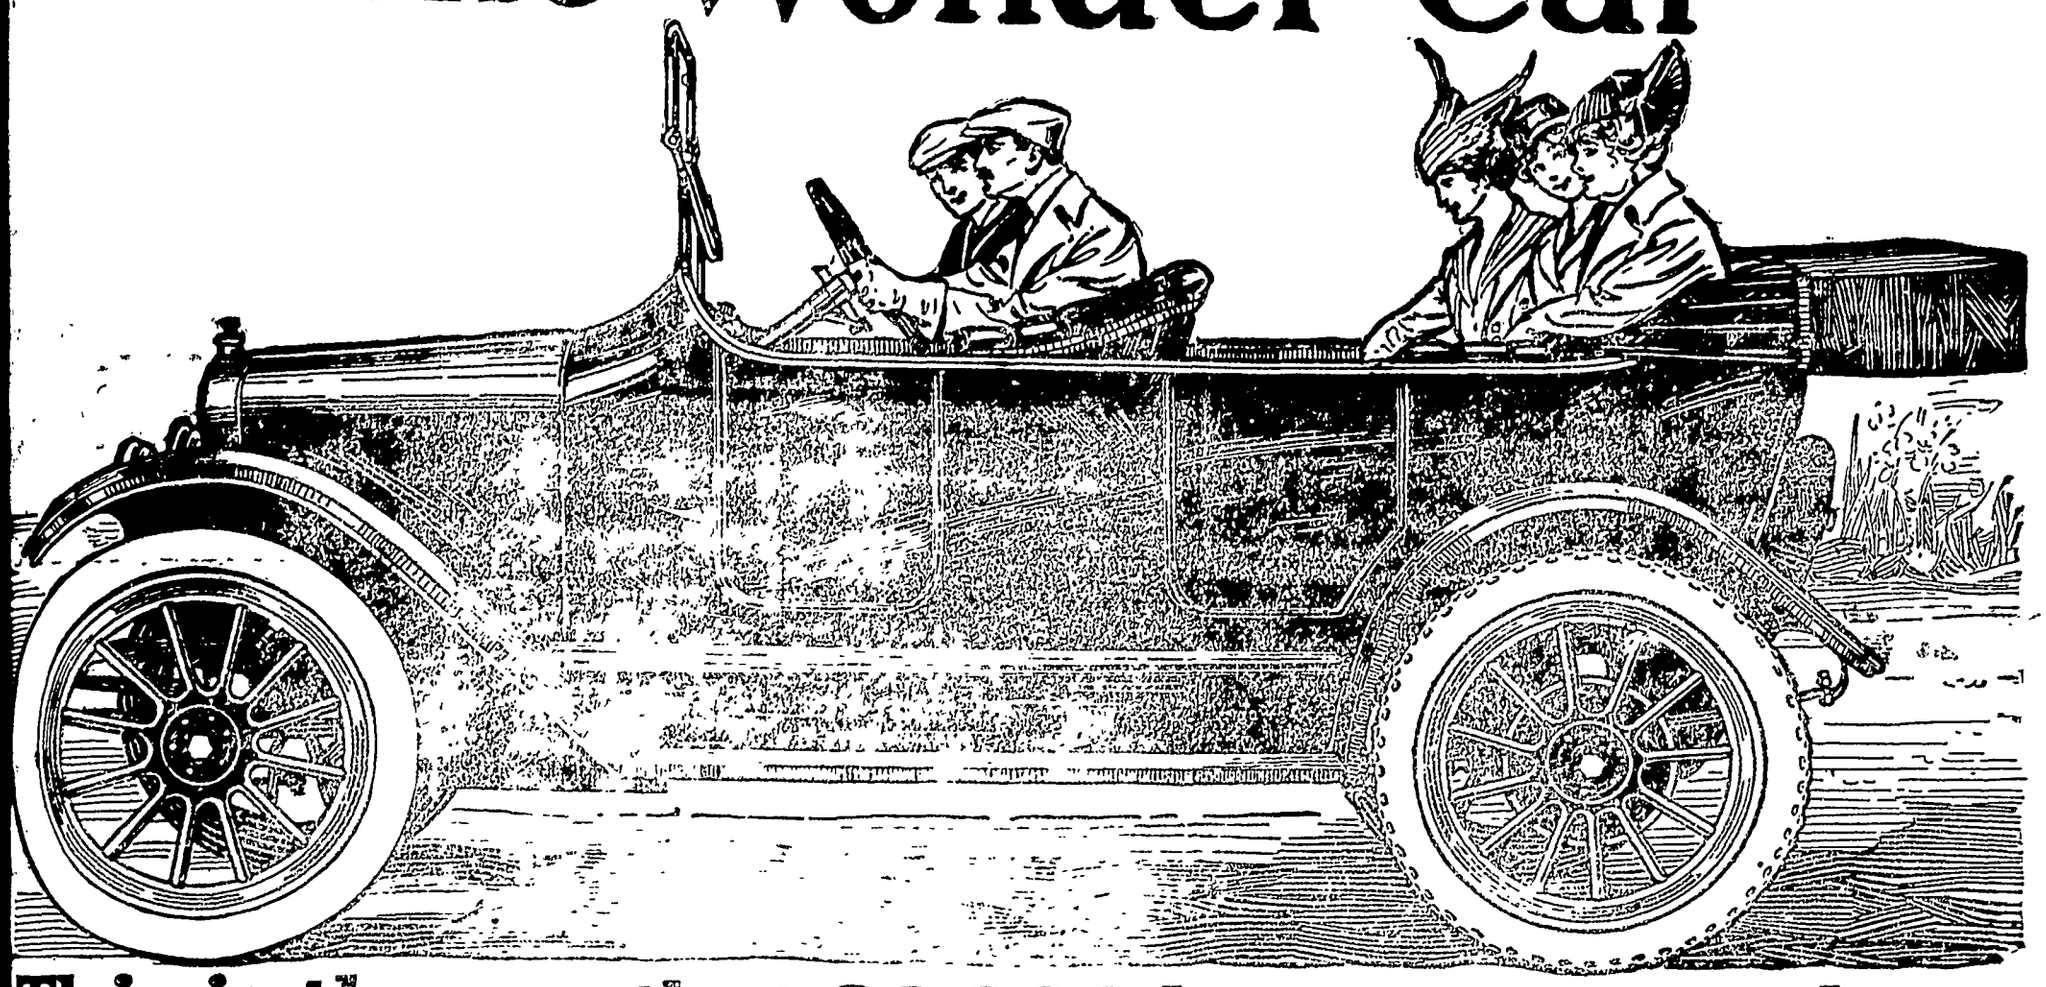
"The Wonder Car"



This is the car that 38,000 happy owners have given the "rough and tumble" acid test of real automobile owners' wear

An automobile on the road for 18 months in constant, every-day use by an owner ceases to be a designer's theory.

It becomes—either a great automobile success;
Or it becomes—a great automobile failure.

Multiply one model by 38,000 and give each one of these 38,000 automobiles day in and day out rough and tumble road wear, and if this car stands up and delivers, it has become one of the rare great automobile successes.

And that is the Maxwell success today—that is exactly the "Acid Test" that the Maxwell has passed through, and that is why the Maxwell is the most talked about automobile that is built today.

The Maxwell automobile is today one of the very few great automobile successes the world has ever known.

And this is the car we urge you to see. This is the car that you owe it to yourself to see. We want to tell you about its hill climbing triumphs. We want to tell you about its speed and endurance records. We want to show you and add up for you every one of its new features.

Read This List of Expensive Features. The 1915 Maxwell Has These Features And Many Others.

PURE STREAMLINE BODY

A large, roomy, beautiful body, fitted with deep, comfortable upholstering, ample leg room, adjustable front seat and the best fourteen-coat, hand-painted and striped finish. All Maxwell bodies are constructed of pressed steel, mounted on a steel-channel sectioned frame, offering the greatest possible strength with minimum weight.

SPRING SUSPENSION

Without a doubt you will find the Maxwell the easiest riding, light car made. With amply sufficient wheel base, and semi-elliptic front springs and three-quarter elliptic rear springs, built of the very best of spring steels, the Maxwell cushions its passengers from all the jars and bumps of rough roads. It is so comfortable and easy riding that you will remark the difference on your first ride.

THE POWERFUL MAXWELL MOTOR

The most powerful, durable motor of its size made. Ample power to [illegible] all twists of the road.

THE STEERING GEAR

[illegible] the only safe way to [illegible] a gear instead of a sector. This makes adjustment very simple, as you have merely to turn the gear one-quarter way and you have a new surface, just as good as a complete new steering unit.

DOUBLE SHELL RADIATOR

A beautiful, troubleproof, highly efficient radiator. Every part but the shell constructed of high-grade copper. It will not corrode and leak. Protected against breakage by a heavy pressed steel shell and special shock-absorbing [illegible] the frame that protects [illegible] all twists of the road.

BRAKES THAT HOLD AND LAST

One square inch of braking surface to every twelve pounds of weight. That's more than most any other car gives to-day. Maxwell brakes are thoroughly dependable, enclosed and protected from dust and dirt, and have special adjusting devices. Maxwell brakes are very [illegible] to [illegible]. The first pressure of the foot and your car comes to a dead stop.

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. More than 2,000 Maxwell dealers—in every part of this country—are always ready to give expert advice, to make adjustments, and to supply new parts at reasonable prices. This splendid Maxwell dealer service organization is perfected and completed by the chain of Maxwell owned and Maxwell operated Service Branches. Sixteen great Maxwell Service Stations are so located throughout the country that a Maxwell dealer can supply any part for an owner within a few hours if not in his stock. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Order a Maxwell from us now, and when you want it delivered, we will give you your car—not an excuse on delivery day

CLINCHED IN HIS MEMORY

Small Chance of Charles Abner Forgetting the Day That Meant Everything to Him

Some time since Charles Abner courted and married the beautiful Ellen Estelle. One evening several months later they were seated in their cozy little den, Ellen Estelle reading a popular novel and Charles Abner looking over the sporting page.

"Charley dear," finally remarked the little wife, "do you recall the time you proposed to me?"

"Why, yes," rather indifferently answered Charles Abner. "I think I remember it."

"Of course you do," returned Ellen Estelle, "and when in an automobile I shall never forget the lovely words you spoke and the noble sacrifices you promised to make. It must have cost you something to say those things."

"It did," Ellen Estelle responded Charles Abner, with a reflective sigh, "it cost me about two weeks' salary to hire the automobile."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE PROFESSOR'S STATEMENT.

Prof. Aug. F. W. Schmitz, Thomas, Okla., writes: "I was troubled with Backache for about twenty-five years. When told I had Bright's Disease in its last stages, I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using two boxes I was somewhat relieved and I stopped the treatment. In the spring of the next year I had another attack. I went for Dodd's Kidney Pills and they relieved me again. I used three boxes. That is now three years ago and my Backache has not returned in its severity and by using another two boxes a little later on the pain left altogether and I have had no trouble since. You may use my statement. I recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills when and wherever I can." Dodd's Kidney Pills 50c per box at your dealer or Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

RIGHT MAN FOR THE POSITION

Colored Citizen Knew His Qualifications and the Job Was His as a Matter of Course

Oliver Vogler, lately deceased, had occasion to go to a hardwood lumber yard at Cairo where he and Fred W. Upham were in business. The floods had caused some annoyance by depositing mud from the Ohio and Mississippi rivers on the planks in storage, and Vogler was not long in compiling a crew of negroes to wash the mud from the stock. Various ones were assigned to hold the planks and there was a job for one man to hold the hose.

A burly black man uncoiled himself to take charge of the hose and asked the proprietor:

"Ah reckon Ah is de washines' niggah around heah, is Ah not?" he said, and he qualified.

Psychology of Practice

The question of short versus long periods of practice in training the human mind or body in any particular kind of work has a far reaching application. Some interesting experiments on this subject have been conducted by Dr. K. S. Lashley of Johns Hopkins university. Acquisition of skill in archery was selected as the subject for observation. Twenty untrained persons were divided into three groups. One group shot five arrows with the English longbow per day, another twenty shots per day, and the third forty shots. The records showed conclusively that the group shooting forty times a day gained in accuracy with less expenditure of time in practice than was required by either of the other groups for the same amount of improvement. A report on the experiment says:

The relatively greater efficiency of short periods of practice continuing for many days is in accordance with the results of the study of animals and of speech habits in man and indicates that in training to muscular feats in both animals and men the length of practice periods required is usually too great for maximum efficiency.—Science.

SIGNIFICANCE OF "SOUTH OF PANAMA"

From the Century

The phrase 'south of Panama,' has a mighty significance. It means not merely geographical location. It signifies vast virgin areas of lowland and upland contrasted with fallow valleys and lofty plateaus populated and cultivated through centuries. It means barren and burned mountains and dreary deserts mingled with forested and watered slopes, grassy llanos and pampas, and flowering savannas. It means the mixing of almost forgotten aboriginal races and surviving Indian types with the intellectual and refined descendants of early Spaniards and Portuguese and the later sprinkling of adventuresome Germans, Italians, English and Americans. It means an ancient civilization fascinating Incan ruins, oldfashioned Moorish and Spanish architecture in the sleeping cities and towns with strange peoples and conditions harking back to far centuries, hard by a new civilization, modern skyscrapers and boulevards in growing commercial entrepots and ambitious capitals, with progressive peoples and conditions which rival the best that the old east and the new west of North America can show.

South of Panama above all, suggests opportunity. It stands for governments, peoples, commerce, resources, progress, and possibilities that deserve the study and interest of the world. It presents a field of new activity and fascinating achievement that should attract the capital, trade and travel of both North Americans and Europeans. It holds out a need of increased population that should be studied and met by the promoters of legitimate and worthy immigration. It calls for money and men to build railroads, harness water powers, construct dams and dig ditches for irrigation, open mines, promote agriculture and fell forests.

While backward, disappointing and disheartening in some regions, in many others the country south of Panama is progressive, gratifying and encouraging. The worst of it is so much less in quantity and permanent influences than the best of it that the latter is sure to dominate eventually the entire area from Colombia and Venezuela on the north to Argentine and Chile on the south. In a few countries it has its shortcomings, its peculiarities of former isolation and the unhappy local conditions of government, society and trade, that sometimes give an unfavorable impression to the traveler and student, but these are so counterbalanced by its progressive potentialities and its remarkable progress in many parts, its enormous latent riches, and its evidences of intellectuality, high civilization and stable government that, viewed in its entirety, it gives promise of a political and social development and economic evolution that will astonish the world.

Although realizing that south of Panama may include the continent of South America, we are hardly able to grasp its greatness of area, population and commerce. We of the north have been spending so much time traveling along eastern and western roads of travel and neglecting southern fields of visit and study, that we are sadly ignorant of what south of Panama really means. Ten wonderful countries—one of them, Brazil, larger than the United States proper—occupy the southern continent, but how many North Americans stop to think that they cover an area of 7,000,000,000 square miles that they possess a population of nearly 60,000,000, and that they conduct an annual foreign commerce valued at $2,000,000,000?

One of them Argentina has the largest per capita foreign commerce of any important country on the face of the earth. The average North American and European, who thinks himself well informed on the general features of the world's history and achievement has vague ideas of the big and favorable things of South America, but he has little actual knowledge of the real facts, and too often has his judgment been warped and prejudiced by exaggerated ideas of the less favorable features of government, peoples, society, climate and commerce. Stories of the heat of low lying tropical coasts cloud his appreciation of the many cool and invigorating plateaus of the interior, and he overlooks the temperate climate of southern South America. * * *

What is wanted today to promote true Pan-American solidarity and unity of purpose in the great family of western nations is an appreciation and accurate knowledge by North America and North Americans of the history and institutions, the peoples and governments, and the present progress and future possibilities of South America and South Americans. Let our boys and girls, our future citizens, upon whom depends the evolution of ideal Pan-Americanism, think and study not alone the terms of Alexander the Great, Caesar, Charlemagne, Charles Martel, Cromwell, Napoleon, Wellington, Washington, Scott, Grant and Lincoln, but let them gain impressions also from the names and achievements of San Martin, Bolivar, Sucre, Artigas, Jose Bonifacio, O'Higgins, Morazan, Hidalgo and Marti, the great liberators and leaders of South American struggles for liberty, independence and free people. When our students discuss educational and intellectual effort and progress in Europe and the United States, let them also take into consideration the educational and intellectual history and development of South America, not forgetting that in Lima, the capital of Peru, was founded the great university of San Carlos almost a century before Harvard opened its doors and that Cordova in Argentina another university was attended by hundreds of students long before Yale and Dartmouth were even planned by their founders.

After our municipal experts have visited and talked of the great cities of Europe they should not overlook Rio de Janeiro, the capital of Brazil, with its population of 1,000,000, its wonderful municipal improvements in the form of board avenues, artistic water fronts and marvelous mountain parks; Montevideo, the attractive capital of Uruguay with a population of 450,000, a city of homes having also a harbor development that represents an expenditure of $12,000,000; Buenos Aires, the capital of Argentina which, with a population of 1,700,000, now takes rank after New York and Chicago, and becomes the third city of the western hemisphere, probably possessing the finest opera house, the best equipped newspaper building and plant and the most elegant clubhouse of any city in the world; and Santiago, the capital of Chile which, with a population of nearly 50,000 souls, is often described as the Paris of the Andes and is famed for the refinement of its people.

Music and Muscle.

From the Dayton News

"The band shall play while coaling," says an order recently issued by the United States navy. The music has nothing to do with the coal, and it would seem to be an unusual time to have music when the dirtiest, most obnoxious work is being done. But that is the order. And it was issued for a purpose.

It has been found that the men are more cheerful when there is music in the air, and be more cheerful the man the better he can work, and the more willingly. So while the men are performing this miserable work they will hear the strains of the music, and to a certain extent forget the weariness of the task.

We are familiar with the effect of music in battle. When men were led into charges when they met the enemy face to face and fought it out in hand to hand fashion, music was deemed essential. But music isn't playing much part in the present struggle for obvious reasons. It wouldn't add anything to the inspiration of the scene now that men are fighting from trenches and hurling death at unseen enemies. But it is still of use in the navy.

Taking the hint from the recent order in the navy, a writer in the Manufacturers Record advocates music in factories. He does not claim that the band should play all the time while the men are working at all tasks, but he does believe that if there were more music about the factories of this country it would be all the better, that the men would be kept in better humor, and therefore in better form for the tasks at hand.

A Midnight Receivership

From the New York World

Minority stockholders in the Rock Island railroad have organized, as they say, to take the property out of the hands of the old management and place it in hands that will operate it for the welfare of its owners and not a football for stock market operations. They make this the equivalent of a fight to get the property out of the present receivership.

Is such a challenge of the propriety and character of the receivership warranted? The federal court certainly acted with singular haste. It acted on the petition of a $15,000 claimant against the road whose unsecured bill had not been repudiated. It then named as one of the two receivers of the road its president, who is a defendant in a suit to recover $7,500,000 alleged to have been misappropriated from the company funds.

Such a receivership is obviously calculated not to remove the property from the control of the old management but to tighten that control. Was it designed so to be?

This is a matter which calls for the most searching inquiry. It is for these minority stockholders to crowd an official investigation.

Caring For Lumber.

From the Farm and Fireside

Wood has its diseases, as everyone familiar with timber knows.

Not all of us, however, know that a piece of timber may be infected with disease and rendered unfit for use by lying in a wet place. The disease will keep on feeding on the fiber of the timber even when it has been used in the building and is in a dry place.

Such a beam or board may collapse under strain, after years in a bridge house, or barn. It is "sick" and gives out.

Many lumber yards are full of timber disease.

The United States forest products laboratory is engaged in the study of this subject with the end in view of showing lumbermen how to keep their timber free from disease.

Lawrence Barrett's Romeo.

From Strand Magazine

Irving contributed to the gaiety of the supper a story about Lawrence Barrett. One night Barrett and his old friend, Edwin Booth, met at their club in New York. Barrett, after brief greeting, bustled towards the door with every appearance of remembering a pressing engagement.

"Halloa! Where are you off to?" Booth asked.

"To a rehearsal," said Barrett.

"What's the play?"

Barrett said it was 'Romeo and Juliet."

"And what part do you take?" Booth asked, in sudden access of interest.

"There is only one part for me in the play," Barrett said, drawing himself up in lofty indignation.

"Oh ah, yes," said Booth, "I know—the Nurse."

The angered tragedian stood forth in haughty silence, and did not speak to Booth for two days.

RECIPES TELL HOW TO PREPARE DAINTIES

Simple Combinations Take Away "Sameness" Which Always Bother Housekeepers.

The following recipes will perhaps be of help to some housekeeper who is perplexed by the finicky spring appetites of her family. So many things do not appeal to one at this time of the year and any little unusual delicacy that can be thought of is grasped eagerly.

Tomato Soup on Toast.

Take one can condensed tomato soup, two tablespoonsful flour, two tablespoonsful butter, one and one-half cups milk, eight slices of toast. Melt the butter and add the flour, pour in the milk gradually. When smooth add the can of soup undiluted, when the mixture is hot serve at once on the toast. A spicy and pleasing novelty.

Poached Eggs With Tomato Sauce.

Heat a can of condensed tomato soup to which has been added a can hot water, one-half teaspoon of salt, a dash of pepper and a small piece of butter. Lay pieces of buttered toast on a deep platter, turn over this the tomato sauce. Place poached eggs on top.

Tomato Sauce on Steak.

Take one and a half pounds of steak, cut in pieces, place in kettle and add one can condensed tomato soup. Add salt and pepper to taste and a piece of butter, three or four onions, one can Italian peppers and a can of water. Simmer until steak is done.

Take one can condensed tomato soup, one can water and one cup of left-over meats ground or chopped fine. Small onion chopped fine. Season with salt, pepper and butter. Cook 15 or 20 minutes and pour over buttered toast. Serve hot.

Try Scrambled Eggs With Tomato Soup

To the yolks of four to six well beaten eggs add one cup of tomato soup in its condensed form just as you get it from the grocer. Salt and pepper. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites, pour in hot skillet, turn lightly with fork, and serve instantly. This is a delightful after theater supper.

Quick Tomato Sauce.

For one can of tomato soup in its condensed form just as it comes from the can add a small lump of butter and one teaspoonful of flour blended in one quarter cup of cold water, and bring all to a boil. The result is a rich tomato flavored tomato sauce easily made in a jiffy and good for any dish where tomato sauce is used.

Do You Recognize These?

In the May American Magazine, James Montgomery Flagg, the famous wit and artist, does an amusing piece in words and pictures about "Wives." Following is an extract:

Most husbands will recognize these wifelets:

"He is the hardest man to cater to I ever knew. (You might gather from this that she had catered for a different man every week or so for 33 years.)

I let him think he's the boss, then I run things the way I want 'em.'

Men are just like children, they think that because we don't say anything to them we don't know all the little tricks they're up to.'

When they get the slightest thing the matter with them they think they're going to die.

If I disagree with George once in two years about some woman's looks he says wives are always jealous.'

'Well I listen to your old stories about the summer you and your family spent up at East Ringe, N. H.'

'I notice that I always order everything I think you like for dinner, and you have a fit if once in six months I order strained gumbo for myself.'

I notice' (do you notice how nothing the little ladies are?) 'that you didn't mind waiting hours for me before we were married and now, if I keep you waiting three minutes, you swear at me. What? Well, I call it swearing at me.'

Nevertheless I wouldn't have missed being married. This is the life.

The Good That Birds Do.

From Countryside Magazine and Suburban Life

The department of agriculture informs us that out of fifty species of hawks and owls, only four are actually injurious to crops. One observer tells us that he has seen with his own eyes an owl of his acquaintance swallowing nine field mice, one after another, until the tail of the last remained in evidence. However, in four hours, this meal having been digested with no apparent effort, the owl was ready for four more mice. The old hawk and his wife will consume a round dozen of mice each during a single day, and in two months' time their youthful brood will devour a similar quantity. It has been stated that a colony of hawks will kill 10,000 rodents in three months' time. We all know what damage mice perpetrate in our grain fields. The farmer may well spare a chicken or two from his henyard in payment for service rendered him by these birds of prey.

THE SUNBEAM'S MISSION.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Once there were many little sunbeams. Their home was right in the shining sun. When the stars would fade away and one by one the flowers and birds begin to stir, the little sunbeams would shine on the dewey earth and all would awaken for the day. From his shining throne the great Sun spoke one day. "I wish you all to start on a mission of love today. Each little beam is to perform the greatest act of kindness it knows how. When I am sinking to the west in the evening sky, each will bring to me his noble deed. I will listen and the little sunbeam which has done the noblest act I will make unto myself in brilliancy."

So as the day dawned, away flew the sunbeams. Goldenhead, Sapphire-eyes, Pearlywing and many others. Little Heartease was a tiny beam, and when the blazing master Sun gave this command she was afraid. What could a wee sunbeam do to please so great a master? She saw the shining beams dart across the smiling world, each on its mission of love.

Then she stole behind a passing cloud and her little heart was sad. She was too tiny to try in the big contest.

Then the cloud drifted by and Little Heartease found herself shining down upon the earth. The dewy lilies lifted their heads and she drank the dew from their cups, the little birds sunned themselves in her warm rays, as she passed.

"Oh, mother, see the sunbeam."

But Little Sunbeam wished she might bring back a noble act to lay at the great Sun's feet. Her path lay across golden fields of grain and clear bubbling streams, but no act had Little Heartease found to do.

The day wore on and Little Heartease grew very sad when her rays fell on a dingy, dark street in a great city. So dark was the street the Little Heartease could scarcely make her way.

'Maybe I can find an act of love to perform here," she thought.

Down the dark street she passed, when there before her stood a little brown house. Through the little brown pane of glass Little Sunbeam streamed. There was a faint whisper, and Sunbeam found her rays lighting up the face of a pale, sweet woman. It was an ill mother with her little ones around her.

'Oh mother, see the sunbeam!" cried one of the children. "You said that when the dark clouds passed and the sun shone again that you would be well." Then Little Heartease shone all the brighter until the mother's face began to smile again. The color came to her cheeks and her eyes grew bright. "My babies," she whispered, "the sunbeam has made me well."

Heartease lingered long on the happy family and when she looked the sun was far down in the western sky.

"Well, my little sunbeams, tell me what you have done today," said the master Sun. Goldenhead told of the flowers she had brought to life. Sapphire-eyes of the tears she had dried and Pearlywing of the birds she had awakened. Then Little Heartease came before the great Sun trembling and told of the mother she had brought back to her little ones. 'It is to you, then, Little Heartease, the prize must be given, for a mothr's life is the noblest of all."

Training the Child.

In the course of a very interesting little article entitled "Your Children's Manners" in the Woman's Home Companion appears the following wise comment:

"Good company manners depend upon good home manners. As for table manners the active child who from his earliest years has been accustomed to regular meals of simple food with sufficient variety for his health and pleasure will be hungry enough at mealtime to eat anything that is put before him. If from the beginning he has been encouraged by example, then good table manners will be as natural as breathing. They will be a part of him, and he will make use of them wherever he is.

The place for a parent to begin training the manners of her child is with her own manners. Whenever a mother complains to me of the bad manners of her child she is unconsciously lodging a complaint against herself as a mother. Of course a certain amount of boisterousness and willfulness is to be expected, and hoped for in the child but bad manners spring almost invariably from the carelessness, lack of consideration, artificial ideals, lack of time—many busy mothers it is true, cannot give the time they wish to their children—of those who are responsible for the child's training.

"The old ideal of training in behavior was based largely upon the principle of the child's consideration for its elders; the modern principle demands also the elders consideration for the child."

The Next Empress of Austria.

From the Woman's Home Companion

The emperor, Franz Josef, is, as every one knows, 85 years old—a worn and aged monarch.

Archduchess Zita will be 23 years old on the 9th day of May and will in consequence be the youngest empress recorded in many a decade. The Austrians, and in particular the Viennese, greet this fact with delight. Only the very old recall Empress Elizabeth in her fresh beauty when she came to them as Emperor Franz Josef's bride. The saddest story of her later life, her complete withdrawal from the Austrian capital many years ago on the tragic death of her only son, Crown Prince Rudolf, and to take up her residence at the palace in Corfu which later became the holiday home of the German emperor, left the imperial city without an empress.

Advancing years have brought frightful sorrows to Franz Josef, beginning with the suicide or murder of his son, a mystery unsolved, and later to be followed by the cruel assassination of the Empress Elizabeth at Geneva. Social functions of his court were minimized, Vienna, once the gayest capital in Europe, grew through these happenings, combined with troubles financial and political, to be the saddest. The people have longed for an empress to revive traditions of a brilliant court. It means not only a resurrection of social life, but of trade, and of that spirit of joy which every Viennese, from lowest to highest, regards as his birthright.

Czar's Water Wagon No Bluff.

Capt. Granville Fortescue, in the American Magazine.

When Russia went to war the czar with a stroke of his pen put 180,000,000 people on the water wagon. And, believe me, this water wagon "ikon" is no bluff. It is harder to get a drink in Russia today than it is at Lake Mohonk.

How wise was this edict of the ruler of Russia is now shown in the condition of his army. Their fighting effectiveness is higher than that of the French and fully equal to the English, measured by the physical fitness of the units composing the forces.

On the other hand, the German soldiers nearly all carry flasks of whisky or other spirits. Ivan the Siberian knows this, and I fear that the famous edict is sometimes broken when a batch of prisoners is gathered in. The flasks are certainly contraband of war.

Four hundred years ago the average length of human life was between 18 and 20 years. One hundred years ago the average human life was less than 30. The average human life today reaches nearly 40 years.

Dinners Sent By Parcel Post.

From the Farm and Fireside.

A contributor describes the activities of a western man and his wife who are making a living by sending [illegible] the country to city customers. Among the packing cases they send plump young chickens, flanked on one side by [illegible] made cheese and on the other by a little of Jersey cream. In addition, the following vegetables are included—sweet corn, young potatoes, green beans and shelled peas. Raspberries and other fruits are also sent in season. The author of the article goes on as follows:

"Why isn't this a fine opportunity for any woman who loves to make things grow, and who owns or is able to get a small place in the first or second zone from the city?

"It is so hard at present to get competent farm labor that many farmers would gladly rent their small tenant houses which formerly were used for farm hands to live in and are now vacant, and a small tract of land with them. This little house may be made quite cozy, and by the judicious use of fertilizers the few acres will produce wonderfully. An agreement should be made for the privilege of renting the ground for a fixed number of years, so that the labor and expense of setting out small fruits need not be lost by the termination of the lease.

"Such things as blackberries, raspberries, and strawberries bring in quick returns. All kinds of vegetables can be raised, and it is surprising how many kinds there are and how large a yield may be had. One horse will be necessary to get the ground in good condition and tend the truck. A cow or two and a few dozen chickens will add greatly to the income."

Splendid Advice.

From the Farm and Fireside.

A contributor to the current issue tells as follows how to avoid lawsuits.

"Talk about no one.

"Make friends with people who like you.

"Give no one cause to hate you.

"Do not injure trespassing stock.

"If the line fence needs mending, go together; and get it done at once, and don't quarrel over a foot or two of land.

"Help any living thing in distress, especially a sick or poor neighbor.

"Don't sign any papers unless you are sure of their contents.

"Don't brag about your bank account.

"Don't go on any person's note unless to save him home; for, while your sympathy may be all right, the debt may send your own wife to the poor house.

The two young men came face to face at 6 o'clock just as Horace had planned they should do. It was part of Chetwynd's explanation that should confess himself to Eric. They were to have no listeners no witnesses. Eric was surprised a trifle dismayed when they came upon each other to all appearances in an accidental manner.

Chetwynd's method of acknowledging his deed was characteristic of him but hardly what Mr Blagden in his justice, intended. He came close to Eric, his clenched hands stuffed deep in his trousers' pockets his lower jaw protruding and his heavy brows drawn tightly together.

"You infernal sneak. You son of a —No, father particularly request[ed] me not to use that word so I won't say it. But you knows what I mean."

That was his way of confessing.

Eric simply grinned and turned away, leaving his big [illegible] more potently furious than he had ever been in his life.

The next morning Eric and Adam Carr [illegible] during dinner. That [illegible] was seated on Judge [illegible] when the young man [illegible] ask Jonn to let him take [illegible] her with the new [illegible] just given to Mar[illegible] commissioned to [illegible] in New York. Mary had cried over it and in the privacy of the back hall [illegible] Eric that she would never [illegible] cause it would show [illegible] lence was pure asinine.

"Well Eric and our Adam," [illegible] "When did you get back?"

Adam's sour smile appeared and faded in a breath. "Why don't you ask the question you really mean to ask?" he demanded smartly. "What am I doing here? That's your question. Well I'm sitting here. Now I'll answer one you just put to me. I got back yesterday on the 11:10."

"That's the train Chetwynd came on."

"Did he?" asked Adam politely but without interest.

"He has been in New York."

"Strange I didn't run across him there. New York's such a small burg. You're always seeing people you know. I hope you've not come up to take Miss Joan out for another swim."

"I should say not. No more of this for me."

"Judge Enright's [illegible] he'd put in a kick."

"Are you waiting to see him?"

"No."

"Oh?" somewhat dashed.

"He's waiting to see me."

"He's waiting. I don't understand. Where?"

"That is he's waiting for me to put in an appearance."

"Well! You're here aren't you?" asked Eric blankly.

"Yes, but he doesn't know it. He's waiting for me to ring the door bell. But I saw you coming along behind me so I thought I'd stop and say howdy to you. How does your sister like her camera?"

Eric started. "How did you know she had a new camera?"

"It came from Baxter's [illegible] and it has her initials stamped in gold on the inside of the box."

Eric opened the box as he called it, and looked inside. He saw the initials for the first time. They were so minute he could hardly distinguish them. He whistled in astonishment.

"Well I'll be hanged!" he gasped, looking at the man in genuine wonder. "You thought it cost $60 didn't you?"

"That's what it did cost," cried the other. "Aunt Rena told me so. You missed fire that time."

"Who told her it cost $60?"

"She gave Chetwynd $60. By George! I see. He kept the balance?"

"Well I wouldn't put it just that way," said Adam softly. "He couldn't keep something he didn't have."

"Don't speak in riddles," cried Eric. "He had just $30 when he went into Baxter's. I daresay he kept the $3 for a cab and breakfast on the train. He couldn't keep the extra 30, for the simple reason that some one else was keeping it for him."

"What the dickens——"

"Now don't resort to profanity. It's a very bad habit for one to get into," said Adam, with tantalizing seriousness.

With unseemly abruptness Eric sat down beside him on the porch seat. His eyes glowed with a great light of understanding as he gripped Adam Carr's sturdy leg in his eager fingers and almost whispered the question.

"I say, Mr Carr, were you shadowing Chetwynd?"

Adam appeared distinctly amazed. "Well, well! What put that into your head?"

"Why should you be watching him?" demanded the other, tremendously excited.

"I wasn't watching him," said Mr Carr, severely. "I just happened to be in Baxter's at the time. I couldn't help hearing the conversation. I repeat your question. Why should I be watching him? Has he done anything wrong?"

Eric was baffled. Suddenly he renewed the assault.

"Then why did you say some one else was keeping the money for him?" he demanded shrewdly.

Adam's face became positively sphinx like. He looked out over the mass of rose bushes on the lawn.

"Can you keep a secret?" he asked.

"Yes, yes!" cried Eric.

"Well, some day I may tell you one," announced Adam in his most confidential manner.

"Oh, pshaw!"

"You can begin keeping it right now. There's more to come. Don't repeat this conversation."

"But can't you tell me something——"

"No. You see, it's a secret. I never tell secrets so long as they are secrets. I'm like you in that respect."

The expression on Eric's face betrayed the groping of his mind after a vague, indefinite thought that had flitted across his inner vision like a flash of light. It came and swiftly passed, but it left an impression that developed into something tangible with a suddenness that caused him to gasp.

"By George!" he cried, searching the inscrutable face with gleaming eyes. "Uncle Horace hasn't set you to watching Chetwynd, has he?"

"I — should — say — not!" exclaimed Adam Carr with an amazed look at the questioner. It was his turn to be puzzled. Mr Carr was never surprised.

"Why should he want to have him watched?"

Eric caught the cunning eager gleam in the man's eyes and hesitated. There was something back of all this that he could not understand, and he began to feel the wisdom of keeping a close tongue in his head. After all who was Adam Carr? What were his secret motives?

"I just asked that is all," he said lamely. The other merely grunted.

"I guess I'll ring the bell now," he said, arising. A moment later Eric started to ask another question but thought better of it. He looked at the sturdy back and thick neck of the man who pulled the bell knob and thought not of a bulldog but of a bloodhound. There was something cruel and relentless in the back of the strange man, in keeping with the face of him. The boy experienced the sudden uncanny sensation of [illegible] during closeness to Adam Carr as if he had known him in [illegible] in some form or another all his life and always would know him. Fondly enough and concurrent with the strange impression Adam turned, after pulling the bell and said:

"I like you. We'll be good friends for a long time, mark my word. Long may we both all live, I hope."

Judge Enright himself came to the [illegible] at the tinkling of the

A man in Goodell lost his Ford under peculiar circumstances last week He left the car standing in front of a store while he went in to do some trading In the meantime a farmer came along and tied his dog to the machine The dog thought some one had tied a can to his tail and started for home on the run The car was finally located and except for a sore spot on the dog's tail everything appears to be all right.

C A. Arnild is one of the progressive farmers who believe in the alfalfa game and has planted about five acres more this year. He has a patch of five acres that out of three cuttings last year averaged better than 5 tons to the acre. Alfalfa is being raised quite extensively in some parts of the state, and our neighbor county to the south, Wright, is starting hundreds if acres this year. Some people are under the impression that alfalfa will not thrive in this section but those who are trying it are very well pleased We would like to see more of our farmers give it a trial. Mr Arnold is raising the Grim, which seems to be pretty well adapted to our soil.

The rally in the tabernacle last Monday evening was largely attended and a good program was given The Corwith orchestra gave a good musical program before the speaking commenced. Everyone was greatly disappointed owing to Senator Kenyon's non-appearance. His absence was caused by sickness but a substitute was secured in the person of Rev. Spence, of Ft. Dodge, who is a more fluent speaker than the senator. He and Evangelist Hamilton opened up the battle for a new church building at Corwith by firing hot shot from the shoulder at any one who dared say nay to the project. From the way the talk of the productiveness of the soil around Corwith and the money to be made from cultivation of the soil, neither one would be a failure as a boomer in the real estate business, Rev. Cole had a big meeting, a good program and the best of feeling prevailed and it seems very probable that he will succeed in his undertaking in building a large church edifice.—Corwith Hustler.

The above list of cows, which are the best that the Klemme cows testing Association have to publish at this time are the kind we should strive to produce Without an excepton every cow n the list was of the big type, which only goes to show that regardless of the breed you are raising, the largest cows in that breed, are, as a general rule, the heaviest producers. Get away from the scrubby kind, and go to raising the big, heavy producing type and your cream checks will be doubled by the change. Some may say, that the large cow will eat more. Yes, she will eat a little more, but the amount of feed that she eats, above that which the scrub eats, is not in proportion to the amount of cream that she will produce, above that which the scrub produces It is a good deal more profitable to have a half dozen good cows than a dozen poor ones regardless of the amount of feed consumed, by the big cows

Farm Tour Is Arranged

A committee consisting of P. M. Greismer C W Wiles, Wm Trafford, H E Bonwell and M M Magner made a trip by auto last week Wednesday and made arrangements for the farm tour which will be held on Saturday June, 26th. The first stop will be made at the Oscar Swanson farm east of Klemme, for swine, hence to the Sterling Stock Farm for Beef animals, then to C A Arnolds for Alfalfa, and then west of Andrew Anderson's farm for general farm buildings and stock and grain farm From there the party will go to West Twin Lake where the picnic dinner will be held It is being planned to have the Klemme band to be at that point at least where they will render a concert. After the dinner festivities the touring party will go to a farm just east of Kanwha for soil testing and then to the Ed. Williams Stock Farm for beef animals From there the party will make their longest non-stop trip going north of Britt, and through Duncan and Garner to the D D Ross place just south of Garner for dairy building and possibly dairy animals, from there the party will go to the G I Schaper farm for dual purpose animals, where the trip will be ended. We believe that the trip as outlined is about as good as could be arranged for and the milage kept down as low as possible. Besides visiting some of the best farms in the county, the party will have the privelege of seeing the towns of Klemme, Kanawha, Britt, Duncan and Garner, and also seeing the county farm. The trip is due to start from Klemme at 8 30 in the morning and will be finished in plenty of time so those in attendance will be able to reach home in plenty of time for supper. The following are the professors who will be sent here by the Extension Department M M Hoffman, Agricultural Engineering, Roy F. O'Donnell, Animal Husbandry; Murl McDonald, Farm Crops Soils, Dr W E. Simonseer, Veterinary and Miss Katherine S. Miller, Home Economics

How Teachers Can Help Crippled Children

(From Midland Schools, April 1915)

The General Assembly recently passed a law which the Chicago Tribune pronounces one of the most important constructive measures recently enacted. It is known as the Perkins bill, and its object is to aid deformed children, and in addition to this, those suffering from any malady which may probably be remedied, and whose parents are unable to provide proper treatment The provision of the bill may be thus shortly summed up. Auy judge of a district or superior court sitting as a juvenile court may, on his own motion or on information furnished by a probaton officer, an overseer of the poor, a regularly licensed physician, or a public school teacher, of a child under sixteen years of age suffering with a deformity or malady which may probably be remedied, order a hearing on the facts in the case, the parents and the county attorney being notified. The judge is empowered to to appoint a local physician to examine the child and report to him, on blanks furnished by the state for this purpose, concerning the condition of the child and whether in his opinion there is a probability that he may be helped by treatment. If it appears to the court that such is the case, and the parents give their consent, the child may then be committed to the university hospital at Iowa City for treatment, and the actual expenses at the hospital will be paid by the state on the order of the executive council. No fees will be allowed to the physicians for this treatment. The only expense the state will be put to will be the actual expenses of caring for the child in the university hospital. This act will prove a veritable boon to many children in the state. We have at Iowa City now one of the best medical colleges in the country. It is one of twenty-five medical institutions rated by the American Medical Association as in the "A plus" class. The medical faculty of the university contains some of the most eminent specialists in the United States, many of whom are devoting the major part of their time to clinical work and who make money-making a secondary matter. By the provisions of this act, the services of these skillful and conscientious specialists are made available to every afflicted child within the borders of the state whose parents are not able to pay for proper treatment in the usual way. As we look at it, one of the wisest provisions of this bill is the one which permits public school teachers to take the initiative. Public school teachers more than any other persons know the needs of the children of the community in which they work, and as a rule they know the circumstances of the parents as well. We hope that teachers everywhere will take note of this and if they have knowledge of children who properly come under the provision of this act that they bring the matter to the attention of the court in the county in which they reside, and thus secure for the children the relief which the bill offers. No other service they can render will have such a lasting effect for good The law will be effective July, first, next

Experiments with house flies recently made abroad seem to indicate that they tend to travel either against or across the wind This direction may be directly determined by the action of the wind or indirectly, owing to the flies being attracted by odors borne by the wind Fine weather and warmth favor dispersal and flies travel farther in the open country than in towns—probably because the houses offer food and shelter In thickly housed localities the usual maximum flight is about a quarter of a mile, but in one case a single fly was recovered at a distance of 770 yards -partly over open fenland When set free in the afternoon flies do not scatter as in the morning Liberated flies often mount almost vertically to a height of 45 feet or more.

William E. Linglebach, professor of modern European history at the University of Pennsylvania since 1908, believes that the ejection of the Turk from Europe will not settle the near eastern question and that it may be only the beginning of greater troubles in the Balkans His opinion has attracted considerable editorial attention of late. He is a native of Ontario, Canada. After graduating from the University of Toronto, he went to Europe, devoting a year to study at the University of Leipsic For the last 17 years he has been a member of the University of Pennsylvania faculty

That special medical attention should be given to children in the four or five early years before school begins is asserted by Dr David Forsyth an English physician, whose views are published in a bulletin just issued by the United States bureau of education Dr Forsyth declares that medical inspection of elementary school children points to a widespread physical deterioration during the first four or five years of life which leaves the majority of children with serious but preventable defects

236,000 HORSES AND 42,000 MULES FROM U. S. FOR WAR ZONE

Figures on Shipments Compiled at Iowa State College—To Improve Grades.

Ames Ia May 22—A total of 236,000 horses and 42,000 mules has been shipped from the United States to Europe since the war broke out, according to figures compiled in the office of the animal husbandry department of Iowa State college The average valuation of the horses was $160 and that of the mules somewhat lower This amounts to $37,760,000 worth of horses exclusive of the mules

Prof W H. Pew, head of the animal husbandry department, states that in the end he believes this large exportation will be a distinct benefit to the horse industry of the United States. He says these figures mean that this country has been getting rid of a class of horses that had no market here This in turn will leave an opening for the development of a better class of draft horses

FARMERS FRIGHTENED BY ESCAPED LEOPARD

Marshalltown Ia May 22 A leopard belonging to a company showing here escaped from his cage in the carnival grounds into timber two miles northeast of the city and as a result drove terror into the hearts of at least two young men of the country near where the animal took up temporary abode

While on his way through the woods to the carnival grounds Frank Holmes a farm hand employed by C H Hicks into whose timber the leopard escaped, came across the animal in the dark All Holmes could see were two shining eyes in the semidarkness of the evening Holmes beat a fast retreat through the timber

Ward Rebeckke another young man employed by Hicks also got a glimpse of the animal in the woods and he was likewise as badly frightened The carnival attaches, who had been beating the woods nearer by the carnival grounds in search of the beast, were informed by Hicks that it was in his timber After a search they found the leopard and got it safely back in its cage

CALIFORNIA WEATHER DEPRESSES IOWA GIRL

San Francisco, Cal May 22 This is a weather story and a California weather story at that

During the past two months in San Francisco there have been just five days when the sun shone This may not be exactly correct according to the United States weather bureau but it is within 30 minutes of being right

The social secretary of the Iowa commission Miss Wilda Smith of Clinton has been on the job since late in February and being accustomed to real good Iowa weather, is not at all in sympathy with the brand that they serve out here

The other day a visitor came in during a drizzle and made some remark about the beauty of the building or something else equally important

Isn't this awful weather we're having suggested Miss Smith by way of making conversation and playing her part in the commission's organization

Oh said the visitor I am from Oregon and I'm used to it'

"Well" retorted Miss Smith "I am from Iowa and I am not used to it'

So much for California sunshine and flowers There are a lot of homesick Iowans out here

IOWA CONGRESSMAN TO JOIN RANKS OF BENEDICTS

Bloomfield Ia May 22 Although no formal announcement has been made as yet it is generally understood among friends of Representative C W Ramsey of the Sixth district, that he is to be married to Miss Ruby Phillips, daughter of Mr and Mrs George Phillips, early in June

The Bloomfield congressman is one of the six unmarried legislators representing Iowa at Washington, D C, during the last few years The late Irvin S Pepper, of the Second district, who died about a year ago, was said to have been a rival of his colleague, Maurice Connolly for the hands of Speaker Clarke's daughter The other solons who so far proved themselves invulnerable to Cupids' caprices are Congressmen C A Kennedy, of the First district C C Dowell, of the Seventh and Frank P Woods, of the Tenth

FORMER DEPUTY AUDITOR SUFFERS NERVOUS COLLAPSE

Des Moines Ia May 22 Marion M Keller formerly chief deputy county auditor, who resigned under pressure a few weeks ago is reported as being seriously ill at his home in Elkhart, suffering from a nervous breakdown

County Supervisor Charles Keller brother of the former official, said yesterday that his brother's condition is serious

Dr E F Gadd of Des Moines, Keller's physician said that his patient is seriously but not critically ill 'While he is suffering considerable, said the physician I have no doubt but that he will recover all right'

Keller owns a general store at Elkhart He has been devoting his time to that business since leaving the auditor's office

JAPANESE EDITOR SEES END OF WAR BY SEPTEMBER

Iowa City Ia, May 22 Minori Maita foreign editor of the Tokyo Asahi, leading newspaper of Japan, who is a 1903 graduate of Iowa spent a day in Iowa City as the guest of Prof. Benjamin F Shambaugh, en route to New York city where on May 29 he will embark on the American liner New York city for London to cover the war for his paper

Speaking of international affairs, Maita said that diplomatic circles of Japan anticipated a cessation of hostilities by September, and at the very latest by January, 1916

The correspondent talked freely of Japan's position in the war, and of the recent unpleasantness between his nation and China. "We shall remain in a strictly defensive position," said Maita, 'until any German invasion in the Orient is threatened."

YORK GRANTED NEW TRIAL ON WHITE SLAVE CHARGE

Des Moines, Ia., May 21.—George P York the Colfax grocer who acquired notoriety in connection with the mysterious case of Cashier Wheelock some months ago, was granted a new trial on the charge of white slavery by the circuit court of appeals at St. Paul yesterday York was convicted of transporting Mrs. O E. Jackson from Kansas City to Des Moines and was sentenced for a year and a day. The upper court holds that the exclusion of certain testimony entitles him to a rehearings

Lee Grant, of Ida Grove, Makes Sensational Answer to Suit of Baxter Bros.

Ida Grove Ia May 22 Lee Grant, of this city, by his attorneys, yesterday filed a sensational answer to a suit instituted by Baxter Bros., bankers, for collection of a note He claims that the bankers are illegally holding title to the Central Roller Mills which he says was deeded to them merely in trust without consideration and with no grantee designated Action for collection of the note was commenced on April 17, last, and at that time attachment proceedings were instituted against the milling property

Mr Grant's answer contains three counts In the first he admits that he signed the note in question but says that it was given to the bank under an agreement that the bank was to assist him in retaining possession of a stock of merchandise that he had bought at Davis, S D In this count he admits that he was indebted to the bank but not in the amount claimed In the second count he claims he was damaged by reason of the bank making levy on certain lands in which he had an equity in Oregon county Missouri and which caused him expense and trouble in renewing a loan The third count says that on February 20 1915, he was the owner of the Central Roller Mills in the town of Ida Grove and that fearful of some litigation pending in Kansas he gave a deed in blank with no description of property and no amount of consideration to the bank for this milling property

On February 26 1915 he entered into a contract for the sale of the mill to Otto Nelson in which he (Grant) was to receive eight quarter sections of land in South Dakota both parties to assume indebtedness Grant says the bank asserted when he demanded the deed, that it had been lost and the trade was declared off Later he says, the same deed, signed by Grant and his wife, was filed in the county recorder's office and the name of R B Baxter had been placed therein as grantee

Grant claims that he never at any time had any talk with R B Baxter about selling him the milling property and never gave the bank or any one else authority to fill out the amount or sell the same

By reason of the transaction Grant claims he has been damaged in the sum of $22,500, and he asks that the court give him a judgment in that amount

Baxter Bros & Co absorbed the banking house of Baxter Reed & Co about two years ago and the firm is recognized as one of the strongest private banks in northwestern Iowa Lee Grant, who has become defendant in the attachment proceedings is also well known here and is engaged in the real estate business

FEDERATION WOMEN WILL BOOST FOR HOUSEKEEPERS

Iowa City Ia May 22 Iowa's federation women may make a special effort in the way of encouraging discovering and developing young housekeepers. Such a suggestion was made in the annual report of Mrs Benjamin B Clark president of the federation in her annual report. Mrs Clark said

Iowa is reported as producing more money by agriculture this year than any other state in the union We take pride in it Would it not be of as great value if we might say Iowa produced more girls who were good housekeepers than were the girls of any other state' I fancy several millions in money could be saved if this were true'

Reports of other officers were made as follows Recording secretary Mrs F F Faville, Storm Lake corresponding secretary Mrs W H Snider, Davenport treasurer Mrs. Etta E Agnew Marshalltown auditor Mrs Mary H S. Johnson, Humboldt and custodian Miss Julia A Robinson Des Moines

OFFICIALS TRY TO LOCATE OWNERSHIP OF CHURCH

Davenport May 22 To whom does a church without a congregation or a minister belong? This is the perplexing question that three Scott county officials are now attempting to solve They are the county attorney Henry H Jebens the county recorder Frank Holm and the county auditor Ed Colling

The church is in Blue Grass a thriving German community west of here The last minister left and the congregation disbanded over 50 years ago when a German freethinker colony moved into the neighborhood and acquired control of affairs

As long as the present inhabitants can remember this little old Baptist church has been abandoned There is no church in the village and the inhabitants believe they do not need one But they do need a city hall and as the church building is in the very center of the town they wish to tear it down and replace it with a new city hall

ROOM OF DEAD MAN HAS APPEARANCE OF ARSENAL

Waterloo, Ia. May 20. When the coroner was called to the room where Ivan G W Mowrer had been found dead he found the place to be a veritable arsenal

Mowrer, who was 40 years old and had been here only two months, died with his clothes on When found he wore cowboy boots and in his trousers pocket was a loaded automatic revolver Near at hand were other revolvers, some of them loaded, rifles, ammunition and Indian relics.

ALFALFA CONTEST IN SIOUX COUNTY FIRST EVER HELD IN STATE

Orange City Bank Posts Prizes of $150—Arie Raak Winner of First Place.

Orange City Ia., May 21.—One of the first alfalfa contests conducted in Iowa has just been completed by the Northwestern State bank of Orange City. This bank offered $160 in cash prizes for the five best alfalfa seedings made in their territory in 1914 The fields were required to be five acres or more in size and the owner a depositor or borrower of the above bank

A representative of Iowa State college was secured to do the judging The uniformity and thickness of stand, height of plants, and vigor color and freedom from injury were the factors considered in the judging Eighteen fields were judged and scored on this basis.

The first prize of $50 was won by Arie Raak, second prize, $40, by Klay and Gaalswyk third prize $30, John Aalders fourth prize $20, Betsy Kramer fifth prize $10 D Van Oosterhout

The first prize field was seeded in April 1914 with three pecks of wheat per acre as a nurse crop. The wheat was cut for hay about July 1 The alfalfa plants stood 17 inches high on May 13 1915 in spite of extremely dry weather this spring It was estimated that the first cutting which will be made in a week would yield two tons of hay per acre Mr Raak also has six acres of alfalfa seeded several years ago which was a revelation to the 20 men watching the judging of the contest

The field of Klay and Gaalswyk winning second prize was seeded in the fall on summer fallowed land and contained 10 acres The growth stood 12 inches high last week This farm has nearly 20 acres of alfalfa some of which has been seeded for five years

PLANS MADE FOR FUNERAL— BUT PRINCIPAL BALKS

Marshalltown, Ia May 21 - Plans for a funeral went glimmering here for the very good reason that the expected corpse failed to materialize Last Friday George McManus of Des Moines telephoned relatives here that a telegram from Joplin Mo told of the death of his father killed in a railroad accident

McManus left Des Moines for Joplin and relatives here went ahead with the funeral arrangements Obituary notices were published in the newspapers orders for the digging of the grave had been given and friends placed orders for flowers

Then word came that Frank McManus the father was alive and well and that there would be no funeral The orders for grave and flowers were canceled

A message from George McManus said a man had been killed and someone had identified the body positively as being that of Frank McManus In McManus grip was the address of his son at Des Moines and he was notified It seems that McManus was not at his rooming place and following his identification his room was searched for some inkling as to his relatives

PUSHING REORGANIZATION OF IOWA NATIONAL GUARD

Des Moines Ia May 21 Adjutant General Logan has received information to the effect that at Davenport they are ready to erect an armory if the third battery of artillery is located in the city If so located it will complete the battery organization The Muscatine company of artillery is ready for muster in at any time Colonel Howell reports the practical completion of the four troops of cavalry in the county about Lone Tree North English and Riverside The next step in completing the organization of the Iowa national guard along national lines will be the formation of the engineering corps at Iowa City

No haste is being made in this matter because of any international complications nor is there the slightest suspicion that the guard may be used as there was when the Mexican rebellion became acute a year or so ago but when the guard is organized it will be so that it can be taken at once into the regular army

LEADING ALGONA MERCHANT ENDS LIFE IN DES MOINES RIVER

Algona Ia May 21—Les Herbst one of the leading dry goods merchants of Algona committed suicide by drowning himself in the Des Moines river Mr Herbst went to his home during the forenoon complaining of a headache and informed his family he would take a stroll in the woods When he did not return at the dinner hour his daughter and a neighbor started a search and found his hat and coat on the banks of the river and tracks leading into the water Assistance was summoned and the body was found under the Milwaukee railroad bridge with a heavy stone tied to the neck

Mr Herbst besides enjoying a large income from his dry goods business, was a heavy land owner and also owned bank stocks He was 49 years of age and leaves a wife and four children No reason is known for his act

IOWA FEDERATION WOMEN OPEN ANNUAL SESSION TODAY

Iowa City Ia, May 21 - Mrs J J Grandy of Des Moines, who had a show of strong support for the presidency of the Iowa Federation of Women's clubs has announced that she will not be a candidate This leaves Mrs Barry of Cedar Rapids as the only avowed candidate but the indications are that there will be other entries, precipitating a lively contest

Members of the Oskaloosa delegation, among the first to register for the session are dressed in wartime fashion with military hats Other delegates were garbed in harmony with the spirit of militancy

The opening business sessions of the federation session were held today, but the informal opening occurred last night when the delegates were guests at a Greek play President Macbride of the University delivered the address of welcome to the delegates this morning

WIFE OF IOWA FARMER GOES DOWN WITH BIG LINER

Iowa City Ia May 19—It is believed Mrs John Graham, wife of a farm hand working on the Wm Schriber farm east of Iowa City, and little baby are among those lost on the Lusitania Mrs Graham sailed from New York on the ill fated liner and has not been heard from since Her name was not among those saved and her husband now fears that Mrs. Graham suffered the fate of the hundreds of other passengers.

Mrs Graham was bound for England on a long contemplated visit with her parents who reside near London

SPECIAL GUARDS ARE NOW MAINTAINED FOR GOVERNMENT ARSENAL

These Precautions Not Previously in Force Since War With Spain.

Davenport Ia., May 20.—The Rock Island arsenal still remains under the strictest guard imaginable, with all vehicle and pedestrian traffic suspended. Guards are posted at all the entrances, at the approaches of the railroad bridges, and along the shore of the island, where guards have not been stationed since the Spanish-American war

Workmen in the big shops say that sentinels are stationed in every department, and that each workingman is kept under the closest possible surveillance The force has not been increased, however, the payroll now showing 2 000 men, according to Col. George W Burr, commandant.

CITY'S POWER LIMITED BY GUIDANCE OF STATUTES

Des Moines, Ia May 20 --An opinion handed down yesterday by the supreme court says that a city or town has no right to pass an ordinance requiring the planking of bridges or crossings for traction engines The law requiring the planking of bridges and crossings has been repealed and the court says that a city can go no further in regulations than the state law

The case was that of the town of Hedrick against Fred Hanz. It was tried in Keokuk county Judge Talbott holding the ordinance legal The opinion was written by Justice Gaynor.

This holding is taken at the state house to mean that city ordinances relative to motor car traffic, which go further than the state law, will be knocked out in case an offender appeals.

The convention opened this morning and will end Friday night Several noted women's club workers are scheduled to speak The convention promises to go on record for reform in child welfare conditions Among those appearing on the program will be Mrs T A Black Miss Margaret Gay Dollier and Mrs William Millchrist, of Sioux City

M. B. A. FIGHT ARGUED BEFORE SUPREME COURT

Des Moines, Ia May 20. The insurgent fight in the Modern Brotherhood of America was aired before the supreme court in arguments on behalf of the insurgents for an order to permit them to examine the books and records of the society and to secure a list of the names and addresses of the members. The contest has been on since December, 1912

There has been considerable litigation in the M B. A case in the lower courts. This is the first time it reached the high court From questions asked of the attorneys presenting the case, it appeared that there is doubt whether the request of the insurgents will be granted Justice Salinger was especially active in reaching the law points involved in the controversy and inquiring into the proposition of whether the list of names might be improperly used by the insurgents. The Linn county district court issued an order to permit examination of the books but refused permission to the insurgents to take off a list of names. From this order they appealed

FINDS POLL BOOK WHICH WAS USED APRIL 6, 1857

Bellevue, Ia., May 20.—While going over some old papers in his office recently J C Campbell came across the official poll book of Bellevue township for the election held here on April 6, 1857

The book shows that there were 238 votes cast at the election, at which E. G Potter John Murray and William Simpson acted as judges, and William Warren and W G McNulty as clerks.

Of the 238 who voted here on that date 58 years ago, there are still residing in this immediate vicinity but two men B W Seward and Daniel Daugherty.

TWO "DISAPPEARANCES" ARE DEVOID OF TRAGEDY

Shenandoah, Ia May 20. C M Christensen the Shenandoah man who disappeared after writing suicide notes, is working in a packing house in South Omaha, according to information received here. A traveling salesman stated to Frank Bauer a local merchant that he had talked with the missing man

A C Allen the farm hand who disappeared at the same time, has returned to his former position with Joe Aurached Curiously enough he has rented the home left vacant by the Christensen family

CLOSER CHECK ORDERED ON INSANITY PATIENTS

Des Moines Ia, May 20.—Letters were sent yesterday by the state board of control to the commissions of insanity in each county of the state requesting them to aid in reducing the number of persons sent to the state insane hospitals The board asks the local commissions to refuse to send harmless insane persons to the state hospitals who can and should be taken care of by relatives. It also asks that as many insane as possible be sent to the county farms.

The commissions are asked to consult with the boards of supervisors relative to withdrawing from the state hospitals as many insane as can be accommodated in the county homes.

The move on the part of the board of control is due to the fact that the insane hospitals are overcrowded. At Clarinda the hospital has a capacity of 1 050 persons. There are 1,205 insane patients being cared for there.

AUTO TURNS OVER AND INJURES AGED WOMAN

Des Moines, Ia., May 18.—The overturning of a large touring car south of the army post resulted in the serious injury of Mrs. Mary Landers, 85 years old of 2706 Mondamin avenue. She is in the Methodist hospital in a very critical condtion.

Mrs. Landers' son, W S. Landers, of East Nineteenth and Walnut streets, was driving the machine. Besides him in the car were his wife and his daughter Miss Mary Landers and Miss Fannie Hollenbeck All were hurt slightly.

VERDICT FOR TEDDY; ROOT ABOUT COS

After Reaching Unanimous Verdict, Twelfth Man at First Call Declares He Favors Plaintiff.

COSTS MAY BE DIVIDED

One Juror Holds Out for Division of Expense of Trial and Court Sends Them Back

Syracuse, N Y May 21-After reporting an illegible sealed verdict in favor of Theodore Roosevelt in trying William Barnes suit for failed today after hours of additional deliberation to arrive at a verdict

Syracuse N Y May 21 In the Barnes-Roosevelt libel suit which in shortly before 1 o'clock this afternoon the foreman announced that they had agreed upon a verdict for the defendant When the jury was called into the court room the clerk of the court asked them if they had reached a verdict and if so in favor of which of the litigants. The foreman replied that they had reached a verdict in favor of the defendant but that the 12th. man Burns, a Syracuse lawyer, had left the room, returned to his seat and said I am with the plaintiff."

Justice Andrews then discharged the jury formed before the verdict was announced and entered room that a verdict had been reached. The spectators were warned that any demonstration would be met with severe punishment Later the jury was brought in and the foreman announcement

Resume Deliberations.

After Burns had dissented, Justice Andrews sent the jury back to its room. Justice Andrews was informed by the foreman that the jury stood unanimously in favor of a verdict for the defendant in case the costs were split between the plaintiff and defendant The jury debated upon the question of costs when it returned to the court room and said

The jury was ... question of costs ... was apparent that ... that some of the jurors were in favor of dividing the ... most, it was said ... less than $1 500 ... different The ... that the best ... the costs of the ... there was no way ... could be divided ... turned In the event ... Juror Burns refusing to agree with his 11 companions ... split.

Shortly after 12 ... was taken until 2 ... with the jury still ... in its room A verdict ... cannot be returned before the ... of court this afternoon

T. R Moved Split Costs.

Colonel Roosevelt declined to comment upon the action of the jury, but expression on his face however, indicated he was as pleased as he could be. His counsel said he was willing to divide the costs if there was any way in which it could be done. They made it plain to the press that the defendant that a verdict in favor of anything desired regardless of any costs.

Mr. Barnes was not present when the jury returned to Albany last night.

After having considered the case for more than seven hours the jury was taken to a dormitory in the building attached to the Onondaga county court house late last night Soon after breakfasting this morning the jurymen, escorted by deputy sheriffs went to the Onondaga hotel for breakfast Counsel for both sides and lawyers connected with the case thought that the jury would be discharged some time during the day unless a verdict was reached

Jury Locked Up.

When the jury returned to the court house after having breakfast, they were immediately taken to the jury room and locked up A half dozen deputy sheriffs sat on guard outside the door.

Before entering the court room the jury sent a note to Justice Andrews asking for a conference with him. Justice Andrews informed the 12 men that they could ask any question they desired in open court The jurors talked among themselves for a min ... or so and announced that they desired to return to their room for further deliberation.

In his charge to the jury Judge Andrews said

"As for the article complained of, I have held it is libelous per se as regards It charges a corrupt political alliance between Mr Barnes and Mr Murphy in regard to the government of the state Secondly it charges Mr Barnes has worked through a corrupt alliance between crooked politics and crooked politics Nothing in the article is libelous

"The only question you have to consider is 'Are the charges true?'

FLOOD OF VOLCANIC MUD SWEEPS VAL

Lava From Mount Lassen Carries Away Houses—People Flee for Lives.

Redding, Cal., May 21 - A flood of mud from the crater of Lassen Peak is reported today to have swept over Hat Creek valley, in eastern Shasta county, taking houses with it, killing cattle and driving people from their homes in the hills. The mud has been reported in many places to have reached a depth of four to six feet.

The mud, which has been reported as turning to a lava-like consistency in some places as it cooled, reached for 15 miles above Cassel, 15 miles north of Hat Creek.

Several bridges are reported to have been carried away, roads made impassable and many homes destroyed. Farm houses are reported to have been destroyed

Fred Seaborn, government forest ranger at Hat Creek, mounted his horse and rode at midnight through the valley, warning the farmers of the coming danger and urging them to spread the alarm to all persons within miles of the flood. To Seaborn many people have given credit for saving their lives by his night ride.

SWISS ARMY BACKS DEMAND ON BERLIN

Berne Government Will Make Representations to Germany on Sinking of Lusitania, Which Will Be Supported by an Army of 500,000—Think Wilson Note Too Weak.

Berne, Switzerland (via Paris), May 22 The Swiss federal authorities have decided to make suitable representations to Germany on the sinking May 7 of the Cunard line steamer Lusitania by a German submarine as a result of which [illegible] Swiss citizens lost their lives

The government [illegible] of knowledge of the German reply to the Washington note on this subject [illegible] to be able to choose a wise course of procedure

The Swiss think [illegible] Wilson's note but most newspapers say it appears to be hardly strong enough

The argument is being made here by Swiss observers that the Swiss representations will have great weight, because behind them there will be the Swiss army 500,000 strong

[illegible] made public shortly after the sinking of the Lusitania showed that [illegible] Swiss citizen was among those who lost their lives The [illegible] cities on board the Lusitania shows that in the second cabin there were 129 persons whose nationality was not known It is also possible that there were Swiss citizens among the crew of the liner

BALFOUR MAY GET CHURCHILL'S JOB

Kitchener Subjected to Severe "Panning" by London Press —Say He Ordered Old Style Shells.

London, May [illegible] Nothing further has developed concerning the ministerial crisis beyond the authoritative statement that the wish of former Premier Balfour is likely to prevail his acceptance of the post of first lord of the admiralty though this would appear to be [illegible] as to whether both parties desire that he take the [illegible]

The Times says Mr Balfour [illegible] doubtless will go to the admiralty if he is invited to do so and there is unanimous wish that he should

One of the most remarkable features of the ministerial crisis in Great Britain at the present moment is the sudden outbreak more or less [illegible] of newspaper attacks upon Field Marshal Earl Kitchener the British secretary of war who at the outbreak of the [illegible] was the [illegible]

The Daily Mail [illegible] under the [illegible] has been most violent [illegible] attacks The Daily Mail says

Philadelphia May 21 The appearance of two great rings around the sun, strongly pronounced and somewhat resembling rainbows about 11 o'clock yesterday startled and interested hundreds of thousands of persons in this [illegible] city

The rings are known as solar halos and are due to condensation in the atmosphere in consequent upon the low temperatures which produced water drops or ice crystals The refraction and infraction of the sun's rays through these brought about the occurrence, which is exceedingly rare in this latitude

MILITARISTS CAPTURE PACIFIST CONFERENCE

Lake Mohonk Peace Meeting All But Turned Into Council for National Defense—They'd Avoid War, But Favor Adequate Preparation.

Mohonk Lake N Y May 2 The delegates appointed to attend the Lake Mohonk conference on international arbitration by chambers of commerce and similar business organizations in most of the large cities aligned themselves today with the advocates of greater military preparation for national defense These delegates included manufacturers merchants and officers of the country's principal commercial organizations Their part in the activities of the conference has been increased by speakers among them Gen Leonard Wood, who declared that the most prolific cause of war was the interests of trade

The report of the business men's committee read by Chairman L M Cuthbert, of Denver, declared that disputes between nations 'ought to be justly settled through the proceedings of international tribunals instead of war"

Nevertheless, the committee asserted their belief "that it is the part of wisdom at present for the United States to be fully prepared to defend itself from possible injustice and aggression," and advocated "the strengthening of our military and naval forces so as to effectively protect our coast"

The report recommended the formation of a code of international law, the establishment of a permanent international court of justice and of an international police force to enforce the decrees of the court In conclusion, the delegates bespoke for President Wilson in his "delicate and trying position," the cordial and hearty sympathy and assistance of all citizens, regardless of section or party

Edward A Filene of Boston national councillor of the chamber of commerce of the United States urged that the United States should be willing to make sacrifices to prove its right to a place in the councils which eventually will settle the war

Mr Filene, who spent four months in the war zone said there was a growing sentiment in favor of a world court, discussed at the recent congress in Cleveland He was doubtful, however, whether the United States would wish to be involved in an alliance which would depend upon military force to carry out the decrees of such a court. In place of force he advocated a policy of non intercourse with recalcitrant nations

William A Weir, justice of the supreme court of the Province of Quebec, praised the "calm wisdom" of the United States government in its diplomatic relations with the European belligerents and Simeon E. Baldwin, former governor of Connecticut spoke on "Avoiding Occasions for War"

The conference will close tonight with the adoption of a platform.

Rear Admiral C M Chester, retired, of Brooklyn pleaded for greater military preparation He said

"I can assure you that you must be prepared for the inevitable that is certain some time to come. One of the greatest dangers to this country is women's propaganda against militarism. Don't try to bring your boys up to dread the inevitable. Don't bring them up to be mollcoddles Only the great Prince of Peace himself will ever bring about cessation of war

Five old battleships of small fighting value, three light scout cruisers, about 50 efficient torpedo boat destroyers.

For joint service with both army and navy—Fourteen squadrons of seven aeroplanes each, and 10 dirigibles.

BATTLE RAGES NEAR NECK OF GALLIPOLI

Allies, Supported by Fleet, Are Cutting Off Retreat of Turks on Peninsula.

London, May 22 Cabling from Athens the correspondent of the Reuter Telegram company says fierce fighting is in progress near the neck of the Gallipoli peninsula The big guns of the British battleship Queen Elizabeth are being fired from the Gulf of Saros, thus assisting in the allies' attack The Turks are being supported by the guns of the Sultan Selim (formerly the German cruiser Goeben) which are being fired from the Sea of Marmora Turkish troops from Aivala in Asia Minor, are said to have been transferred to the Dardanelles The fall of Kelid Bahr and the imminence of the fall of Nagara, near the narrows, has been confirmed

Newspapers of Athens, the correspondent declares, say the British authorities have increased to $10,000 the reward offered by them for information leading to the destruction of the German submarine, the presence of which has been reported in the Mediterranean

AMERICANS TO MAN ENGLISH HOSPITAL

University Medical Schools to Send 32 Surgeons and 75 Nurses to Europe.

New York May 21 —Great Britain's newest and largest field hospital is to be manned by American surgeons according to medical authorities here The medical schools of Harvard Columbia and Johns Hopkins universities, it was said last night will supply 32 surgeons and physicians and will also collect a party of 75 American nurses to serve in hospitals The detachment will sail about the middle of June.

The surgeons and nurses, it is announced are to be sent at the request of the British authorities, to whom the idea of equipping the hospital with American surgeons was suggested by Sir William Osler, formerly of Johns Hopkins hospital

PLAN RETALIATION FOR SHIPMENT OF MUNITIONS

Berlin (via London) May 21. — A meeting of protest against American shipments of war materials was held last night by the Deutscher Wehrverein A resolution was adopted calling for the discontinuance of export from Germany of goods particularly needed in America such as dyestuffs and the limitation of imports from America as far as possible until the trade which is declared objectionable is stopped.

THORNE TO DISCUSS RAILWAY ACCOUNTING

Washington, May 21.—Railway Commissioner Clifford Thorne arrived here today and took part in the hearing before the Interstate Commerce commission on separation of operating expenses of railroads. The commission has suggested to the roads that separate accounts of freight and passenger returns be kept. A number of state railway officials are here in connection with the proposed working out of a plan for separation.

GUTHRIE SEES WILSON.

Washington, May 21.—Ambassador Guthrie, home on leave from Tokio, will see President Wilson tonight for the first time since he returned. Although the ambassador was on his way to the United States during the crisis in the Japanese-Chinese negotiations, the president expects to get much first hand information.

MAY OPERATE FERRY.

Washington, D. C., May 21.—Continued joint interest by the Pennsylvania and Canadian Pacific railroads in an operation of the Pennsylvania-Ontario Transportation company, which runs a car ferry from Ashtabula, Ohio, to Fort Buxwell, Can., was authorized today by the Interstate Commerce commission in contravention of the Panama canal act.

YALE MEN MEET.

Kansas City, Mo., May 21.—Former President William H Taft and 300 other visiting Yale alumni are here today to attend the two-day convention of the Associated Western Yale clubs.

ITALIAN ARMY IS MARVELOUSLY FIT

New Artillery, Air Craft and Other Equipment Better in Some Respects Even Than Germany's.

Paris, May 22 - If Italy decides to enter the war, she will do so as the most completely equipped and prepared, and in proportion to her size, the most powerfully armed nation in the world

Not even Germany prepared more conscientiously than Italy has been preparing in the last six months, and Italy has, furthermore, the advantage of all the experience gained at bitter cost by the other nations at war, before she herself fired a shot.

Although the fact is known to very few outside the Italian general staff, Italy's entrance into the war before March 1 would have meant almost certain defeat.

Three reasons existed for this state, which now exist no longer The first and most important of these was artillery The outbreak of the war found the Italian army just commenced on the imense task of replacing a comparatively old and out-of-date artillery equipment with modern guns To the great English firm of Vickers Sons & Maxim was intrusted the contract for supplying Italy with the most up-to-date field artillery

Not to Be Used Against Allies.

Needless to say, this was not done without abundant assurance that none of these guns would ever be used against the allies On February 17 the English firm completed the last of an order of 75-millimeter field guns of the famous Creusot pattern, sufficient to place the Italian army at the head of the world in arms. And with the new field pieces went heavy artillery, up to and including 12-inch howitzers, so that gun for gun Austria is now more than matched

The two other serious deficiences of the Italian army were ammunition and horses Both these conditions were reflected in the immense importation into Italy during the early months of the war, chiefly from the United States. The purchases of horses particularly were carefully concealed

For many weeks Italy has been mobilized to "within an inch of her life," as one American visitor has put it, meaning by this that the industrial life of the nation has been gravely weakened by the withdrawal of reservists from their ordinary employment. But on the other side her military strength has been steadily gaining. From the outset of the war she has had attaches in the field with every army and every item gained from the French, British, German, Russian or Austrian experience has been added speedily to the knowledge of the general staff.

Perfected by War Experience.

On another side Italy has profited tremendously from her study of the war experience—in her plans of mobilization. Before the war there was only one power—Germany—which had so comprehensive a railway plan that the moment mobilization began a complete military time table was substituted for the civil time table. Now Italy has worked out such a system for herself.

More than this, according to one well informed military man who recently returned from Rome, Italy has profited by the lessons of the German system of strategic railways to construct a series of lines along her northern frontier which can serve but one purpose—the movement of troops.

In still another department—her intelligence system—Italy has taken a lot from Germany's book, and in the opinion of many, has gone her preceptor one better. The organizers of the Italian secret service have one immense advantage over the Germans in that the territory most immediately concerned, in the Trentino and around Trieste, is largely populated by Italians, while German spies had to work in northern France and Belgium among a foreign population.

SEVERE PERSECUTIONS CONTINUE IN PORTUGAL

Lisbon, (via Paris), May 21.—In consequence of reports of the violence of political persecutions in different parts of the country, the minister of the interior has ordered all civil governors by telegraph to institute energetic measures to stamp out such persecutions. The cabinet also has decided to send representatives into the provinces to pacify the country and prevent factional feeling.

Two British warships arrived yesterday at the mouth of the Tagus river.

Final Step to Plunge Nation Into War Not Yet Taken, But Decisive Action Is Now Near.

ALL EYES NOW ON ROME

Army of 350,000 Italians Now Gathered on the Frontier Awaiting Command to Open Strife.

BERLIN PRESS IS BITTER

Balkan States Forming "Gallipoli Armies," Indicating Intention to Join the Allies.

Italian Frontier, via Chiasso and Paris, May 21.—The Italian military authorities are guarding with strictest secrecy the movement of troops. It is known, nevertheless, that some 350,000 soldiers have been concentrated on the coast of Italy, across the Adriatic from Albania. These troops are at Brindisi, Bari and Foggia.

Paris, May 21.—The Temps publishes a dispatch from Rome to the effect that a flotilla of Austrian aeroplanes from Goritz, Austria, is patrolling the frontier above Isonzo. It is said two of the air scouts have flown over Italian territory.

Washington, May 21 -Count Bernstorff, the German ambassador here, was advised today by the German foreign office that Switzerland would take over German diplomatic interests in Italy in the event of a rupture.

Paris, May 21.—A dispatch to the Temps from Berne says the Swiss government today agreed to represent Italian interests in Germany in the event of war.

Paris, May 21.—The Havas agency publishes a dispatch from Rome which says:

The Messaggero declares that the council of ministers will meet after the session of the senate and that the ministers probably will draft a form of declaration of war against Austria-Hungary."

London, May 21.—In a dispatch from Rome the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company says:

"Premier Salandra this morning obtained the royal signature to a decree suspending the diplomatic immunity of the Austrian and German ambassadors to the vatican, who leave tomorrow."

London, May 21.—So far as dispatches reaching this country from Rome indicate, Italy has not as yet taken the final step to plunge her into war with Austria-Hungary. Yesterday the Italian parliament gave the government full powers to act. Since that time no news of any decisive developments has been received. It would appear that the censorship is tightening and it is a fact that dispatches from Rome are being delayed.

A German dispatch says Italy may send an ultimatum to Austria today and that a declaration of war will come before the end of the week.

London, May 21.—It is universally conceded in England that Italy, from today, enters into full partnership with the entente powers, and this means that the two Germanic nations assisted by the Turks, find themselves facing seven European powers, not counting Portugal with Japan in the background.

How long the Balkan states will refrain from joining in the fray is not exactly known, but it is held here that this period of time must of necessity be comparatively brief.

The demands for compensation, territorial and otherwise, of Rumania, Budgaria and Greece are in process of arrangement, according to persons in London who are well informed Just at present the excessive claims first put forward by these states are being cut down.

Already reports are coming from Greece of more cordial relations between the court and former Premier Venizelos, which can only point in one direction. "Gallipoli armies" already are in process of formation in some of the Balkan states and the title sufficiently indicates the proposed scene of their activities.

Nothing yet has leaked out as to when the first Italian blow will be struck. Judging from previous experience, when the occasions for censorship were far less momentous, Italy probably will now put into effect a system of supervision over information that will stand as a striking object lesson in many ways to the comparative amateurs in this field, Great Britain and France.

Elbert Bede Says:

Quite often a widow's weeds bear seeds.

Some folks call it hard luck when they get what they have coming.

When a man says he is self made he probably considers himself and wife as one

The man with plenty of watered stock can hardly be blamed for feeling in the swim.

As long as a man tells a woman how pretty she is he is making a beautiful hit with her.

Laws of fashion are the only ones with a penalty attached that are pretty generally observed.

After a man makes one break about wanting a girl to marry him he seldom gets a chance to make another

There may be one advantage in not knowing much You may know so little that you don't even know it.

When you feed a man s vanity he doesn't ask questions about how it is cooked or find fault with the way it is served.

If your pocketbook is in a healthy condition you can find some doctor who is ready to find something about your anatomy that isn't.

We'll wager a reasonable sum that you have been given the devil a number of times and yet you can't tell from your own memory what he looks like.

The man who courts a girl who has a small brother has no one but himself to blame if he marries without knowing all of his sweetheart's faults and follies.

You never heard a person say, "If I do say it myself," without following it up by saying something nice about himself that no one else would have thought of in a thousand years

When a bridegroom turns to whisper to his wife's ear that she's all his now, she is just as likely as not looking up at him in a way that seems to say "You will have to dance to my music now, old man"

An Oreban judge has decided that Oregon brides need not adopt their husband's names unless they wish to Now, if the same judge will decide that the old man doesn's have to give up his salary unless he wishes to both sides will be happy.

AND ALONG CAME RUTH

"What's the matter Aunt? you look so worn out," said Ruth as she breezed herself through the screen door of the breakfast room.

"I'm simply tired out because I didn't sleep well last night," replied her aunt.

"You must have overworked yourself cleaning house," Ruth, suggested "sleeplessness is a form of nervousness. But it is so easy to prevent it. I used to suffer the same way, but I've overome it entirely. If you will go out into the yard and walk for ten minutes, or take ten minutes exerisce with light dumb bells just before retiring, and then eat a lettuce sandwich, a half-dozen crackers or even an apple, you will go to sleep at once. Then besides you should try to get to bed at the same hour every night for several nights In this way you will cultivate the habit of going to sleep at once. Just try these rules, they're simple.

And away went Ruth.

JUNE

June this year comes in on the first and ends on the thirtieth. It will have ten and twenty days with a night tacked onto each one of them. June days, too, have a habit of absorbing most of the allotted twenty-four hours, and the habit is not at all approved by those who retire and arise by the sun. Though sowing time for many, it is Cupid's harvest time, and wedding bells resound with joy in every clime. A bunch of flimsey, fluffy lace "he" takes to be his bride, to shelter and provide for her, no matter what betide. But presently, we should surmise, by Fashion's onward trend, it will be "she" who promises to keep him to the end. On June 15th Jupitor, who has long been working mornings, will give up that position and take a job as evening star. His place in the wee sma' hours will be vacant for about a week when Saturn will go on duty. Summer is almanacally said to begin on June 22nd, but most of us will be willing to believe that it has been hanging around uncomfortably close long before that time. And then comes the dreamy maids, creamy and screamy maids, filling and thrilling our souls with delight, and though with discretion, a slight premonition says money is saved if we stay in o' nights. Summer time's money time—picnics and parties both call us and ball us until we attend, and once we are stated quite soon we are parted with all winter's savings, yes, every stipend.

An Unusual Operation

Oliver Fosen made a trip to Rochester, Minn., last week to learn what the Mayo Brothers could do towards replacing the portion of the bone removed from his lower right jaw. While the flesh was nicely filled in, yet nature cannot build the bone, and the noted surgeons at Rochester informs Mr. Fosen that they can remove a portion of a rib and fit the bone in his jaw, where in due time it will heal and perform to some extent the work of a jaw bone The operation is not a dangerous one yet it is a very rare operation.—Kanawha Record.

OF DES MOINES.
THE EYE AND EAR DOCTOR WHO CURES
Before 12:00 O'clock Forenoon
Thursday, June 3rd
AT HOTEL IN GARNER

Mr. Bert Steiner the well known nd popular druggist, cured of serious tic Nerve disease by Dr. Weber.

Des Moines, Iowa, April, 1st. 1903

I hereby wish to publicly express my appreciation and sincere thanks to Dr. Weber for his marvelous cure of my eyes. My eyes began to trouble me about six months ago. I did not pay ny attention to them at first not thinkanything serious was the matter. My sight gradually became more dim every day, and almost before I realized it everything appeared blurred, and then I knew blindness was coming upon me. I could not recognize people except by their walk and voice. I could not see ordinary print at all, and could no louger attend to business as a pharmacist.

Somethingg must be done. I was personally acquainted with Dr. Weber and had known of his reputation and skill for years. He made a thorough examination of the inside of my eye and found I had the much dreaded optic nerve disease. Under ordinary methods of treatment this disease is considered incurable, but I started treatment by Dr. Weber's new method and my eyesight gradually returned so that in a few months time I was again enabled to resume my duty as a pharmacist, and I am thankful to say that Dr. Weber restored my sight and am also perfectly well. I can recommend Dr. Weber to all having eye trouble.

Very truly yours,
BERT STEINER.

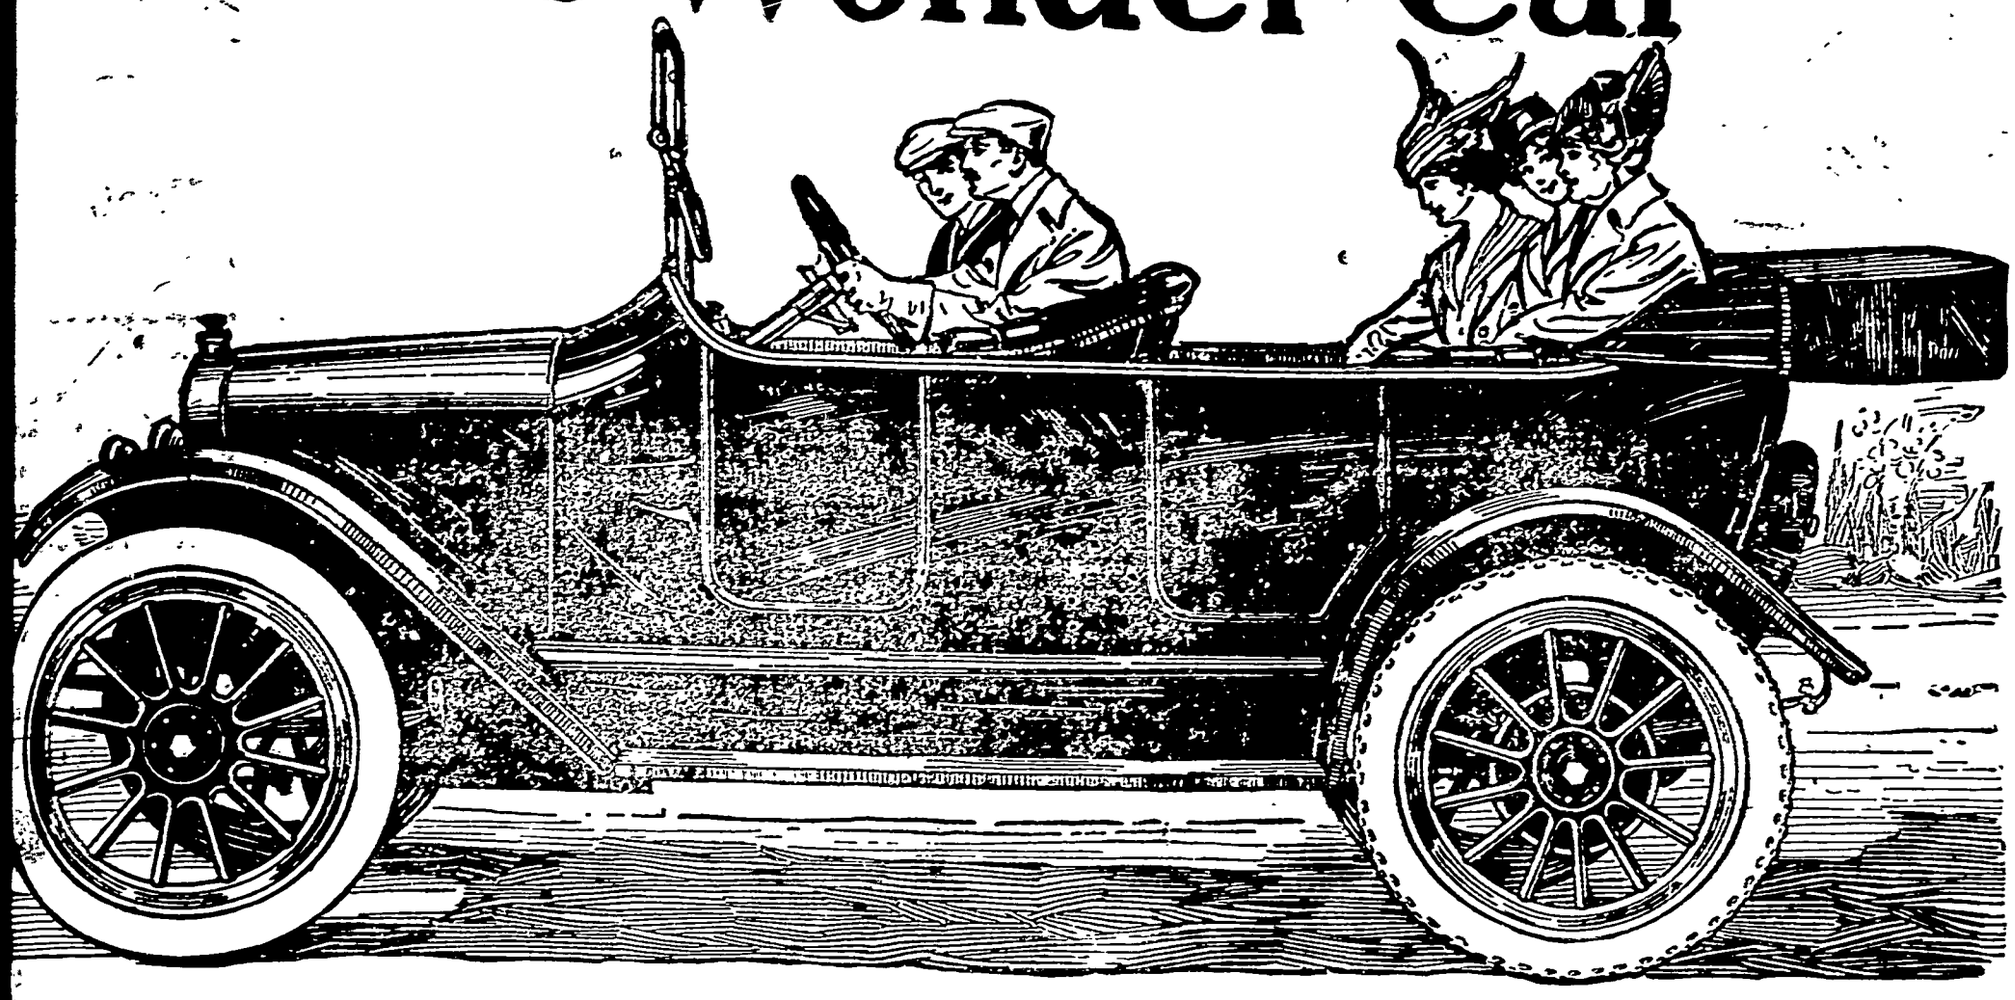
"The Wonder Car"



You will have only yourself to blame if you are "talked into" buying an "unsuitable" or a "theoretical" Car.

The two commonest mistakes made in buying an automobile are—First, Buying a car not suited to your needs.—Second, Buying a car that has not passed the theory stage.

The first mistake—buying an "unsuitable" car—is perhaps made even more often than the second. But for your own sake study your needs sensibly, just as you study your household needs, and buy a car you can afford to enjoy—a car you will have pride in, and yet one that will not be a "ghost of reproach" to your good sense.

The second mistake—buying a "theoretical" car—is perhaps the sadder mistake of the two—because when you have made this mistake, you have on your hands some engineer's or designer's untried theory, instead of a tried, known, successful car. And you have paid a price that, put in the right car, would never have been a reproach—but would have bought an automobile of real pride and joy.

It is because we see these two mistakes being constantly made—because we see sensible people being constantly talked into these "automobile fiascos" that we boast so much about the record of the car we sell—The Maxwell.

38,000 happy satisfied Maxwell owners are driving 38,000 handsome streamline Maxwell Cars to-day—at an up-keep cost that any man of any standing can afford, and at an original cost that is simply a practical investment.

200 Maxwell Cars Every Day

Twelve hundred a week, five thousand a month. That is the actual output of "The Wonder Car" right now and constantly increasing.

Not here promises that cannot be kept, but actual deliveries to Maxwell Dealers.

Stop! Think a moment. There must be something back of a production so great. There must be the hearty approval and confidence of the public in the car they buy and the car must merit it all.

26 Maxwell cars every hour of the business day. Yes, that is just what the public are buying, and when you order a Maxwell, you get one the day you want it.

Back of each Maxwell stands one of the greatest and most efficient organizations in the industry, and one strong enough financially to insure you against the purchase of an "orphan car" and to give you actual deliveries of a wonderful car on the day you want it.

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. More than 2,000 Maxwell dealers in every part of this country—are always ready to give expert advice, to make adjustments, and to supply new parts at reasonable prices. This splendid Maxwell dealer service organization is perfected and completed by the chain of Maxwell owned and Maxwell operated Service Branches. Sixteen great Maxwell Service Stations are so located throughout the country that a Maxwell dealer can supply any part for an owner within a few hours if not in his stock. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Order a Maxwell from us now, and when you want it delivered, we will give you your car—not an excuse on delivery day

American Efficiency

From the New Orleans Times-Picayune

A leading English newspaper, the Manchester Guardian devotes a column of editorial space to praise of American efficiency as demonstrated in the relief of Belgium. That relief work which the Guardian describes as "among the entirely good and noble things which this war has brought about" is destined, it thinks, to provide "one of the most inspiring pages of American history." Swiftly reviewing the terrible straits to which the Belgian people were reduced in September last, the Guardian declares that Belgium's need was desperate, immediate, and apparently impossible to meet. America worked a miracle by creating in a week or two, from nothing, one of the biggest and most amazingly efficient business organizations the world has ever seen, and applying it to charity. * * * The slower moving people will not in future forget that the spirit they call American saved Belgium from starvation, that America made good where an ounce less of well directed hustle might have cost a thousand lives.

The tribute is, we think, deserved. The American relief work in Belgium has been, by the testimony of practically all eye witnesses, regardless of their nationality, "amazingly efficient." This is not by any means the first demonstration of amazing efficiency by Americans. They have a way of meeting emergencies that usually is the admiration of foreign observers. Why is it, then, that the "slower moving peoples," as the Manchester Guardian describes them, "put it over" the Americans in so many fields where comparisons are possible and inevitable? For example, patriotic Americans frankly confess the superiority of municipal government in some of the European countries. Both German and British thoroughness in trade and industry are mentioned frequently to our own disadvantage. In foreign trade fields our European competitors have surpassed us, and nearly all comparisons of trade getting methods in those fields are at our expense.

With his ability, resourcefulness, initiative and energy the American combines, it is evident, sundry defects which cost him dearly at home, and through which his European rivals profit in competitive fields. For the good nature or indifference which permits inefficient and wasteful government he pays millions annually. His mistakes in foreign trade getting, which he is slow to correct, though they have been repeatedly pointed out, cost him other millions in loss of obtainable business. Yet in great emergencies he avoids his defects with his cost, and displays an efficiency that amazes the "slower moving peoples." By the exercise of the same "well directed hustle" and resourcefulness and skill that worked what the Manchester Guardian calls a miracle in Belgium, Americans may seize the fullest possible advantage from the trade getting opportunity now offering. Why not classify that opportunity as a great emergency and meet it with an "amazing efficiency" that may be hardened, with practice, into habit?

THE SOLDIER I KNEW BEST

Dod Gaston, in the Topeka Capital.

Coming across Statehouse square yesterday afternoon I met a bunch of bent and shambling old men. Their heads were white with the frost of years and there wasn't a straight back nor an erect pair of shoulders in the lot. They were ordinary looking old codgers, gnarled by toil and hardships and garbed in the Sunday regalia of the rural community. I noted in passing that the lapel of each man's coat bore a little bronze button. I knew the button was there before my eyes sought it. I can tell an old soldier as far as I can see him. There is about every soldier some salient thing—some subtle individual characteristic which distinguishes him from other elderly men and which defies the art of visualization. I knew none of the old men in the party of four or five. They passed without heeding me. But as I came abreast of them I involuntarily stood at attention and saluted the bronze button and the men who wore it. I am not much given to sentimental display. The well-spring of my enthusiasm never gushes. But the little bronze button and the men entitled to wear it are a part of the memory of my life. And having paid this passing tribute to them, I am minded to make brief reference to the simple annals of the soldier I knew best.

The soldier I knew best enlisted when he was 19. His discharge papers lie before me as I write. They show that he was mustered into the service at Springfield, Ill., in August, 1861, and that he finally was mustered out at Brownsville, Tex., in March, 1865. Between the two dates there were something more than four years and eight months of continuous march and bivouac, broken only by a furlough of two weeks in the winter of 1863. For four years, eight months and some odd days he was intermittently a unit in the broad mark at which opposing armies shot. In the intervals between the strenuous periods of a soldier's business he fought fever, thirst, hunger and the elements, protected from their onslaughts only by a "dog" tent, or the canopy of the skies above him. He enlisted from a farm and went into the army a strong, rugged, hearty youth. He came out a broken reed. I have often heard him say he never knew a sick day before he went into the army, nor a well one after he came out of it. For 15 years before he died he was unable to turn his hand to even the lighter occupations of life.

I celebrate no hero here. The soldier I knew best was a plain man, and, as the world measures achievement, an unsuccessful one. He went into the army as a private and came out a corporal. The civil war doubtless could have been fought and won without him. He had not even the distinction common among old soldiers of having personally repulsed Pickett's charge. He wasn't at Gettysburg at all. I never heard him boast of any particular achievement although, until the day of his death, the civil war was his favorite topic of conversation. It was not that he wished to speak of his valor or recount the stories of the hardships he endured, but that the war to him was the one epochal incident of a plain and humdrum life. The list of battle in which the soldier I knew best was engaged was neither so long nor so inspiring as that which stands opposite the name of many another. He was at Donelson and Henry and at Vicksburg with Old Grant. He was in the two days' slaughter at Shiloh and helped take Spanish Fort. And he was also a unit in the operations around Chattanooga. The fight of which he talked most and best, and to me the most thrilling of his army career was the one at Hatchie River. You will find little reference to the battle of Hatchie River in war history. It was one of the minor engagements. But it always seemed to me the soldier I knew best was more closely identified with it than with any other engagement in which he fought. I never grew tired of hearing him tell how his depleted regiment double-quicked a distance of four miles before striking the enemy and then lost 240 men, killed and wounded, in 30 minutes.

Once in the month of August the regiment to which the soldier I knew best belonged marched two days without water. The Mississippi wells had all gone dry and the water courses were dried up. Along in the forenoon of the third day when the tongues of the men had begun to swell and protrude from their mouths the command was halted for a brief rest. Presently an officer rode up and said: "Boys, there's plenty of water in the creek 200 yards down the road." The command which had stacked arms, stampeded at the word and the soldier I knew said many of them jumped into the water when they reached it.

The soldier I knew best was shipwrecked in the Gulf of Mexico when his command was shifted from New Orleans to Brownsville. Everything except the soldiers and the crew—the mounts of the officers, their baggage and other impedimenta—was thrown overboard in an effort to save the ship. That is to say, all of the horses save one was thrown overboard. The captain of A company rode a pony of which he was particularly fond. The captain's name was Rhodes—Hinman Rhodes. When they sought to throw his pony overboard he threw his arm around its neck and said if it had to go he'd go with it. And so they let the pony stay. The storm occurred at night. Late the next afternoon the soldiers who were on deck sighted one of the horses that had been thrown overboard. It was still alive and still fighting its hopeless battle for life. It was from such incidents that the memories of the soldier I knew best were woven. He knew a thousand such and I heard them all many times.

The government was generous to the soldier I knew best. Years after he had been practically incapacitated for the work of caring for his family he applied for a pension. After the application had for a year or more pursued the usual tortuous course through the pension department, the claim was allowed, and for the balance of his life the "government" paid him the handsome honorarium of $12 a month. Two months after his death his family received notice that his application for an increase in pension had been allowed and that he would thereafter receive an honorarium of $14 a month. In those days it was very difficult for a soldier who merely had been hit on the knuckle of the right hand by a spent "minie" ball at the battle of Hatchie river to prove that he was entitled to a pension by reason of disability contracted in the service.

One year I spent my two weeks off differently. It was in October that I went south to follow for a few days the long since effaced footsteps of the soldier I knew best. With the passing of time I had lost interest in the epoch which lay between the years of '61 and '65, and callous to those who had written its history in their own blood. And so, I followed the trail of the soldier I knew best from the cotton-grown field of Shiloh to the monumental heights of Missionary Ridge, the tablet flecked ground of Chattanooga and the inspiring heights of Lookout mountain. I saw the fields where many thousands of men, some in blue and some in gray, had lain down their lives together. I marked the interminable rows of marble slabs which a grateful government had erected in their memory. And when I came back the simple annals of the soldier I knew best were glorified to me forever. I am not much given to sentimental display. The well spring of my enthusiasm never gushes. But the little bronze button and the men entitled to wear it are a part of the mummery of my life.—Dodd Gaston.

THE FULL CORN IN THE EAR

Anonymous.

Next to Easter is Memorial day as typifying a new resurrection of human liberty won in the tears and blood of a great self sacrifice.

Today the sun rose cloudless as the memories of the men we remember. It shone upon the continent He "had hid of old time in the west," populous and prosperous from its center to its sea rims, on multiplied cities and mighty stretches of farms blossoming in the spring with promise of mighty crops, on a nation absolute, united, magnificent, a real union of states and people. Passing on as the shadows fell upon Plymouth rock it beat in fervid noon on the beaches of Hawaii and touched the forest of the Philippines with the glory of sunrise. And in all its splendid course it shone on the flag; the flag which bloomed beneath it in every street and fluttered from every house its stripes and stars, the American flag which the men whose sacrifice we commemorate today by their right and by their power and in their patriotism maintained ascendant as the symbol of liberty and of equal opportunity.

They are old and gray and feeble, these old, old men who remain to wear on the blue of the immortal '60s the bronze button which distinguishes the remnant of that grand army of which the G. A. R. is but a memory. They have lived and they die. But this is no cause for grief, no reason for mourning. The generation of men rise and fall like the waves of the sea, they beat against the cliffs of endeavor, in successive tides and go back again to the sea which gave them, to gather new impulse and come again in their time. The tides swelled at the pass where the Spartans faced barbarism in strength of manhood and weakness of numbers, it was high tide at Runnymede and culminated at Gettysburg. It will rise again and again and each flood shall gather strength and height from those which have risen and ebbed. For so the greatness and the goodness of peoples and nations grow, like coral continents, on the bones of those who achieved yesterday and who died today.

God gives us more men like these to know and to remember, to lean upon in their youth, to cherish in their old age and emulate when eternity has claimed them. Grant unto this country more men like these and like those later heroes, men who put "women first" and the rights of man first and who are willing to die for an idea.

Low Mound In the Wilderness.

I know a grave on southern soil,
A lonely little mound,
Where three tall pines their sentry keep
And scare a sound

The silence breaks. Naught but the rush
Of storms, the caroling bird,
And soughing wind among the trees
Is ever heard.

No human hand has touched that "low
Green tent" for 30 years.
The falling rain and shimmering dew
The only tears

Have been that moistened it. But far
North, where the cold waves foam,
A mother mourns her drummer boy
Who ne'er came home.

But think not while a nation decks
The graves of hero dead
That where this brave boy sleeps no flower
Rests o'er his head,

For, blown by breath of God, kept by
His hand a poppy seed
Took root and grew 1,000 fold,
Its every need

By Him supplied. And when each year
Flowers deck the patriot's tomb
That low mound in the wilderness
Is all abloom.

And ever o'er the drummer boy
The tall pines sentry keep,
And ever blooms, a crimson pall
The "flower of sleep."

"One Day Not All de Days."

From the Christian Herald.

Africa is a remarkably beautiful country. Its coast lines are picturesque, graceful, fascinating, alluring. Its seaport towns and cities are usually clean, pretty and reasonably healthful. Equatorial Africa has, until the last two decades, been called the white man's graveyard, but clean living, quinine, mosquito netting, sobriety and sanitary improvements have made Africa a place where one can not only exist, but live in as much comfort, take it all in all during the year, as in the city of New York, and with some advantages in favor of Africa.

Life is simple, placid, calm, and not so complex. The work life is not strenuous. The people do not rush and drive as they do here at home. If you try to hurry a man who is working for you he will calmly tell you, "One day be not all de days, daddy!" And you stand rebuked, for you know he is telling you the truth.

A MIXED ASSEMBLAGE.

From "Hempfield," by David Grayson, in the American Magazine.

The fact is, whether we like it or not, we are all mixed up together in this world—poets and plumbers, critics and cooks—and the more clearly we recognize it, the firmer, truer, will be our grip upon the significance of human life. Why, many a time, when I've been sitting here reading in my study, living for the moment in the rarer atmosphere of the poets, the philosophers, the prophets, I have had to get up and go out and feed my pigs. I have always thought it, somehow, good for me.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Quarrel with the young for failure properly to observe Memorial day is quarrel with human nature. It is the way of the world to look forward, in age no less than in youth. For the young there is the promised harvest of the later years, for the old the hope of immortality.

Seeing the leaf turn sear and yellow and the snow carpet the earth, men on that account do not despair, as though winter marked the end of all. There is the faith that the birds will come back to delight the ear with song, that the colors of the rainbow will be found in the tulip and the deep red of the harvest moon in the rose; that the fields will yield again the staff of life and the waters fish for food.

It is this faith that gives sprightliness to the step and brightness to the eye. It is the mother's faith as she gives of her life to the suckling babe, it is the father's faith as he imports strength to the son sorry from sore travail. It is, in its last analysis, faith in God, and trust in His infinite wisdom.

Memorial day has its value in reminder. As the trail blazer marks the trees in the forest to guide his return steps, so this day is set aside to recall to the living the service of the dead. If a graveyard may be said to preach a sermon it is of counsel to the living to take account of precedent; nor slavish account, as though precedent could not err, but to give consideration to it in the measure of its bearing on the throbbing life and glean wisdom from its lessons. Soliloquizing upon the grave of a veteran soldier one's thoughts would take in a nation, founded to secure justice which should be one and indivisible of men enchained by slavery, of a war for their liberation of lives offered in defense of country and that it might survive, of wives widowed and children orphaned and a soil drenched with blood.

North, East, South and West.

By Charles Dana Gibson.

I

The north and the east, the south and the west,
Each year in us reunite,
As to welcoming shout our march flings out
With a step that is free and light;
And the griefs we feel we choose to conceal
With a step that is free and light.

II.

We've been marching for years on this day in the spring,
Three of us Blue, and one Gray,
Then our youths return and our woes we spurn,
As we strut on Memorial day,
And gaily we frisk and our swagger is brisk,
As we strut on Memorial day.

III.

For the quick-step we call as we shoulder arms—
No dreary death march shall they play
Though you say we're old and our days are told,
We're fresh as the four winds today,
Though our heads grow white in the fading light,
We're fresh as the four winds today.

IV

The north and the east, the south and the west
No longer ripped wide in dispute,
Can honor us best when they lay us to rest
By returning our 'smiling salute"
So the sons of the brave may bestow what we crave
By returning our 'smiling salute."

V

We smile at your sympathy, pity and care,
We scoff at your proffers of aid.
We're free and we're strong with our stride's quick and long,
We're showin' you how to parade.
We're old, are we? Gosh! To show that it's bosh,
We're showin' you how to parade.

VI

Who whispered that old age would break up our ranks,
That Time would cut some of us down?
Each Memorial day all the morbid ones say
That we're marching our last through the town
We'll brand it a lie when the tearful ones sigh
That we're marching our last through the town

VII.

Though our comrades brave whom we praise today
You laud with a wreath and tear,
It's to us they belong, and we know that they long
For our old time smiles and a cheer.
From some distant Gate we know they wait,
For our old time smiles and a cheer.

Peace.

Peace flows into me
As the tide to the pool by the shore,
It is mine forevermore,
It ebbs not back like the sea.

I am the pool of blue
That worships the vivid sky
My hopes were heaven-high,
They are fulfilled in you.

I am the pool of gold
When sunset burns and dies,
You are my deepening skies,
Give me your stars to hold.

Are Colleges Good?

From the Pueblo Chieftain

In the May Woman's Home Companion Anne Bryan McCall, writing a "Tower Room Talk" on "The Independent Woman," comments as follows on women's colleges.

"It is the one objection that I see to college, that it does often shut off a girl's life from the interests and companionship of men's lives, and this at a time, too, when each most needs the inspiration of the other; and that sometimes a girl's college life seems to tend to foster a kind of covert antagonism to men, or, what is perhaps worse, a secret belief in the superiority of women.

"What are the mothers thinking of, I wonder, to allow their daughters to grow up without any of this fine friendship and companionship? And what are girls thinking of who limit their companionship with men, as many of them do, to light flirtations and banter, or to a kind of bridled antagonism, or who remain, shy, self-conscious, shut off from them altogether? Such girls are independent of men! Upon my word, yes—pitifully so, it seems to me!"

The Annual Crop of School Children.

From Collier's.

About now is a mighty good time to visit the school that you have not seen all winter. Roads are better, the children are getting the spring energy into their work and play, the year's instruction has had plenty of time to soak in, and the school year will end next month. For some years you've been paying taxes to be spent on educational work—get around there now and show that you are interested also in seeing what your children get out of these taxes. You would go fast if the schoolhouse was your factory or orchard or pasture, and yet children is the one really important crop that our country raises.

TERRITORIAL TROOPS BEST, FRENCH CLAIMS

London.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press). The more he has seen of the territorials, says Sir John French in his Neuve Chapelle dispatch, the more he has been impressed with their value. Sir John's words, "They acquitted themselves with the utmost credit," have taken all of the wind out of the campaign to fix conscription on Great Britain.

The British territorial system is practically the same as the national guard of the United States, without the political weaknesses of the American. So far as organization, service and equipment go, the systems of the two countries are identical. The men enlist for the same period and in peace times drill for about the same number of hours weekly and spend the same length of time in annual maneuvers. They wear almost the same uniform. But instead of suffering from state politics, as in America, the British service is directly under the war department, which appoints the colonel in command. The colonel, in turn, passes on the qualifications of the officers, who receive commissions from the war office. This method of officering the territorials is much more effective both as to discipline and efficiency than the American method of letting the men elect their own officers on the basis of personal popularity instead of professional fitness.

Territorials in time of peace enlist for home service only. But by the simple process of volunteering for foreign service they become volunteers without the elaborate process of transferring accounts from state to federal government as in vogue in the United States, which involved a vast amount of clerical work and red tape.

In the present war, over 80 per cent of the territorials are known to have volunteered, and of these the larger part are already serving in France or Egypt. They enlist under the general volunteer act for three years or the end of the war.

One advantage of the territorial army over the regulars lies in the various kinds of skilled men in the ranks, who with little training can turn their trades or professions to the use of war. The territorial supply of doctors has been a needed help.

When a foreign service battalion is sent away a home battalion takes its place. It is curious to know that the territorial force has proved more attractive to recruits than Kitchener's army.

WOMEN OF PARIS ARE DOING MOST OF WORK

Paris.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press). Thirty-two per cent of the work formerly done in Paris by men street sweepers, subway guards, elevator attendants, trolley car conductors and telegraph operators, is now done by women.

Every arrondissement or administrative district in Paris has a municipal employment agency, where employers who want help and persons who want work register. No other agencies are recognized by law. The employer must pay the nominal fees. Inquiries at various bureaus show that among laboring classes servants suffer most from the war. Most French families reduced the wages of their servants the first week of mobilization, and many were discharged. There are now long waiting list of servants, looking for any sort of employment. This category includes many governesses and private tutors, who, owing to the economy campaign in French families, find themselves out of work.

Two months ago, there were 20 per cent more dressmakers and tailors' assistants out of employment than at present, showing that with the coming of spring, fashions are again receiving some attention.

For certain branches of office employment, such as messengers, offices boys and porters, more applications are received from employers than can be filed. The scarcity has led to the increase in wages from 5 to 10 per cent, as youths are being continually summoned to join the colors with the new classes. On the other hand, highly trained employes, accountants, bookkeepers, stenographers, office managers and typists find difficulty in securing situations, as the majority of large offices have either adopted a policy of retrenchment, or are holding open the vacancies caused by the mobilization of former employes.

Hitherto it has been the custom for an applicant for a position to state the minimum salary required, also the kind of employment desired. At present, many say that they will perform any duty, even the most menial, and will rely on the bounty of their employer.

CHILDREN OF FRANCE LEARN HISTORY OF WAR

(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)

Paris—The history of the war is being taught to the children of France as it goes on. By order of the minister of public instruction the schools have observed a patriotic day. Every teacher talked about the war and brought out the patriotic character of the conflict from the French standpoint. There followed a Belgian day devoted to King Albert's heroic attitude, a Serbian day, and a day consecrated to the praise of the celebrated three-inch field gun.

Instead of distracting the minds of the children from school work, the war has been made to heighten its interest and the attendance has been normal throughout the winter. The greatest difficulty was the necessity of finding new quarters for the primary classes, most of the school houses having been utilized by the army barracks and hospitals, but this has been overcome.

The details of instruction in matters pertaining to the war are left to the discretion of the teachers. Some of them read and comment upon the official communiques. Others read the exploits of officers and men as disclosed by the citations in the orders of the day, and many letters sent from the front by soldiers of the vicinity are read. It is often the soldier in person who tells the little ones of his experiences, for many teachers, disabled for further service in the army, have returned to their school duties. Sometimes it is a soldier that has never been a pedagogue who relates his experiences.

A Brockton, Mass., lawyer recently bought a revolver for self protection, and after considerable thought decided that the best place to keep it was in the safe, so that if a burglar unexpectedly drops in all the lawyer will have to do is to walk to the safe, arrange the combination, open the door of the safe, hunt in his vest pocket for the key to the inner compartment, unlock the inner door, pull out the revolver, find some cartridges and then turn on the burglar.

"Mr. Carr is going," she said, singularly interested in what was going on out of door. He leaned forward to look and, accidentally their hands touched. They drew them apart as if each had come in contact with a burning coal. They laughed convulsively, in apology.

"He's a strange man," said Eric hastily, covering his confusion. Then his face clouded. "I say, your father looked at me in a mighty strange way out there. Just as if I had been doing something I shouldn't have done."

She hesitated uncertain whether to add to his distress of mind or to complete what she had set out to do in the beginning.

"Your aunt told him yesterday that she is afraid of you, Eric," she blurted out wrathfully. "She says you once tried to kill Chetwynd, and that sometimes she catches a—a murderous look in your eyes when she offers the slightest reproof or advice."

Eric laughed. He was able now to enjoy the situation. "They expect me to slaughter someone before I die," he chuckled.

"She was very serious about it," protested Joan, displeased by his levity. "She says that Mr. Presbrey works with you by the hour trying to... Please don't laugh," she cried, pouting. "I shan't tell you anything more."

"I can't help laughing," he said. "Don't begrudge me the chance to laugh at Mr. Presbrey. Why, Joan, he gets me off in a corner and prays over me as if I were the original sheep that was lost from the other 99 and 9. I'm half way to the bad place all the time, according to him, and he's in a continual scrap with the devil over my remains. But I have good news for you. Mr. Presbrey says I've got a splendid chance to get into heaven in spite of all that. All I have to do is to follow him. He'll get me in, slick as a whistle. He's going to get Mary in, too. He's got Uncle Horace and Aunt Rena waiting at the gate right now. All they have to do to get in is to die. Chetwynd, too."

"You shouldn't scoff," she cried, but smiled in spite of the reproof.

"Well, I'm glad that your father doesn't believe I'm as bad as they make me out," he said soberly. "He—he shook hands with me twice out there, and told me I'd find you here. That shows what he thinks of me."

Her face brightened, a glorious light suffused her eyes, her lips parted in a warm, glad smile.

"Oh, I am so glad, Eric! I—I was afraid he might be prejudiced against you. You know how much store he sets by Mr. Blagden. And he can be very hard when he wants to be. He—he has to be heartless sometimes, my father does."

Eric returned her smile with one equally enveloping. Suddenly the shackles of fear and self restraint fell away from him. His heart leaped up and in one swift rush overcame the timid brain that stood in its way. It swept all resistance aside and triumphed over reason. The look in her warm, sweet eyes did the work. With a half cry, he slipped from the seat and sprang to her side. Before either really knew what had happened his arms were around her and he had kissed her, eagerly, bravely, full upon the lips.

"Oh, Joan, Joan," he whispered. She did not move, but closed her eyes, and appeared to have stopped breathing. Then he felt a dreadful fear stealing over him. As the chill of shame and remorse began to creep over him the slender body quivered in his arms and her hand caught one of his as it was about to be withdrawn. She convulsively pressed it to her lips. Then her eyes opened and looked into his. Tears swam in them as he looked down dazed and unbelieving.

"Eric, Eric," she whispered, so softly, so timidly that he could hardly hear the word. "You dear, dear Eric."

He was dumb with joy. His lips moved, but the words remained smothered in his throat. She returned her head on his breast and began to cry softly. Physical expression of love was new and bewildering to them. They were amazed, frightened, abashed.

"Are—are we going to be sweethearts?" he asked out of the maze of strange sensations. He only knew or felt, that something vital was expected of him in this wonderful moment something decisive, and honorable and exacting. Her handclasp tightened with involuntary fervor. She hid her shamed face more completely in its resting place, and a delicious pink covered her cheek and the little ear that was left exposed. He repeated the question, almost breathless with the eagerness that filled his soul tingling from head to foot with the exquisite agony of joy that was growing so full and commanding that he could understand it even as he doubted his senses.

The faintest nod of the head answered him. He caught his breath striving to find an outlet for his feelings. The words came in a whisper.

"I—I've had dreams, but they were never like this. Oh, I've dreamed it 1,000 times. I never thought it could be real. Are you sure, Joan? It isn't because I'm so strong you—you can't get away, is it? You are not angry—"

"No, no! I—I'm not angry, Eric," she cried softly. "Oh, I'm so ashamed. You—you don't think I'm bold and—"

He kissed her again, triumphantly. The eternal man in him was solving the problem. Victory! Conquest! That is the man of it.

"I didn't believe it could ever happen," he cried, aglow with bliss. "I—I don't see how I ever got up the courage to do it. Why, until now I thought you liked me just on Mary's account. What funny things girls are. And you've been liking me — like this — all the time?"

"Not like this," she said wistfully, looking up for the first time and meeting his eyes. "I'd never thought of this."

"We'll be sweethearts forever—" he hesitated and then uttered the word for the first time, shyly, awkwardly—"darling."

"If you will always like me," she murmured.

"You won't let anybody come between us, will you?" he demanded. "You'll not let them change you with their stories about me?"

"As if they could!" she exclaimed. "Oh, Eric, you must not do that! Suppose that father came in, or one of the maids. Please, please!"

"I'm so happy I can't help—That reminds me, Joan." He took his arms from around her and stood erect, his face very serious.

"I've got to speak to your father," he announced, but with an utter absence of determination. "A gentleman never asks a girl to marry him until he's seen—"

She started up, all a-flutter. "I—I haven't said I'd marry you," she cried. "You haven't asked me. We're too young to talk about—"

"There you go!" he cried bitterly.

"You mustn't be foolish, Eric," she pleaded. "Don't tell father not just yet. He would laugh at us. And he might put a stop to everything, to our seeing each other and all that. Don't you see? There's plenty of time. It is all going to be so sweet and dear to love each other in secret—just between ourselves, with no one to say whether we may or may not. You, you might spoil everything by going to him. Goodness, I hope he didn't peep in here a minute ago!" She was in a great state of trepidation.

For that matter so was Eric. He glanced toward the door with considerable anxiety.

"Perhaps, perhaps it's best to do as you say," he admitted in some haste. "Not that I'm afraid, of course, but well, it might spoil everything right at the beginning. Your father just couldn't understand."

She clasped his arms in her eagerness. "It will be so lovely to have this beautiful secret all to ourselves," she cried in guarded tones.

"But we are engaged aren't we? Say we are, Joan," he pleaded.

"Yes, yes," she half whispered. "And you'll marry me some day? Swear it!"

"Oh, Eric, it seems so unusual."

"You will!"

"I suppose so."

He was not satisfied. Men never are. His brow clouded with the darkness of jealousy.

"And you won't have a thing to do—ever—with any other fellow." Promise, Joan."

"Of course I won't," she cried, and he was content.

"Aunt Rena's got her heart set on you for Chetwynd," he said suddenly, conscious of another agreeable triumph over his aunt.

"I hate him." After a moment she went on, her brow clouded with annoyance. "She says Chetwynd wants me to join their excursion down the St. Lawrence next week. She's giving it for him and there will be five or six of us."

"It's the first I've heard of it," he said stolidly.

She flushed painfully. "Mrs. Blagden didn't—that is, you and Mary were not mentioned."

"We wouldn't go, anyway," he cried hotly.

"It's too bad," she murmured plaintively. "The trip is a lovely one."

"Are you going?"

"Father says it would be nice if I—but I won't go, if you don't want me to."

He was fair and generous. "You must go, Joan. I won't mind. I'm—Hello! There's Judge Bright in the hall."

When Judge Bright entered the study a minute later the sound of his footsteps having warned them in good time he found Eric sitting on the edge of a table at some distance from Joan. If he observed the suppressed excitement in their manner he gave it no thought, while they, on the other hand, were miserably certain that their heart throbs betrayed them.

The justice's grave, dignified face wore an expression of profound thought which lightened materially as the girl called out to him to come over and sit in the window with her while Eric tried out the new camera on them.

"Snap us in this posture, Eric," he said genially, sitting down beside her and drawing the dark head to his shoulder.

Her eyes were sparkling. Eric nervously began fumbling with the camera. His fingers were all thumbs. She laughed and he made more of a mess than ever.

"The light's bad," he floundered helplessly. "Can't we go out in the yard?"

"I'm afraid I can't spare the time," announced the judge. His brow clouded. "And I shall have to ask you two to let me have the study to myself for awhile. I've an important matter to—er—to think over. I'd spoil the picture anyway." He arose, patting the restraining hand as he did so. "By the way, Eric, is Chetwynd at the bank today?"

"I think so, sir," replied the boy repressing a start.

"Joan, before you go out will you telephone and ask him if he would mind coming up this evening after dinner—if he isn't otherwise engaged?"

Her face fell. "I'd—I'd rather not telephone to Chetwynd, father."

Her father smiled. "Just tell him that I want to see him for a few minutes. Put it that way, my dear."

She went to the telephone in the hall, rebellious but relieved. The judge turned to Eric who stood hard by, undecided what to do next.

"I've known Adam Carr since he was a little boy, Eric. I saved him from drowning when we were lads together. You may be sure he would accept no thanks from me for what he did last week for Joan—and you. He is extremely fond of you, because you are good to his old father. And let me tell you something, my boy, he is a friend worth having."

"I am sure of it, sir."

"Chetwynd will be here at half-past seven, father," said Joan from the doorway a moment later.

CHAPTER IX

TRAGEDY

As Eric walked springily down Blagden avenue an hour later, his heart thumping with happiness, he came face to face with Mr. Presbrey. In a twinkling his spirits fell. The sight of the excellent gentleman brought him back to earth. He had been in heaven for two hours or more. Strange, that a minister of the gospel should snatch one out of heaven and restore him to the sinful earth so rudely, but that is precisely what happened. Seeing Mr. Presbrey just then was like taking a sudden, unexpected plunge into icy water. Beautiful, warm visits of delight faded away, and in their place stretched all the ugly, unkind scene he had managed to forget in his new environment. Once more came into active reality the bitter, depressing chill he had shaken off for the moment. Mr. Presbrey's friendly, spiritual smile at once suggested 100 bitter wrongs and heartaches, disillusioning realities, cruel charges and spiteful innuendoes. It revived all the mental anguish of the past fortnight, to say nothing of the indignities that had been spread out over the whole of his life with the Blagdens. The world turned black and harsh for him in the flash of an eye. Across his horizon lay the shadows of Chetwynd and his mother, with the less sinister shape of his uncle behind them.

Mr. Presbrey accosted him, halting as the young man came up. He planted the ferule of his gold headed ebony cane firmly in a crack in the brick sidewalk, and said:

"Ah, you will be late for luncheon, my dear friend." He glanced at his watch. "It's half after one."

It occurred to Eric, and not for the first time, that Mr. Presbrey seldom missed the opportunity to censure him, even though he meant to be kindly and considerate.

"Yes, Mr. Presbrey," he said quietly, "I am afraid so. I must be hurrying along."

"You shouldn't keep your aunt waiting," said Mr. Presbrey genially, lifting his cane high enough to poke it at the youth in playful reproof.

Chetwynd, who now and then uttered something pointedly original, once remarked that Mr. Presbrey carried a cane so that occasionally he could be in touch with the earth.)

Eric hurried on. He looked back once, with a frown on his face, taking in Mr. Presbrey's stiff back as that gentleman moved off up the street. Mr. Presbrey looked back in the same instant.

"He's always looking to see if I'm in the narrow path," thought Eric, rancor in his soul.

He and Mary spent the greater part of the sultry afternoon on Stone Wall, where she dawdled over a novel while he tried to concentrate his mind on one or two studies that had been haunting him since the spring examinations. But his thoughts were of other things, both harsh and pleasant. Thoughts, delicious thoughts, of Joan were uppermost in his mind. Then, there was the cruel disappointment in connection with the prize, of which Mary was in ignorance. She had not seen his drawing. He had not told her of Chetwynd's foul trick. He could not in justice to himself, relate the story of his amazing interview with their uncle, nor would his tender heart allow him to repeat the unkind news he had obtained through Joan. He secretly was debating in his mind the wisdom of revealing Joan's rosy plans for the coming school year. Persistent reminders of Adam Carr's strange words and his even more mysterious attitude also forced their way through the labyrinth of thoughts that confused and distressed him.

At last in a burst of confidence—perhaps it was pity he felt for the sweet faced girl who sat beyond him all unconscious of the fact that he watched her with troubled eyes—he told her of Joan's plan, but emphatically enjoined silence on her part for the time being. Mary was in ecstasies. She forgot her book and her troubles, and he laid aside his own affairs while they discussed hopes, possibilities and obstacles.

Toward evening they strolled homeward both wrapped in the cloak of optimism that lies on the shoulders of youth. Arriving at the upper gate to the Seaman's Home on Lord's Point, they paused to shed some of their effulgent warmth on ancient Mr. Carr, whose sunset was clouded.

The old man was feeding the squirrels, a dozen of them scampered about his feet, or clambered over his person in frank security. A certain listlessness marked the old man's movements. The sprightliness was gone from the wrinkled nut brown face. He delivered the peanuts in a dreary, disinterested way and forgot his erstwhile cheerful cluck.

"Hello," called out Eric from the gate. The old man looked up. His face lighted in an instant.

"Come in," he called out to them. "Where have you two been a-keepin' yourselves for the last week?" he demanded irascibly, as they approached. He scattered the nuts broadcast and arose to welcome his visitors. The cause of his depression was revealed: he had missed these cheery young sprites and he had been lonely.

"Did you miss us, Uncle Jabe?" asked Mary penitently.

"You're a pair of derned ingrates," announced Jabez sourly, belying the joy that shone in his sharp little eyes. "I might 'a'died right here a dozen times over and you wouldn't 'a' knowed anything about it—er cared."

"But you didn't die," said Eric calmly. "Say, isn't that a new squirrel? I've never seen him before," pointing to a shy, alert little fellow on the edge of the group.

"Third time he's been around," said Jabez immensely gratified. "I was wondering if you'd notice him."

"Where's Mr. Adam?" asked Eric abruptly.

"Ain't you seen him? He went out along Stone Wall a couple of hours ago, lookin' for you, Eric. He must 'a' missed you."

"We were near Bud's Rock all afternoon. What did he want?" There was a trace of excitement in Eric's voice.

"You might as well ask me how fer it is to Jupiter," replied Jabez serenely. "He's the derndest feller I ever see fer keeping his businss to hisself. Hello! Yender he comes now. I reckon he's been huntin' fer you out there all afternoon."

"That's strange," said Eric. "He's usually pretty good at finding what he looks for."

Adam Carr slowly approached from the direction of Stone Wall. A vague, indefinable feeling of unrest came over Eric as of one who is being spied upon. Something seemed to tell him that Adam Carr had been watching him all the time they were out on Stone Wall.

"Well, he's found you, ain't he?" observed Jabez, in his driest way. "Give Adam time and he would find what he looked for, that was Jabez's inward contention.

GENUINE HEROISM.

Emerson.

The characteristic of genuine heroism is its persistency. All men have wandering impulses, fits and starts of generosity. But when you have resolved to be great, abide by yourself and do not weakly try to reconcile yourself with the world. The heroic cannot be the common, nor the common the heroic. If you would serve your brother, because it is fit for you to serve him, do not take back your words when you find that prudent people do not commend you. Be true to your own act, and congratulate yourself if you have done something strange and extravagant, and broken the monotony of a decorous age. It was a high counsel that I once heard given to a young person: "Always do what you are afraid to do."

Iceland has a poor soil and climate, but it has no almshouses, nor inmates in jails, nor criminal courts worth mentioning, but it has newspapers, schools, churches, total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the nation.

Politicians Start Many Revolutions.

From the Kansas City Star.

We usually think of revolutions as revolts against despotism, and as making for liberty. That isn't necessarily so. The great Roman revolution was a series of upheavals by which the Roman republic was transformed into an empire. The reason was that the republic failed in emciency. That is why all persons with the historical sense feel that politicians who sacrifice efficiency to politics are in a very deep sense enemies to the republic.

ORANGES TO PUT OUT FIRE

Ingenious Man Uses Juice of Golden Fruit to Extinguish Blaze in California.

Orange juice as a fire extinguisher was successfully used at Fillmore, Cal., by Will Wileman. While crossing the Bardsdale bridge with a load of oranges, Wileman noticed smoke issuing from a crack on one of the approaches—of the bridge—a fire probably caused by a lighted cigar or cigarette carelessly thrown away. He jumped from his wagon and discovered a blaze slowly eating its way upward from the planking. With the help of several passers-by he hastily spread several armfuls of oranges from his wagon over the crack and started stamping on them, causing the juice from the golden fruit to penetrate through the crack to the fire, extinguishing it.

REMARKABLE CASE of Mrs. HAM

Declares Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her Life and Sanity.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."—Mrs. JOSIE HAM, R. Canadian Wheat to Feed the World

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's fearful devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and there is an unusual demand for Canadian wheat. Canada's invitation to every industrious American is therefore especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves while helping her to raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands can be bought at remarkably low prices. Think of the money you can make with wheat at its present high prices, where for some time it is liable to continue. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only feed required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada. There is no conscription and no war tax on lands.

The Ultimate For Real Nerve

George Walters one of the passenger conductors on this branch of the Rock Island, has a fine 160-acre farm over near Gruver in Emmet county. Last week, according to the Estherville papers, he entered into contract for its sale and the sequel to this transaction certainly takes the cake for a display of simon pure unadulterated nerve A short time ago Mr. Walters answered an advertisement from a Waterloo party that wanted to invest in Emmet county land and would pay $125 per acre. Considerable correspondence took place. It is presumed that the usual form of contract was made out, but in some way a period slipped into the contract and the price read $1 25 instead of $125 an acre. The deed was placed with the Iowa Savings Bank at Estherville. Frame remitted $100 to the bank of at the rate of $1.25 an acre for the quarter section. He was sent the abstract and then called and demandel the deed saying that he had paid for the farm in full. The deed was denied him and was turned over to an attorney, who burned it, the latter confessing this after a writ of replevin and a court order had been issued. The Estherville papers state that the case is still pending and the Enterprise adds: "We will give Frame credit for having more nerve than any other man on the face of this green earth. Think of a man desiring 160 acres of Emmet county land at $1.25 an acre. Where, in heaven's name, was the insane commission at this time? Suppose he had gotten possession of the deed, and had it transferred to another party and again to another; where would the present owners have stood in court? It is no small matter, and should prove a warning to others to keep a copy of their correspondence." —Swea City Herald.

Care of Cream During Summer

Because of the general butter conditions, quality is more important than ever before. Whether the butter is made on the farm or at the creamery its quality depends largely upon the manner in which the cream and milk is handled. The system of grading cream at a large number of the creameries and making difference in the price of sweet and sour cream emphasizes the importance of giving the raw product the best possible care.

The two important factors in producing good cream are a low temperature and cleanliness If these two essentials are properly employed there is very little trouble in getting the best price for dairy products

When the milk comes from the cow it is absolutely pure but the contamination starts from the time it leaves the teat until placed in the vat at the creamery If the cows are on pasture there s less liability of dirt entering the milk during the summer than during the winter However, care should be taken in brushing off the dirt and dust from the udder, and the milker's hands should be clean The milk should be run through the cream seperator as soon as possible after drawn. It should be removed from he barn and taken directly to the cream separator and skimmed

When the milk is drawn it has a temperature of 98 degrees Fahrenheit, which is just right for the development of bacteria If it is allowed to stand around the barn, the bacteria will develop rapidly and thus make it much more difficult to produce sweet cream The cream should be taken from the separator and cooled at once This can be most easily done by placing the cans in a small tank of water. The average well water has a temperature of about 50 degrees This, when pumped directly into the small tank which has an outlet into a large stock tank, offers the most practical means of cooling the cream on the average farm The tank may be constructed of either wood, steel or cement.

Shotgun cans offer the best means of cooling cream because of their small diameter and the amount of surface exposed to the water in comparison with the amount of cream contained. The cream will cool much quicker if it is stirred at intervals of one-half hour after it has been skimmed.

The cream separator as well as the milk utensils used should all be thoroughly washed with a brush. A brush is much preferred to a rag because of the bristles getting into the cracks and crevices and cleaning the pails and can thoroughly. After washing, the untensils should be scalded and then placed in the air to dry. Cans and pails should be inverted but should not have the tops closely against the table. Pegs fastened into the wall are a very good means of airing the milk cans.

One of the most important features in producing clean milk is the covered pail. This is simply an ordinary pail with the top partly covered in order to prevent the dirt which drops from the cow entering the pail. These pails are a little more expensive than the ordinary open pail and practical use shows that they are very desireable for the average farm.

Those who are producing the best grade of cream have constructed small milk houses. These are inexpensive and are located near the pump. The cooling tank, as well as the cream separator, are placed in them, thus concentrating the work and making it easier to properly care for the cream

Every farmer will be well repaid for constructing a small tank and handling his cream in a sanitary manner. The premium on sweet cream will continue to increase and the price will more than repay for the expense of the equipment and the trouble of giving the products good care.

Reformed Convention Proved Successful

May 26-30, the Minnesota Classics of the Reformed Church met for its 49th annual convention in the local Reformed church.. Seventeen delegates ten ministers and seven elders, from various stations in Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin were present. Rev. W. Koehler of Cologne, Minn., was elected president, Rev. J. Rosenau, of Northwood, Minn, vice-president and Rev. W. Thiel, state clerk. While the business sessions were held by day, religious services were observed at night. On Sunday the annual Mission fest was celebrated, which despite the almost impassible roads was largely attended. Next spring the classic will meet in the country church at Waukon, Iowa and there will celebrate the 50th anniversary of its existence.

Laws have been passed in various communities for the purpose of discouraging the use of egrets for millinery purposes, on the ground of cruel methods resorted to in securing plumes, but the word now comes from India that the birds from which they are secured are now extensively domesticated ,and that the decorations are now secured in a perfectly humane way. The birds are bred in captivity, and are plucked of their "ospreys" or aigrets without suffering any injury, just as in the case of ostriches. The conditions of captivity make them more productive of aigrets than are wild birds, as the young are taken away from their parents, to be reared by hand, when about a week old, and the parents then breed again Thus the nuptial plumage, which is all that is commercially valuable, is assumed four times a year The birds are liberally fed with fish, and are so tame that they allow themselves to be seized without showing any fear The killing of egrets for their plumage was prohibited in the province about 30 years ago.

A race of pygmies hitherto unknown has just been discovered in the French Congo The little folk are said never to surpass 1 5 meters, about four feet nine inches in height. They live entirely isolated in the territory or Mongimbo. They build huts of hemispherical shape in the forest in groups of from five to 30 The chief is an old man who exercises absolute authority and elects his own successor They follow a curious custom as to food the women subsisting on edible roots, while the men live on the products of the chase. According to a legend among them, the former are descended from a hedgehog and the latter from a toad They have various notions of good and evil and they have a certain cult of the dead, whom they bury with much piety They are valiant in the defense of their liberty and independence.

The latest attempt to determine the absolute diameter of a number of fixed stars is that of Signor Ferrara, of Teramo, Italy. Among the stars having a measureable parallax he estimates, from photometric measurements, that Canopus is the largest with a diameter 51 times as great as that of the sun Other large stars, and the ratios of their diameters to that of the sun, are Castor, 18 Arcturus, 10 4, Pollux, 8 7, Capella 8 Vega, 6.8 Such determinations are of course highly problematical

Telegraphers are becoming more and more needed in the British army and correspondingly hard to get. The war office demanded 20 expert men a few days ago The employers of these men refused to give them up saying that they had let so many of their employes go as almost to paralyze their business "Victory first" was the reply of the war office and Kitchener sent an officer to select the 20 men he wished.

SUES BROTHERINLAW FOR $3,000,000 ON PROPERTY DEALINGS

Mrs. Bettendorf Alleges Administrator Took Her Shares Below Valuation.

Davenpor, Ia., May 29.—Elizabeth H. Bettendorf widow of W. P. Bettendorf, inventor of hydraulic machinery and founder of the Bettendorf company here, has entered suit in the sum of $3,000,000 against her brotherinlaw, J. W. Bettendorf, and the Bettendorf company as a corporation.

Misrepresentation and fraud in the sale of W P Bettendorf's stock, after his death, to J W. Bettendorf and others, is charged W P Bettendorf died in June, 1910. He left no will. On agreement with the widow the brother, J. W Bettendorf, was appointed administrator.

Mrs. Bettendorf alleges she was induce, by reason of her complete confidence in her brotherinlaw, to accept a valuation of $2,331,050 on the plant. This was on December 31, 1912. Eighteen months later, when making returns to the executive council of state for the purpose of reorganization, a valuation of $8,689,603 was agreed on by both the company and state officials On this showing the company was authorized to issue $7,500,000 in stock

Mrs Bettendorf now seeks to recover the difference in value of the stock at the figure she sold it and its actual value, as represented to the state of Iowa. She seeks compensation for patents held by her husband and which she alleges were taken over by the company She further asks for her share of royalties in these patents and inventions

BODY OF AUGUST LEMPLE RECOVERED FROM RIVER

Davenport, Ia., May 29 -The body of August Lemple, who has been missing since May 17, was found by one of the searching parties that have been dragging the Wapsipinicon river for the past three days. The body was discovered by Mat Schroeder near Dixon, Ia

Positive identification was established by means of a jackknife on which the missing farmer's name was engraved Possibility of foul play has led the coroner to call an inquest

Lemple was last seen in the company of two strangers who disappeared the day that the Scott county farmer was found to be missing Neighbors and friends of Lemple think these strangers may have thrown him into the river

FARMER GAVE TIP ON ALLEGED BRIBERY ATTEMPT

Des Moines, Ia May 29 It became known yesterday afternoon that Matthew Sexauer, a well known farmer near Ankeny is the man who informed the authorities that a "$2,000 pot" had been raised for the purpose of attempting to swing the jury" in the case against Ira Miller, charged with manslaughter

Sexauer was one of the first witnesses called before the county grand jury yesterday afternoon and was on the witness stand for more than an hour, during which time he was questioned regarding his assertions.

Another important witness who testified was Henry Sexauer, jr a cousin to the informant Both men are said to be related to William Miller, father of the defendant

DEPUTY GAME WARDEN ALLEGED LAW VIOLATOR

Waterloo, Ia., May 29.- Information against Elmer Goodell, acting deputy game warden, and others, has been filed in Justice F F Knapp's court It charged illegal fishing Godell pleaded guilty and was fined $30 and costs

ACTIVE JINX TRAILS AMES COUPLE; WEARY OF BAD LUCK STRAIN

Operations, Suicide and Burglary Among Incidents of Recent Date.

Ames, Ia., May 29.—A "jinx" seems to be mixing itself into the affairs of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tarman, of this city. A few weeks ago Mrs. Tarman was taken to a Des Moines hospital for a surgical operation. Her husband returned home from Des Moines and was seized with an attack of appendicitis. He underwent an operation at the home of his parents in Nevada, on the same day that his wife had a second operation. Dean Baaman, a neighbor boy, was seized with appendicitis while calling on Tarman and his condition was so bad that it was impossible to remove him to his own home, and he was operated on at the Tarman home. A few days later Batman's mother committed suicide.

Mr. and Mrs. Tarman recovered sufficiently to return to their home here last Saturday evening, and found that it had been entered by burglars during their absence and the house ransacked from top to bottom. The thieves contented themselves with breaking and robbing a child's bank. Mr and Mrs. Tarman are expecting more trouble at any moment, so accustomed have they become to it in their recent experiences.

JITNEY PASSENGER HURT IN AUTO COLLISION

Des Moines, Ia May 29 - W L. McKee, of 1514 Fremont street, is said to have been seriously injured when a jitney bus and a Ford automobile collided at East Ninth and Des Moines streets. He was taken to Mercy hospital in the police ambulance, where he is suffering from a badly bruised head and back and other injuries of a less serious nature. McKee is employed in the meter department at the Des Moines Electric company

According to information received by the police, McKee was a passenger on the jitney bus which was being operated by Fred Fuller, of 707 Fourth street. The jitney bus was going west on Des Moines street and the Ford automobile was proceeding in an eastward direction when the collision occurred Both machines are reported to have been badly wrecked

BIG REFUNDS PROBABLE ON COUNTY CRIMINAL EXPENSES

Des Moines, Ia., May 29 --As the result of an act passed by the Thirty-sixth general assembly, Polk county will receive in the neighborhood of $25,000 which has been paid out in the last two years as court costs in the convicting of 228 prisoners now in the penal institutions at Fort Madison and Anamosa

County Clerk Mahan today received a letter from the state board of control, asking him to furnish that body with the total amount of money expended in convicting the prisoners. The letter states that the legislative act provides for the working of the prisoners at ordinary wages the money to be turned back to the counties to reimburse them for the expense of trying the cases. The salaries of court officials are not included however

According to the communication there are 126 Polk county prisoners now at Fort Madison, and 102 at the Anamosa reformatory

The county clerk estimated that each prisoner convicted has cost the county on an average of $100, exclusive of court officials' salaries

BARNEY TO WAGE WAR ON SHORT BERRY BOXES

Des Moines, Ia., May 29 - W B Barney, state dairy and food commission is preparing for a battle to prevent the sale of short quart berry boxes in this state. Commission men have been requesting permission to sell strawberries in boxes containing one and one-half pints The state official declares that that sort of box shall not be allowed to come into the state for the reason that they will be sold to consumers as full quarts.

Firms in the southern and western state are insisting on shipping strawberries into Iowa in the short boxes, it is said If the short boxes are sold the local dealers will be the ones liable to prosecution, Mr Barney says He declares that the 36th general assembly strengthened the law so that the berry box situation can be easily handled by the department

RUMOR OF EFFORT TO BRIBE HALTS MURDER CASE IN DES MOINES

Claimed Fund of $2,000 Raised to Influence County Attorney Wilson.

Des Moines, Ia., May 28.—A situation that arose in Judge Charles A. Dudley's court yesterday afternoon involving the alleged raising of a fund of $2,000 in an attempt to bribe County Attorney Wilson and other officials connected with the case of the state against Ira Miller, of Ankeny, charged with manslaughter, bids fair to develop into some sensational disclosures.

Although Mr. Wilson nor any of his staff have been approached with an actual offer of bribery, it was reported authentically last evening that the money has been raised for that purpose.

Judge Dudley instructed the county attorney yesterday afternoon to call the Polk county grand jury together for a session which will start this afternoon. Mr Wilson followed the advice of the judge immediately and Sheriff Griffin served notice on practically all the grand jurors last night

Miller is charged with manslaughter as a result of an accident last fall which resulted in the death of Mrs Guy O Daggy, near Ankeny The defendant, who is 18 years old, was driving an automobile which collided with a buggy in which Mr and Mrs Daggy were riding

Attorney Jesse Miller, of Miller & Wallingford, representing the defendant, said that reports of gross irregularities had reached the attorneys for both the state and defense "I don't know a thing about this alleged deal, nor does my client," declared Mr Miller "I hope they get to the bottom of it. I cannot imagine who would make such an attempt"

The first inkling of the reported attempt to buy the county attorney came at 2 30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when County Attorney Wilson filed the following motion with the court clerk after a lengthy conference with the attorneys for the defense and Judge Dudley

"On account of certain disclosures which have come to our attention since this trial began which have been submitted to the court, and feeling that the grand jury should investigate the same, the state asks at this time that further progress in this trial be suspended and that the case be continued until the September term of this court "

MARSH'S HERD CURED, THOUGH AUTHORITIES SAID CASE HOPELESS

Return of Animals to Iowa Is Incident of Late Scare on Cattle Plague.

Waterloo, Ia., May 27.--W. W. Marsh's famous herd of Guernseys, purchased from the J. Pierpont Morgan estate in England, may be returned to Iowa in a few weeks.

The herd will probably be released by the federal authorities at Hawthorne, Ill., on June 1. Dr. J. I. Gibson, state veterinarian, will go with the executive committee of the federal bureau of animals. The committee was in session in Chicago yesterday. The trip to Hawthorne is scheduled for today.

Dr Gibson indicated that if the federal authorities release the herd, as they indicate they will, he will probably make no resistance to returning the animals to Iowa.

The Marsh herd was in Chicago last November, when the hoof and mouth disease broke out in the prize cattle. They took the disease. The federal bureau threatened to kill the animals, but Marsh secured permission to isolate them at Hawthorne, to experiment with the proposition of curing them. No such experiment had ever been conducted in the United States.

The animals recovered. For the last 60 days other cattle have been run with the Marsh herd and they have shown no symptoms of the disease. On the strength of this test the federal officials are relied upon to release the herd

FRATERNAL SOCIETIES CAN BECOME LEGAL RESERVES

Des Moines, Ia., May 27 —Under the provisions of the new life insurance legislation enacted by the 36th general assembly, it will be possible after July 4 for fraternal beneficiary societies of Iowa to transform themselves into legal reserve life insurance companies, according to an announcement made yesterday by Emory H. English, state insurance commissioner

It was not generally known that any such legislation was pending, and the bill by Senator Hagemann, senate file 492, effecting this change in the statutes did not disclose upon its face what it accomplished, the title merely stating that it was amendatory of section 1798-b, supplement to the code, 1913, "relating to fraternal beneficiary societies It was passed the last week of the session without opposition in the senate and after limited discussion only in the house

By the terms of the act, the words "or fraternal beneficiary society" are injected into the law permitting assessment life associations to be transformed into legal reserve life companies.

DES MOINES MEN FORM NEW BANKING COMPANY

The company has authorized capital of $100,000, of which $50,000 is paid up, and is backed by some of the city's prominent business men.

The new company does not expect to do a commercial banking business at the present time, but will receive time deposits buy and sell farm and city mortgages, deal in bonds, real estate, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, act as trustee and administrator of estates and such other business as is usually transacted by a trust company

The directors are H R. Howell, W L. Shepard, J L. Sheuerman, Judge S. M Ladd George G Hunter, C. H Martin, Ed B. Hunter Sidney Mandelbaum and H H Polk George G Hunter will act as president, H R. Howell, vice president, and Ed B. Hunter as secretary.

DENTAL STUDENTS MAY FIGHT TUITION INCREASE

Iowa City, Ia May 27 — Following an announcement by the dental faculty that tuition for students of that department of the university would be raised to over $100 next year, the entire class looked up the matter previous to taking action to enjoin the authorities from enforcing the raise of tuition

They declare they will ask for an injunction against the state board of education and cite a precedent established by a somewhat similar suit involving the University of Missouri, which was upheld in the Missouri supreme court for the plaintiff student.

Several have already withdrawn advance payments that they had made on their tuition for next year

CARLSON EXPLAINS CITY'S PLANS ON COMPENSATION LAW

Des Moines Ia, May 27 —Yesterday Eskil Carlson attorney for the city, explained the position of the city with reference to the workmen's compensation law to Attorney General Cosson. He asked for a ruling from the department, and pledged that the city would follow it

The controversy between the city and the industrial commission over the workmen's compensation law arose over a claim of George Dickey, a policeman who was injured while on duty. The city officials placed Dickey on a pension but did not pay him compensation benefits in addition. Recently the industrial commissioner sent a letter to Mayor Hanna instructing him that the permit of the city to carry its own risk will be withdrawn if the city declines to pay Dickey the benefits he is entitled to under the compensation law

Mr Carlson explained to the attorney general that the city gave Dickey a pension rather than pay him benefits under the compensation law for his injury, because he can draw the pension for the remainder of his life. It amounts to $41 a month. The compensation would amount to about the same but can be drawn for only 300 weeks, the attorney says. He calls attention to the section of the compensation law which says that all payments under the measure shall be "exclusive." He asserts that this would bar Dickey from drawing a pension.

DROPS EIGHTY FEET, BUT NOT SERIOUSLY INJURED

Tabor, Ia., May 25.—A straight drop of 80 feet without serious injury is quite a feat, but John Aistrope, aged 25 performed it near here, and did not use a parachute, either.

Aistrope was preparing to descend to the bottom of a well by means of a rope. He had just started when the rope broke and he fell to the bottom. There was no water in the well.

His right knee as strained slightly as was his left arm Otherwise he was not injured

WILSON PREPARES TO TAKE VIGOROUS ACTION IN MEXICO

Intervention Talk Revived Announcement President Will Issue Statement to Faction Leaders Tuesday.

FAMINE MUST BE RELIEVED

Militarist Leaders Blamed Recognition Will Be Denied Carranza — Crisis Is Thought Imminent.

Washington, May 29.—President Wilson's forthcoming statement on Mexican situation will contain detailed review of conditions and a warning on the factional leaders the United States will not assist in improvement of the general situation. Officials refused today to discuss alternative the president has in mind.

The statement has been written by President Wilson himself on his own typewriter in his study and is said to contain about 1,500 words. It will be forwarded to the various Mexican factions through American agents. It is to be based on the conclusion that conditions in Mexico have come to a state that the United States, as a southern republic's next friend, must see to it that there is a change.

May Restore Embargo.

An embargo on the exportation of arms from the United States is understood to have been under consideration. The report to President Wilson by Duval West, who returned recently from Mexico is said not to have been the only factor influencing the president's determination. Much other information has been coming to him for months.

American Red Cross supplies for famine sufferers are to be concentrated in three great government warehouses at Galveston Laredo and El Paso. Letters to the governor of each state, many prominent men as well as some interested parties in Mexico, urging co-operation, were sent out today by Red Cross headquarters.

Washington, May 29.—Attention again focused today on Mexico as a result of President Wilson's determination to warn the Mexican leaders that conditions in the southern republic must improve. The president's forthcoming pronouncement at which will be made Tuesday was awaited with keenest interest here. Its contents known only to officials who decline to reveal what it contains except to say that recognition of any faction is not contemplated

The president's determination becomes known in an appeal issued as head of the Red Cross urging contributions to relieve destitute people of Mexico.

West's Report Startling.

After conferring with Duval West just back from Mexico President Wilson declared last Tuesday that there would be no change in his Mexican policy. But more recent events brought about his determination to act. These include the seizure by Carranza authorities at Vera Cruz and Mexico City to provide transportation for supplies to succor the ever increasing bread line.

In connection with conditions in Mexico the American Red Cross has issued a statement describing them as "appalling." "Great numbers of unfortunate people are victims of the long continued fighting," says the statement. "They have been facing starvation for months and now have reached an acute stage, when only food supplies can save them from death."

Warning From Wilson.

It became known late today that the president has been strongly advising recently to recognize the Carranza government in Mexico, particularly in view of the possibility of its early return to power in Mexico City Officials declined to say whether this point will be taken up in the president's statement

Despite the refusal of White House officials to discuss the president's contemplated statement, it was understood that it will be in the nature of a notice that conditions in Mexico are fast becoming intolerable. While it will not give notice that the United States intends to intervene immediately it is expected to serve as a warning to the Mexican leaders that conditions must improve.

Talk of Intervention.

Talk of intervention which has been dormant ever since the European war diverted attention from the situation nearer home was immediately revived by the White House statement. Many diplomatists who interpret the day's events as the forerunner of a new policy thought intervention was an inevitable outcome of the situation and that the United States was paving the way for such action by publicly notifying the world of its purpose to take the step for the sake of humanity They pointed out that a similar utterance had preceded intervention in Cuba in 1898.

Officials at the White House and state department declined to say what the president's statement contains, but it is denied that recognition of any faction was now contemplated. It was stated authoritatively that while friends of Carranza here had been pressing for recognition, the Washington government had not been impressed with the ability of any of the contending chiefs to restore order. The present action, it was said, was not intended to assist one faction at the expense of another but to demand, in effect, that the Mexicans arrive at an early settlement of their troubles, or at least provide for the sustenance of the starving population.

Deny Early Move Is Planned.

High officials referred to the president's forthcoming pronouncement as not meaning immediate intervention and they emphasized the word "immediate."

The impression in executive quarters was that one purpose would be to place responsibility for the present state of affairs squarely upon the military element in the southern republic which have overrun the country, and appropriated its food supply of corn vented the tilling of the soil. While anxious to continue the policy of allowing the Mexicans to settle their differences without outside interference the president is said to be determined that the civilian population of the country shall not be starved in the meantime

Signals From Factory

Residents of Pesaro maintain the Austrian squadron was signalled by dense columns of black smoke which poured from the chimneys of a factory in which Austrians were employed. Sig- nals are reported to have been given at Ancona by means of rockets fired from the deck of a French steamer interned in the port. It is said to cur- rent that General Asinari recognized the identity of those responsible and had them shot Thursday.

At a meeting at Ancona between General Asinari the governor of the city Deputy Pantaleoni, Deputy Patrizi Deputy Paolucci and the archbishop with other thirty leaders who last June attempted to proclaim a republic the revolutionists pledged themselves to give their prop- erty and their lives if necessary in the struggle to crush Austria.

DRY WORKERS TO SWAT MANN BOOM

Anti-Saloon League of America Assure Republicans His Nomination Means Defeat In Advance.

Washington, May 31. Coincident with the news that a big presidential boom is being engineered for James R Mann of Chicago, minority leader of the House the Anti Saloon League of America has declared war on Manns candidacy.

General Superintendent Baker of the Anti-Saloon league has issued a state- ment declaring that the united temper- ance forces will oppose Mann because he led the fight against the Hobson prohibition amendment. Mr Baker charges the Mann candidacy has its birth with the liquor interests and that if the republican party wants to in- sure its defeat in advance the way to do it is to nominate Mann.

Mann's supporters are giving wide circulation to a petition requesting him to become a candidate for the repub- lican nomination for president. The plan is to have a special train meet him at Denver when he returns from Hon- olulu to have his candidacy then an- nounced and active work then under- taken for him.

The James R Mann for president committee engineered by Illinois pol- iticians, is promoting the petition in the name of republicanism and prosper- ity. While denouncing Mann Anti Saloon league leaders say they are friendly to the nomination of Cummins because some time ago he said: The saloon must go.

SUBMARINE TRAVELS ABOUT 3,400 MILES

Amsterdam (via London) May 29. A dispatch received here today from Berlin says that Captain Persius the naval expert writing in the Berlin Tageblatt in praise of the exploit of the German submarine in sinking the British battleship Triumph off the Dardanelles says that this small un- dersea boat must have cruised upward of 3,400 miles from the North sea around Gibraltar to the Dardanelles and all under her own power without stopping at a supply station.

While crossing a bridge in Fremont, Cal with a load of oranges Will Wide- man discovered a blaze slowly eating its way upward from the planking. He jumped from his wagon and with the help of several passersby he hastily spread several armfuls of oranges over the crack from which the smoke was issuing, and began stamping on the oranges, causing the juice to penetrate through the crack and extinguish the fire.

WITHHOLD REPORT ABOUT NEBRASKAN

Expert's Views Sent to Washington Are Not Made Public—Berlin Denies It—Admit Gulflight Case.

Washington May 31 Ambassador Page's report on the explosion which damaged the American steamer Ne- braskan including the findings of the naval experts who examined her reached the state department today, but will be withheld from publication for the present. Whether naval ex- perts reported the ship torpedoed or damaged by a mine authorities would not disclose.

Berlin (via London) May 29. The foreign office and the admiralty are still without news concerning the re- ported torpedoing of the American steamship Nebraskan and deprecate all discussion of possible effect on Ger- man American negotiations pending an authoritative communication. German newspapers have printed nothing about the Nebraskan incident since the first Rotterdam dispatch reporting that the ship had been torpedoed, and that she was still afloat with the crew safe in her lifeboats.

The torpedoing of the steamship Gulf- light is now established as due to a German submarine the report of the commander of the submarine in ques- tion having been received by the ad- miralty.

The commander stated that when he first saw the Gulflight she was being convoyed by two patrol boats, and he concluded that she must be a British vessel or was carrying contraband. The presence of the patrol boats the com- mander reported made closer investi- gation dangerous.

The main points of the German reply to the American note on the sinking of the Lusitania probably are known to the administration in Washington now, so that the note itself which it is ex- pected will be delivered tomorrow, will not come as an absolute surprise. The American ambassador has had daily conferences at the foreign office, where terms of the German answer were dis- cussed.

MUNITIONS QUESTION NO ISSUE IN BERLIN

Army Can Fight on Indefinitely Is Claim—Plenty of Raw Material on Hand

Berlin (via London) May 31. Re- plying to a question at a sitting of the budget committee of the reichstag to- day as to whether the army adminis- tration had taken measures to ensure a supply of raw materials and textiles in the event of a long duration of the war, a deputy war minister made this public statement:

"Even a new winter campaign would find us prepared in every way. All the raw materials are at hand in suf- ficient quantities for it. It must be de- clared out of the question therefore, that the efficiency of our army could be impaired owing to some deficiency."

Petrograd Claims and Vienna Admits That Teutonic Left Flank Is Being Driven Back.

London May 31. Terrific fighting is continuing along the River San in Galicia with the Austro-German hosts making progress except at Sieniawa 30 miles north of Przemysl, where, ac- cording to the claims of Petrograd and admissions of Vienna an Austro- Hungarian force is being thrown back across the river to the west bank. In this action the Russians assert that they captured several thousand pris- oners and a number of guns.

RUSSIANS REINFORCED; ATTACK AUSTRIAN LINE

Vienna, (via London) May 29.—In an effort to check further advance of the allied troops in the River San sec- tion, an official communication issued by the war office states, Russian rein- forcements yesterday were brought forward from the north. The text of the communication follows:

Yesterday Russian reinforcements coming from the north attempted on several sections of the front east of the River San by means of violent attacks to check further advance of the allied troops. Hostile attacks both day and night miscarried and the allied troops gained more ground on both sides of the Wysznia. Near Sienwa small Aus- tro-Hungarian detachments were com- pelled to retreat to the west bank of the San before a strong Russian force and compelled to leave some guns on the east bank. Engagements near Drohobycz and Stry are proceeding successfully. Despite stubborn resist- ance, fresh Russian positions have been captured. On the Pruth and in Rus- sian Poland nothing has occurred worthy of report.

A Dexter (Me.) farmer, who is nearly 60 years old, took his first ride on a railroad train recently, although he has lived within one-fourth of a mile of the railroad tracks for many years. He confided to a friend, that he was rather nervous before he got on the train for Bangor.

ANOTHER WARNING TO U. S. SHIPPING

Berlin Advises Vessels Entering War Zone to Be More Cautious About Lights and Markings.

Washington D C, May 31 -An urgent warning to American shipping against traversing the naval war zone incautiously and to have all neutral markings displayed as conspicuously as possible, including illumination at night, was communicated to the state department today by the German gov- ernment through the American em- bassy at Berlin.

The German warning was announced in the following statement made pub- lic by the state department:

"The American ambassador at Ber- lin has been informed by the German foreign office that in view of the fact that during the last few weeks it has repeatedly occurred that neutral ships have been sunk in the waters desig- nated as an area of maritime war by the German admiralty on February 4, 1915, and especially in one case where it was established that the sinking was traceable to an attack by a German submarine which took the neutral ship for an English vessel in the darkness, on account of the inadequate illumi- nation of its neutral distinctive mark- ings, it recommended that American shipping circles again be warned against traversing the area of mari- time war incautiously and also be urged to make the neutral markings as plain as possible, and especially to have them illuminated promptly and sufficiently at night."

ITALIAN TORPEDO BOAT DESTROYED

Rome Admits Loss of Craft In Battle Which Resulted In Driving Off Austrian Raiders.

Rome, (via Paris), May 31.—A com- munication issued today by the Italian ministry of marine gives the following details of naval losses by Austria and Italy up to the present:

"On May 24 the Austrian torpedo boat, S-20, having approached the canal at Porto Corsini, was so severely damaged by the fire from our masked batteries that she was forced to be convoyed to Pola. The torpedo boat de- stroyer Scharfschiaze, which was op- erating with S-20, also was damaged, suffering the loss of many of her crew. She called the scout ship Novara to her assistance, which was struck sev- eral times and also had several of her crew killed, including an officer. The destroyer Ozepel also suffered severe losses, due to the arrival of our squad- ron during the action.

"After the preceding brilliant action we regret exceedingly to announce the loss of our destroyer called Turbine. She was built in 1901 and was of ap- proximately 330 tons. During the morn- ing of May 24 on a tour of reconnais- sance, she sighted an enemy destroyer and gave chase. The chase lasted half an hour, when four other enemy war vessels appeared, including the cruiser Helgoland. The Turbine immediately turned about to run for her naval base, but was struck twice in her boilers, thus reducing her speed.

"She continued the battle for about half an hour although fire had broken out aboard and there was a lack of munitions. Then the commander or- dered the water intake valves opened in order to avoid capture. The Turbine commenced to sink with all her men gathered at the stern, the enemy keep- ing up their fire all the while.

"The commander who had been wounded at the beginning of the battle ordered his men to jump overboard. As soon as the Austrians saw the maneuv- er, they launched small boats, in order to save as many of the men as possible. Meanwhile the squadron to which the Turbine belonged was seen approach- ing and the enemy left the small boats in the water and departed.

"Our squadron fired several times at the retreating enemy vessels and an enemy ship of the same type of the Tatra and also the cruiser, Helgoland, appeared to have been struck.

"Nine men of the Turbine were saved by our fleet. From Austrian commu- nications we learn that 35 more were picked up by the Austrians, including the commander."

STEAMER ETHIOPE IS SUNK BY SUBMARINE

Liverpool, May 29.—The Elder Demp- ster line steamer Ethiope has been tor- pedoed and sunk.

The chief officer and 16 men of the Ethiope have been picked up. The rest of the crew is supposed to be in boats.

LINER LA CHAMPAGNE IS COMPLETE WRECK

London, May 29.—A report received by Lloyds states that the steamer Champagne of the French Trans-Atlan- tic line, which ran ashore near St. Naxaie, has broken in two.

The 900 passengers aboard the Cham- pagne were removed in safety. The steamer, which was built in 1886, had a net tonnage of 3,068. She was 343 feet long with a beam of 53 feet.

Corning (N. Y.) authorities discov- ered the other day that the city water supply was badly contaminated. They immediately blew the fire whistle so energetically that every one grew curious, made inquiry and learned of the danger.

Reply to American Note Which Will Be Forwarded Tomorrow Proposes That Consideration of Submarine Warfare Question Be Postponed Until Berlin Ascertains Whether Liner Was Not an Auxiliary Cruiser Carrying Soldiers and War Supplies For British Government.

HAGGLING ATTITUDE IS ASSUMED BY GERMANY

Kaiser's Answer to President Wilson's Note Raises Numerous Minor Questions That Are Beside the Issue—Official Text Not Yet Made Public, But Authorized Version Clearly Intimates Contents—Washington Withholds Comment But Evidently Is Not Pleased.

Berlin, (via London), May 29.—On the eve of the delivery to United States Ambassador Gerard of the German reply to the Amer- ican note on the destruction of the Lusitania, the exact form and phraseology the document would take seemed unsettled and a few changes in details still were under consideration.

The answer in substance, however, will embody a proposal to the United States to defer definite consideration of Germany's submarine policy and President Wilson's demands until the two governments have had an opportunity to establish just what sort of a vessel was sunk—whether the Lusitania was a peaceful merchantman, as as- sumed in the American note, or an auxiliary cruiser on the British navy list, mounting concealed cannon, carrying Canadian soldiers bound for the front, as well as a cargo of ammunition and war sup- plies, as indicated by information the German government claims to have.

It will be in effect an invitation to "define the terms" to be used in the argument before proceeding with the discussion. Germany believes it unnecessary to take up the question of disavowing the sinking of the Lusitania or discontinuing submarine warfare in gen- eral until the two governments reach an agreement upon the essen- tial facts in the case.

Germany holds that it is impossible to decide for instance the questions, whether sufficient opportunity was given passengers and crew to escape until it is determined whether the Lusi- tania was provided with bulkheads and boats as ordered for corresponding emergencies in peace times by the In- ternational congress of safety at sea. Another question which it is held must be considered is whether or not ammunition and explosives carried in defiance of American laws accelerated the sinking of the ship which might otherwise have been expected to get its boats away safely or reach the coast.

Such is in general the argument of the German government which may be expected also to display curiosity re- garding the fate of the American com- promise proposal to end submarine warfare and the American govern- ment's efforts to induce England to ac- cept them.

With regard to the cases of the Cushing and the Gulflight, Germany will point out that she has disavowed repeatedly all intention of harming in- offensive neutral shipping even in the war zone and will express her complete readiness to pay compensation for "un- fortunate accidents."

Tone of German Reply Is Blow to Optimists

Washington, D C., May 31.—With news from Berlin this morning that the German reply to the American note will probably reach here Sunday and that it will be temporarizing and unsatis- factory along with other developments Washington today took a gloomy and pessimistic view of the outlook for an adjustment of difficulties with Ger- many.

The delay in answering the note, the disclosure that Berlin will reply piece- meal and will seek to bring about an agreement as to the facts of the Lusi- tania case, the growing evidence that the Nebraskan was torpedoed, the ad- mission that a German submarine did torpedo the Gulflight, the growing im- patience of the American press and the defiant tone of a party of the German press, all these things and more are not calculated, to say the least, to re- assure those who hope for a pacific understanding with the Kaiser's gov- ernment.

Wait Official Text.

Germany's reply to the American note regarding the destruction of the Lusitania was being awaited today by administration officials with keen in- terest. It was to be handed to Ambas- sador Gerard in Berlin today who it was believed would immediately cable it to the state department. Unofficial in- formation said the reply would be given to the German press tomorrow for pub- lication. It probably will be given out here for publication at the same time.

Unofficial advices said the reply would embody a proposal to the Uni- ted States to defer definite considera- tion of Germany's submarine policy and the American demands until the two governments have had an opportunity to determine just what sort of vessel was sunk—whether the Lusitania was a peaceful merchantman, as assumed in the American note or an auxiliary cruiser on the British navy list mount- ing concealed cannon and carrying mu- nitions of war as indicated by informa- tion the German government claims to have.

The reply it was said, would be in ef- fect an invitation to "define the terms" to be used in the argument before pro- ceeding with the discussion. Germany's delay in replying to the American note has caused widespread speculation in official and diplomatic circles.

Still Hope for Best.

While high officials scrupulously avoided comment, it was evident they were loath to believe the German gov- ernment had underestimated the in- tense feeling of the American people on the Lusitania disaster with the loss of more than 100 American lives, or would seek to delay the reparation demanded by the United States.

Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, confirmed the London re- ports that he had sent wireless mas- sages to the German foreign office de- claring the American press was be- coming impatient over the delay. In sending the German reply, and that the Nebraskan incident had aggravated the situation. It was explained at the em- bassy that the ambassador was not ex- pressing his own opinion on these mes- sages, but merely keeping his govern- ment informed as to the state of public opinion in the United States.

Counter Proposals Likely.

Berlin press dispatches saying that Ambassador Gerard had been in daily conference with German foreign office officials, and therefore had sent in ad- vance the main points to be collected in the German reply, were shown to Secretary Bryan. He said that while the ambassador had sent his own con- jectures, nothing that could be called an outline had been received, and that he was not aware that any official in- formation had been given as to the contents of the reply.

The general trend of comment in of- ficial and diplomatic quarters was that for the preliminary note from Germany proposed an agreement on the various cases mentioned in the American note, there would follow immediately a counter proposal from President Wil- son for a suspension of submarine war- fare which might endanger American lives or vessels while the diplomatic discussion was in progress.

LIVES OF CONDEMNED MEXICANS ARE SAVED

Florence, Ariz., May 29.—After every legal source had failed, the mercy plea of William J. Bryan, secretary of state, which had been rejected by the state legislature, proved potent yesterday to save the lives of the five Mexicans who were to have been hanged at the peni- tentiary here. At the last moment the state board of pardons and paroles, taking cognizance of Mr. Bryan's re- quest for delay, ordered reprieves of nine weeks for all of the condemned men and recommended that they be ex- ecuted separately and not together, as was intended. Whether the execution is carried out depends, however, on the success attending future moves in Gov. Geo. P Hunt's five-year struggle to abolish the death penalty in Arizona.

R. S. Hardie Baugh, a rose enthusi- ast, of Ontario, Cal., is displaying a bloom which measures six inches in diameter and, nearly 18 inches in cir- cumference. The rose is perfectly formed and fragrant. A fertilizer of rotted potato parings was responsible for the mammoth blossom.

SAYS AMERICAN THREATS CANNOT BLUFF GERMANY

London, May 29.—The Daily Tele- graph's Rotterdam correspondent says that Count Von Reventlow's organ, the Deutsches Zeitung, under the caption, "The American Call to German Fear," publishes an amazing article which breathes defiance to the United States in every line and declares that Ger- many's submarine warfare will be continued regardless of any considera- tion. The article declares that the Ger- many is not frightened by any threat of war on the part of the United States, according to the correspondent, and adds:

"The complete cutting off of nego- tiations would leave us cold. America would only be able to damage us by confiscating the trading ships left in her harbors and much other German property. Further dangerous deeds of war by America against Germany are not to be feared, because they are not possible. Also we do not forget cer- tain interior differences in America. That is another side of business."

The article is reported to argue that it is impossible to give German sub- marine commanders any instructions to discriminate in their actions without nullifying the whole value of the sub- marine warfare against England and to declare that Germany will never do that. Germany, it is said, cannot be frightened by big words.

"The only German answer to the American note worthy of our empire," the article is declared to conclude, "is that the submarine war against British trade must be carried out by all means and without consideration. America may then do or not do what she likes. We neither care for her bluff nor for her deeds."

Elbert Bede Says:

There must be colored ghosts—for they are shades.

The fellow that breezes around isn't the one that blows the most money.

A large part of our troubles have started in ways that we at first thought were fun.

After a man gets married he only uses one side of the book to keep his cash account.

The person who is in love with himself will have no one to interrupt him in prosecuting his suit.

When a woman dresses she goes too much on the presumption that men see only the things meant for them to see.

Some folks look upon themselves as liberal citizens because they never have enough on hand to pay their debts

Even from the foolish person you can learn something—if nothing more than how to act and what not to do.

A news item from the war zone says: "Ossowetz again under fire." We thought everything was dry over there

Many remarks that pass for wit at the dinner tables, or immediately afterwards, would fall as flat as a parcel at any other time

Whether you are a shoplifter or a kleptomaniac depends upon whether you have relatives able and willing to pay for what you steal

When you see a woman taking in washing to support a family and a shiftless husband, we think there must be a mistake in that old saying about man being the noblest work of God.

Don't laugh too much about folks who chatter about the weather and kindred subjects, for when they are talking about that they aren't talking of something else that they might injure

When a man gets careless about leaving his face rough and stubby, wifey may conclude that he has ceased to care for her kisses—but she has the satisfaction of knowing that he isn't prepared to get any outside

It may be funny but it's perfectly natural for one automobile owner not to want some other automobile owner tell him how to run his car No auto owner with any professional pride what ever will admit that some other auto owner knows any more about a car than he does.

AND ALONG CAME RUTH

"Oh, I wish I knew a way to reheat the cabbage and Brussels sprouts we had for dinner yesterday," muttered Ruth's aunt, as she pottered about the kitchen, "for I haven't time to cook much today, and they are not good cold."

"I heard you," said Ruth, poking her head between the kitchen screen and the door frame, and I can tell you how to do it. First, you plunge the vegetables into a saucepan of slightly salted boiling water, and keep it boiling for two or three minutes. Then you strain and serve them. And you will find that they look and taste as well as if they were freshly cooked. I'll do it for you, while you are doing something else if you like."

"Ruth, I don't know what we should do if you didn't make us a daily visit," declared her aunt, "for you get us out of more trouble than a policeman.

THE WEEK IN HISTORY

Wednesday, 2—President Cleveland married to Francis Folsom, 1886.

Thursday, 3—No Popery riots in England, 1780.

Saturday, 5—Gunboat fight before Memphis. Memphis surrenders next day, 1862.

Sunday, 6—Battle Burlington heights, 1813.

Statisticians have figured the aggregate wealth of the United States, and if it should be divided according to the Socialistic doctrine every person in Thompson would have exactly $1,965. If our own state of Iowa should divide its wealth among Iowans only the sum to each individual would be $3,345. According to this we would be in favor of splitting up Iowa's lucre and let the rest of the country go to thunder. If we had our share in our fist now we could buy several carloads of Fords. We could build a pretty fair sized bungalow and go to the Panama exposition while the carpenters were putting the bung in it. We could rent a villa by the sea for three months and still have enough money left to pay our poll tax to 1920. Really, there are so many uses to which we could put that little $3,345 that the more we think about it the more socialistic we become.—Thompson Courier.

Sibley Tribune: Phil Schaller of Sac, deceased, a well known German veteran of the civil war, used to propose a toast that would sound pretty well now. It was: "Von God, von flag, swei lager!"

TOWN BOOSTS

Don't be the man who put the sit in city.

Building good houses builds a good town.

Save a little money and save a lot of worry.

Good roads lead not only to town, but to money.

Be a live one and the town will never be a dead one

A nice front porch has prevented many an old maid

Why should the town muzzle dogs and not knockers?

When someone plans to help the town, plan to help the plan

The best plans a man can have to the future are house plans

A good way to make the world better is to begin with the home town.

A town is like a perambulator; it isn't much good unless it is pushed.

Don't spend all your time telling what you could do if you had some time

Be like a ball player. The thing he is always working for is home

Be one of the leaders of the town, if you can, but anyway, keep up.

If you think a cow can't laugh for joy, let somebody sell you a good silo.

Don't be a grouch Everybody in town wishes you well, even the doctor.

Let's not be trying to stop something all the time Let's start something

A good town will do more to keep the boys at home than good advice.

A town is like a girl It's wonderful what a little fixing up will do for her

Opportunity knocks once at every man's door, better be at home when the lady calls.

The world owes every man a living, but the street corner is a poor collection agency

Don't look for soft snaps; the hard snaps are the ones that have the ginger in them.

Don't spend so much time talking war that you haven't time left to talk business

If you would like to have somebody working for you, put a little money in the bank

It improves the soup to throw a little pepper in it. Same way with a town.

If you spend all that you earn, some other fellow is banking your money.

Many a may goes away to seek his fortune when Fortune is seeking for him at home.

To Every Customer in Klemme and Surrounding Territory, Greeting:

Attend Our Band Concerts

We are looking foreward to see you spend many pleasant evenings in Klemme this summer attending our weekly band concerts, which will be held every Thursday evening in our fine band stand at the park and good seats have been purchased so you will be able to sit down and enjoy the music. We feel sure that you will enjoy this weekly outing and make your plans to be with us once a week at least. Our band is now one of the best in this section of the state, and will give a variety of music that will be enjoyed by everyone.

We want to see You at our Big Celebration

Klemme will make the Eagle Scream, Saturday, July 3rd and plans are under way to make it the biggest and best celebration ever held in Klemme and you know what that means. The various committees are hard at work and are making preparations to entertain a monstrous crowd. Klemme wants to entertain you in honor of our Independence and you will surely enjoy the entertainment that we will give you. Keep your eyes pealed and your ears open and we know then that you will not think of celebrating elsewhere.

FARM TOUR, SATURDAY, JUNE 26th

Of course a great many of you are figuring on taking in the big farm tour, but if you are among those who did not give it much thought---remember that you will be more than welcome and will enjoy the trip much. The tour will start from Klemme at 8:30 a. m.

We will Appreciate Your Trade

With the opening of the most delightful season of the entire year, we the business men of Klemme wish to extend not only an invitation for your business throughout the spring and summer, but to point out to you the folly of trading elsewhere.

That you have a right to spend your money where you please, no one denies, but the practice of spending it out of Klemme works an injustice to you in the end just as surely as it injures us at the time you take or send it away. Our town is the financial center of the community in which you live and from which your living must come. The more money we can keep at home the better will the financial conditions be here. If they are good, you, Mr. Workingman, will have employment at good wages. If they are bad, you will spend many idle days or will be compelled to work for a less wage than could otherwise be granted. Every dollar you send away from Klemme makes it just that much less probable that local conditions will be satisfactory to you. And, anyway, there is not a single good reason why you should send one penny out of town. Every necessity of life can be bought at home at as low a price as anywhere else, quality considered, and it is worse than folly to close your eyes against quality and look at the price, only.

And you, Mr. Farmer, should consider the matter carefully before going or sending out of town to buy. If financial conditions in the community are kept in good condition, it will be easier for you to get credit; either from a retail dealer or from the banks, should you need it. If the community is drained of its money, retailers are unable to extend credit, and when their receipts fall off, the cash in banks must decrease accordingly and ready money is not easily had.

All of the above is good, sound, business judgement. If you, the public, as consumers, will give a little study of the fundamental principles of community success, you will readily see, as we do, that it is just as much to your own interest as it is to ours that you make every effort to spend your money where you make it.

We are looking forward to a good business year. Our stocks are on hand, and it will be a pleasure for us to show you and to prove to you that you cannot realize more for your money than right here at home.

No Time to Strike Back.

By David Starr Jordan

We must not forget that madness is infectious that the fury of the old world induces hysteria in the new Hence the insistent need for patience deliberation and caution in all our international affairs For us to lose our balance for an instant may be to throw away everything, after Europe's fashion If we can establish any guiding principle in these matters it ought to be this "Belligerents have no rights that neutrals are bound to respect The nations at war are lawless and in the The right-of-way belongs to the law abiding But practically we can enforce this rule This problem resolves itself to this. Let the belligerents do whatever they dare. Short of actual attack, protest against their meddling make up the case for The Hague and bear the inflictions insensate war imposes on us with as good grace as we can Never think of striking back, never talk of resentment feed the starving, bind up the wounds of the mangled, and lay up treasures in Europe and in heaven as well Speak, when we must, in terms of peace. What our grievances, if any may be let some future tribunal determine Forward Step in the U. S. Navy.

From the Christian Science Monitor

It begins to look as if those disposed some time past to find fault with the administration of the United States navy under Josephus Daniels, secretary of the department, would be compelled to acknowledge that the changes he has made and the reforms he has inaugurated in the service, have been beneficial. By forbidding the use of alcoholic beverages in the navy he aroused an antagonism that has ramified in all directions, affecting to a greater degree than is generally supposed the attitude toward him of many large interests as well as of certain sections of the press. But the present world-sweep of temperance and prohibition has amply vindicated his course in this particular In what may be described as the inner naval circles, some of his views, and mainly because they are progressive and therefore disturbing to comfortable satisfaction with things as they are, have met with opposition and sometimes with derision, yet, on the whole, his innovations have established in the end a claim on the respectful consideration of his critics.

"Must you be going?" asked Adams, coming up to them and drawing his pipe and pouch from the pocket of his blue serge coat. The visitors had made no move to depart, although, strangely enough, both were thinking of it at the very moment he put the question.

"Goodness!" murmured Mary in wonder.

The grim face of the newcomer relaxed into a smile of self-praise. He took note of the curious expression in Eric's eyes.

"No, I'm not a mind reader," he said, answering the unspoken question, but offering no reason for his deduction, which, after all, was not so wonderful when you stop to consider that the Blagden dinner hour was close at hand.

"It's our dinner time" explained Eric, arising "Say, Mr. Adams, you've got me guessing about certain things."

"What, for instance?"

"Oh, I fancy you know."

"I was getting some high class legal advice" said Adam, again answering an unspoken question "By the way, did you happen to see your cousin out along Stone Wall an hour or so ago?"

'No,' cried the Midthornes

Adam leaned back in the rustic bench and blew smoke into the air I just wondered that's all," he observed

"Was he out there?" demanded Eric.

"He asked me to meet him out there at four-thirty Guess he forgot about it said the other, more complacently than you would expect of a man who had taken a long walk to no purpose.

As a matter of fact, he knew that Chetwynd had gone to the rocks to keep the appointment, but had slipped away on discovering that his cousins were there before him Whatever his business with Adam Carr may have been, he did not choose to have them as possible witnesses to the transaction.

'What did he want to see you for" asked Eric eagerly

He didn't say," replied Adam Carr soberly

"What is the mystery?" begged Eric

"There's no mystery about it," said the other truthfully. It had ceased to be a mystery so far as he was concerned "You'd better skip along now, or your aunt will jack you up for being late to dinner" There was finality in the remark and Eric knew him too well to pursue the subject A few minutes later he and Mary took their departure old Jabez accompanying them to the gate

"Adam's a mighty curious feller, the old man explained apologetically.

They glanced over their shoulders at the motionless man on the bench He had stopped smoking and was resting his elbows on his knees, staring intently at the ground apparently oblivious to all that was going on around him

At the dinner table that evening, Chetwynd was unusually sullen and preoccupied He chafted at delays and in two or three instances spoke sharply to the waitress when she seemed to be longer than necessary in transit from pantry to dining room For a wonder, his father did not rebuke him for this display or irritation, but was painfully silent himself Eric, covertly watching his cousin was struck by the worn peevish look in his face and the hard line between his brows. He did not fail to observe that Chetwynd deliberately avoided looking at him

From time to time he shot a singularly penetrating glance at Mary whose gaze seldom left the plate before her Eric felt his blood boil There was a menace in every glance that Chetwynd bestowed upon the girl

Immediately after the meal came to an end, young Bladgden took up his hat and with a curt word or two to his mother, left the house. Eric knew whither he was bound

He heard his cousin come in at 9 o'clock or a little after, and go quietly to his room, without stopping in the library where his parents were reading Later on, Mrs Blagden passed down the hall and tapped on her son's door

'Have you another headache tonight dear?" he heard her ask, after she had tried the knob of the locked door. He could not catch Chetwynd's reply, but her next words were significant Well, don't snap my head off, please."

Eric lay awake for hours, speculating on what had transpired at Judge Bright's house The early return home of Chetwynd was satisfying in one sense, but disturbing in another. The visit plainly was not of a social nature nor friendly, it might be reasonable to surmise. He could not have been at Judge Bright's for more than half an hour, a circumstance which made it plain that there was no pleasure in the visit.

The conviction grew in Eric's feverish mind that the judge's summons to Chetwynd was the result of the interview with Adam Carr

In that case, there was something sinister behind it.

Eric was disturbed by the dread that, whatever it was, he and perhaps Mary, were to be dragged into it. Enough had been said to Joan to convince him that they were under discussion. Could it be possible that Judge Bright had called on Adam Carr to investigate the stories told by his aunt and Mrs. Presbrey? Was the half-hour's interview with Chetwynd a part of the effort to get to the bottom of these ugly stories? The occurrence of the last few days had thrown young Midthorne into a wretched state of uncertainty and doubt. As he lay there that night, wide-eyed and troubled, he could see naught but foreboding shadows ahead of him It was impossible to go to sleep with that sinister chill creeping through his veins, a chill that turned him sick with the nausea of dread. Near dawn he dropped off into a fitful doze, but was aroused at 7 by his uncle, who never missed calling the entire household at that hour, breakfast being set for 7.30.

After breakfast, in a state of wretched uncertainty, he made his way but not without some diffidence, to Joan's home, driven by the desire to find out how he stood with her since the mysterious visit of his cousin. There was something disquieting in the fact that Chetwynd did not appear for breakfast, pleading a headache Mrs. Blagden had her coffee and toast in her son's room, which left the two Midthornes to breakfast alone with their uncle. Not more than a dozen words were uttered in conversation during the meal. Mr. Blagden, a shade grayer in the face than yesterday, it seemed to Eric, read the morning paper while he drank his coffee in sharp, jerky little sips. Mary, in a covert glance, made the discovery toward the end of the meal that her uncle was staring blankly at the print before him, without reading a word. She watched him for a minute or more; his eyes did not move It was a circumstance worth mentioning to Eric, but she quite forgot it when her brother announced that he was going over to Joan's.

Moreover, just as they were leaving the table, Martha came in to say that Judge Bright was waiting to speak with Mr Blagden at the telephone. Their uncle closed the library door when he went into that room to answer the call.

Eric's reception by his shy, unpracticed sweetheart swept away all doubts and misgivings, and restored him in large measure to the state of bliss he had developed the day before. His relief was so great that he quite forgot his fears.

Still, when he left her after an hour in the garden, he was to experience a decidedly unpleasant shock on finding Judge Bright and Adam Carr seated together on the front porch. As he passed them, they greeted him cheerily, but he was conscious of the fact that their gaze followed him as long as he was in sight So vivid was this impression that in order to escape the scrutiny he turned into a side street when but a block from the house

He carried a message from Joan to Mary. His sister was to go out for a long drive with Joan in the Brights' phaeton that afternoon, when the two of them were to talk over the Sinnox school project There was additional consolation for him in Joan's news that her father had called up Mr. Blagden during the morning to inquire when he could see him on a matter of importance. She was sure that it had to do with the school project, for he had promised her at breakfast that he would take it up with Mr Blagden at the first opportunity Her father was to call at the bank on the following day, Mr. Blagden setting the time So she was sure, it would be all right.

She did not see Chetwynd when he called the evening before

That afternoon Eric more or less at peace with himself, if not with the world, took his books and sought the quiet solitude of Bud's Rock, a shady obscure spot overlooking Stone Wall and not far removed from the unfrequented outer road which skirted the coast. The main traveled highway was farther inland by a mile or more But few travelers used the narrow, abandoned road along the cliff

Bud's Rock itself was in the heart of a miniature wilderness It lay black and dank moss covered and dripping at the edge of the woodland almost completely hidden by the thick undergrush and trees that surrounded it Here it was always cool and shady At the base of the huge boulder there was a tiny plaza of vividly green grass smooth and soft and sweet with the smell of earth Through the trees ahead, one had a clear view of the sea beyond the rugged broken line of the cliffs, on which no vegetation appeared A quarter of a mile away the surf drummed noisily against the obstinate wall of rock, while down upon the bleak intervening space the sun sent his rays with such scorching intensity that if one crossed the rocks at midday it was at the risk of blistering the soles of his shoe clad feet

Years before Eric had come upon this tiny plaza, and it always had been a favorite lilling place for him He went there to read or to dream or to think Times there were when his thoughts and dreams were unpleasant ones full of bitterness and resentment toward those who badgered him but more often than not he found solace at the foot of Bud's Rock No one disturbed him in this lonely nook It was quite as if it were a domain of his own

A little to the left of the rock, a deep, thin ravine slashed through the rocks and descended by tortuous wriggles to the sea itself He had gone down there at low tide and it was like going into a tomb At high tide it would have been a tomb for anyone who ventured

On this particular afternoon Eric was strangely oppressed by the dreary waste of rock and water before him He held faithfully to the work in hand but there were moments when he found himself contemplating the unattractive vista with something like dread in his heart Never before had he felt this way in looking at the familiar, though unlovely tract Somehow he was conscious of a strange dread in being alone there. More than once he had wished that Mary were there to keep him company. Mary, or blissful alternative another whom he knew

He had the sensation, now and again that the sea was making ready to leap over the lofty wall, to rush at him while he sat there helpless with his back against the face of Bud's Rock. Then there was the grewsome feeling that up through the moaning ravine, a slimy monster from the deep was crawling slowly but surely, bent on crunching him in its mighty jaws More than once, hearing a rustling sound near by, he had cast a quick glance in the direction of the ominous slit in the earth—never ominous till now, however

He looked at his watch at 5 o'clock With a start of relief, he realized it was time to go home. Mary would have returned from her drive with Joan. She would have much to tell him. He gathered up his notes and books, and rose to stretch himself

As he came to his feet, he saw Chetwynd Blagden standing on the rickety bridge that spanned the ravine, 50 yards or more below Bud's Rock. His back was toward Eric, and he appeared to be watching the road in the direction of Todville. His tall, herculean frame leaned against the rail of the bridge, and his arms were folded across his chest.

In considerable wonder and no little dismay, Eric watched him in silence not with the intent of spying upon him, but because he could not make up his mind to venture forth and accost him in this lonely spot. The presentiment of evil was still uppermost in his mind This, then, was the physical proof of impending danger, for something told him that Chetwynd personified the ominous thing that the ravine was to produce, after all.

How long had his cousin been standing on the bridge? Where had he come from, and for whom was he in waiting? Adam Carr! He was to meet Adam there, having failed him the day before. That was it. But, that being the case, why had he failed to see Eric, as on the previous occasion? His eyes had been sharp enough yesterday, why were they dull today??

Eric looked about for a way to leave his nook without disturbing the watcher below. Unfortunately, there was no means of reaching the road except by way of the path leading almost to the bridge itself. He realized that, in all fairness and honor, he could not stay where he was, a witness to the palpably clandestine meeting of the two men. That was an act he could not forgive in anyone else, so why should he be guilty of it himself? There was but one thing left for him to do walk boldly down the path, speak to his cousin, and continue his peaceable way homeward, before any serious friction could result.

He knew that Chetwynd was ready and eager for the chance to quarrel. There had been plenty of evidence of the fact during the past few days. His cousin had glowered at him with positive hatred in his eyes ever since his return from New York. There was a score to be settled, and Eric knew it. It would not be settled with boxing gloves, but with bare fists. He was not afraid of Chetwynd, but he was especially reluctant to invite a physical clash at this time. His own blood was hot with long pent-up rage, and he knew that the slightest spark would set it aflame. The result might prove disastrous in more ways than one. This was the time for reason for temporizing, although every sinew in his body ached to be at this cheat and bully

Just as he was on the point of starting down the slope an action on Chetwynd's part stayed him for a moment, curiosity being responsible for his momentary hesitation

Young Blagden drew a letter from his pocket, read it with unmistakable eagerness, and then, to the watcher's amazement, pressed the tinted sheet to his lips. There was apparent reluctance in the young bully's next act He looked at the missive for some moments, as if in doubt, and then, with a shake of his head, drew a match from his pocket struck it on the rail, and set fire to the corner of the tender epistle which he held in his fingers until it was quite consumed, before dropping it into the ravine

In the next instant, as if impelled by some telepathic force, he whirled and looked up the slope to where Eric was standing For a full minute, the two young men remained motionless, staring at each other Then Eric began slowly to descend

As he emerged from the shrubbery at the base of the rock, he saw Chetwynd advancing upon him, his face white with passion his eyes stark with alarm and apprehension.

You infernal sneak' he hissed through his rigid lips "So you've been spying on me have you? I'll fix you for that

As he spoke he drew back his arm and the next instant a jagged rock came whizzing through the air, aimed with deadly interest at Eric's head. A dozen paces separated the young men. Eric had expected some such treachery as this and was more or less prepared for it He leaped nimbly to one side, and the missile grazed his ear In the same moment he stooped and swept up a stone at his feet Chetwynd slower than his adversary was reaching for another

Drop it yelled Eric 'Drop it, I say I'll let you have this right in the face if you pick up that rock You know I can do it, so look out'"

Chetwynd had cause to remember Eric's ability to throw straight He dropped the stone and covered his face with his arm crouching back against the rock

Here he shouted hoarsely "Look at what you're doing' Don't you throw that rock at me, you murdering cur Do you want to kill me?"

Eric's pale face relaxed into a sardonic grin

You're a fine one to talk, you are" he cried his voice trembling with excitement What did you do but try to kill me just now? I've a notion to let you have this just to—"

Don't yelled Chetwynd, in fresh alarm

Well you stay where you are, then, you infernal brute I don't want to have any trouble with you I'm going home I wasn't spying on you, and you know it Don't move from where you are Chetty or, by thunder, I'll knock your head off'

You can just bet you're not looking for trouble with me If you didn't have that rock in you hand I come over there and kick you clear over Bud's Rock. You are a sneak and a spy and a lying one at that And I'll just get you for it some day

He was trembling with rage If Eric had not held the upper hand over him at that moment murder would have been done on the lonely spot

I don't want to talk to you, Chet" said Midthorne resolutely "You can't drag me into a fight much as I'd like to have it out with you I've got good reason for beating your brains out, and you know it You let me alone and I'll do the same by you If there is no other way I'll take Mary and go away from Corinth I won't stand anything more from you We'll let things go as they are if you are willing but you've just got to let me alone I've not told Uncle Horace what you did to her but I did tell him you stole my drawing the Liar cried Chetwynd 'I made that drawing You dirty sneak you tried to work that guff off on father But I proved to him yesterday that it was my drawing that took the prize. He knows it now He believes you had a purpose in lying-

You proved it" cried Eric, aghast "How could you prove it?"

"I proved it by mother, if that will satisfy you She saw me working on it for days" snarled the other, showing his teeth

Eric glared 'Did Aunt Rena say that?" he gasped

Just "Feeding" Roosevelt.

Richard Henry Little in the Chicago Herald

That I may not seem over enthusiastic about the colonel as a witness, I want to point in evidence, the testimony of a perfectly neutral unprejudiced person, Miss Trixie Friganza, who has never before been in a court room in her life except when getting divorced.

Miss Friganza was appearing at a vaudeville theater in Syracuse last week and was the guest of friends at one session of the court during the time the colonel was on the stand It was carefully explained to Miss Friganza that Mr Ivins was cross-examining the colonel and that the object of a cross-examination was to wring admission from the witness of comfort to the opposing side.

Miss Friganza watched the proceedings with breathless interest for two hours without making a sound, but when Counsel Ivins said to the colonel, "You and those you refer to as bossed were in close enough harmony at the time that they thought they could write to you and ask you to not force the passage of the franchise tax bill. That's true, isn't it?"

"Yes," declared the colonel, "but I insisted upon its passage, and the same franchise tax bill that has ever since been the law"

"Good heavens," whispered Miss Friganza, unable any longer to contain herself, "that guy ain't cross-examining Teddy, he's feedin' him."

The Hills.

Shall I leave the hills, the high, far hills that shadow the morning plain?
Shall I leave the desert sand and sage that gleams in the winter rain?
Shall I leave the ragged bridle trail to ride in the city street—
To snatch a song from the printed word,
Or sit at a master's feet?

To barter the sting of the mountain wind for the choking fog and smoke?
To barter the song of the mountain stream for the babble of city folk?
To lose my grip on the God I know and fumble among the creeds?
Oh, rocks and pines of the high, far hills,
Hear the lisp of the valley reeds!

See Battle of Whales.

Capt. J P. Taylor, Doctor Bjorkman and H. W. Cousins are authority for the truthfulness of a whale story the like of which has never before been listened to n Long Branch. While fishing a mile from shore their attention was attracted to a titanic commotion in the water a mile seaward. With marine glasses the fishermen say they witnessed for more than hour a battle to the death between two California gray whales and a thrasher whale. The thrasher was victorious, they say.—Long Beach Dispatch to Los Angeles Times.

Chocolate Soldiers.

The soldier's weakness for sweetmeats, to which Mr Bernard Shaw called attention when he wrote "The Chocolate Soldier," has been abundantly confirmed during the present war. The quantity of sweets consumed by our army in France has been prodigious, while from Cairo comes the news that the Australians have absolutely eaten the place out of chocolate. On the troopships which brought them, too, it was the same. Thus Captain Bean, the official correspondent with the force, writes: "Our canteen had five times the demand for sweets and soft drinks that was expected and one-fifth the demand for beer."—Westminster Gazette.

We and the British Have Sweet Tooths

Britons have the sweetest tooth Americans come next, if the statistics for consumption of sugar mean anything. An Englishman eats annually 92.4 pounds an American consumes 79.2 pounds In Denmark the average consumption is 72.5 pounds per capita, in Switzerland 70 pounds, in Germany, Holland, Sweden and Norway it is from 30 to 40 pounds; in France 35 pounds, in Belgium, 33; in Austria, 24.5; in Russia, 19.8; in Portugal, 15.4; in Servia and Turkey, 11 In Italy, Greece, Roumania and Servia, from 7 to 8 pounds.

The principal reason for these variations is found in the relative cheapness or lowness of the customs duties on sugar and on the things with which it is commonly associated—coffee, tea, etc.

Light More Beneficial Than Heat

When rays of light fall upon the skin of our bodies, which is 98 per cent, the greater part of them are arrested, some by one layer of cells, some by another and still others not stopped until they have penetrated the subcutaneous tissues. The heat of the light rays produces a local heat, which has a higher penetrating power than convection heat and is generated by a hot water bag or a hot bath, for instance.

E. C. Titus in an address before the Illuminating Engineering society says that such heat penetrated two inches or more, while convection heat is generated principally on the surface.

This is why electric light baths and sun baths are so stimulating to the organs of elimination especially the skin and kidneys, and so beneficial in many diseases

LUCK IS BIG FACTOR IN LIFE OF SOLDIER

Officer Describes Troops' Belief In Mysterious Influence

Paris (Correspondence of the Associated Press) —"Many of us, soldiers and officers," says an officer who has been at the front since the beginning of the war, "have faith in a mysterious power analagous to antique fatality which disposes of our sort. Those that it favors we say are in luck. The greatest imprudence does not affect their invulnerability; others seem fated to sacrifice. If the escape from a pitched battle, a spent ball or a fragment of shell will get them the following day, miles behind the trenches, while they are in apparent security.

"This instinctive belief brings a certain tranquility not only to those who think they are in luck but to those also who are in doubt whether they possess a lucky star. No one escapes his fate they say. If one is suited for death, what's the good of taking precautions, the bullet that's intended for me will find me.

"Certain cases seem to bear out this superstition. One of them was related by an officer of the general staff, [illegible] cool, almost as phlegmatic as an Englishman behind his eye glasses and so careful to exaggerate nothing that he seems to contemplate the most tragic events with the wrong end of his spyglass.

"'I ought to have been killed 100 times,' he told me. 'At the moment of the general mobilization I was in the staff of the general [illegible] whom I was personally attached. For years of very close collaboration he treated me somewhat as his personal aide de camp. I went everywhere with him. A few days after the declaration of war he was informed of the death of his wife whom I knew he adored. He concealed his pain, but I understood at once that the blow had mortally crushed him and that he had made up his mind to get himself killed. He took me with him where the bullets were thickest. The division was on the eastern frontier and alongside the storms of shrapnel that burst above our heads the German bombardment of today are small incidents. Every other day we went to the first line and while the men lying round us fired at the Germans, we remained erect to encourage them.

"'One afternoon we had passed our four hours under the enemy's shells. From time to time I said to myself: "In 10 minutes or even in five minutes perhaps it'll be my turn." But we were neither of us touched. Another day, after a very violent engagement in which we had been obliged to give way, one of our batteries remained stuck between the two armies. I proposed to reconnoiter the position to see if it was possible to bring it back. I intended to go alone and to come back quickly. But the general declared he would go along. It was vain to remark that it was not his place. He replied with some feeling that he had no orders to receive from me.

"'Everything went well and we reached the position of the battery without any trouble. There remained only two men, a major and a private soldier, guarding the battery, firing with all their energy to make the enemy believe that the position was still occupied in force. We succeeded in getting the pieces into shape and dragging them out of danger, but instead of following the direct route toward our lines, the general proposed that we make a little detour in order, he said, 'that the men may not have the impression that we are retreating.' We followed a route on the side of a hill which during several hundred yards passed over a space of absolutely uncovered ground between the two firing lines. If I had been alone I should have covered that space at double quick. The general, though declared that this precipitation would have produced a bad effect upon the troops, as it was at a walk that we crossed this exposed ground offering ourselves as targets to the German infantry.

"'The balls whistled around us incessantly—so thickly that the leaves on the trees along the route fell as in an autumn storm. Neither of us received a scratch, neither were our horses touched. I asked the general if he did not think it marvelous that we should have passed unscathed through this storm of bullets. He shook his head sadly and said: 'The bullets don't seem to want me.' As for me, since that trial there is nothing that surprises me. I sincerely believe I'm 'in luck' and am quite sure that the Germans will never get me.'"

Big Business and Government.

From the New York World

The injunction suit of the Riggs National bank in Washington was the signal for every advocate of big business to assail Secretary McAdoo, Comptroller Williams and Treasurer Burke. Political opponents of the administration joined by instinct in the ululation. The answer of the government of the United States, through affidavits by these officials and others, will give big business and its organs something to think about.

These affidavits describe the Riggs bank, through its officials, as persistently breaking the banking law, as unlawfully conducting a brokerage and land loan business, as making illegal loans to its own officials and to clerks on stock collateral, as swearing false oaths; as gaining government favors from those about to enter its employment.

They paint a blacker picture. They charge that illegal and improper loans were made to Senators Bailey, Quay and Proctor; to the late Representative J. D. Richardson, who could favor Standard Oil traction interests to Frank A. Vanderlip, now president of the Standard Oil bank in New York, whose services to it in the purchase of the old custom house are well remembered; to former treasury officials, among them Comptroller Ridgely, and various assistant secretaries; even to Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw.

If these sworn statements stand test we shall have disclosed a veritable alliance between big business and the government of the United States under administrations more lenient with lawbreakers than the present. We shall see laid bare the secret course of pipe lines that led from the treasury straight to the lair of Standard Oil.

The Riggs bank has had its say. The government has made its reply. It is proper to await the final word of the courts. Yet this is a fit time to emphasize the announced purpose of the government to put its seal of approval only upon banking institutions that serve the legitimate commercial needs of the country.

The Violet.

Down in a green and shady bed
A modest violet grew;
Its stalk was bent, it hung its head,
As if to hide from view.
And yet it was a lovely flower,
Its colors bright and fair,
It might have graced a rosy bower,
Instead of hiding there.
Yet there it was content to bloom,
In modest tints arrayed;
And there is spreads its sweet perfume
Within the silent shade.
Then let me to the valley go,
This pretty flower to see,
That I may also learn to grow
In sweet humility.

DOES MARRIAGE AFFECT A WOMAN'S CAREER.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Of all the griefs that harass the distressed
Surely the most bitter is a scornful jest.
Fate never wounds more deeply the generous heart
Than when a blockhead's insult points the dart."

The girl who has the "career bee" in her bonnet should think long and earnestly as to whether she ought to marry a certain dear fellow who is very much in love with her, or fling sentiment and all thoughts of marriage to the winds and follow, alone, the bent of her ambitions.

There are those who disapprove of pretty young actresses tying themselves down in wedlock to a husband whom they must live the greater part of their lives away from if they follow their profession. At 25 they are at the zenith of their youthful beauty. They are far happier single with the whole world sighing at their feet—that is the opinion of the great public.

A decade of years, aye and another, flit by before the pretty favorite of the footlights wakens to the truth—her youth and beauty have flitted from her like a song that has been sung. Those who declared the loudest and most urged that she should remain single are the first to thrust her into the background smiling upon a younger, fairer beauty whose comeliness is all her own, and not the result of clever make-up to hide the ravages of time.

It is then that the actress grieves with all her heart over her folly of listening to the advice of those who had no interest in her future to remain single and make a brilliant career for herself. A son or young daughter, from whose strong arm she could lean, would have been worth more to her than the whole wide world.

The business girl faces the same problem. Should she marry or cling tenaciously to the paying position which she has gained by years of duty and unceasing toil. Friends tell her she is earning more with which she can purchase comforts, nay luxuries, than any man she might marry could, or would, buy for her. She has seen those young women about her whose prospects for advancement and the accumulation of money were equal to her own, wed and struggle hard against poverty to keep the wolf of hunger from their doors when sickness and misfortune assailed them, children whom it was hard to provide for were continually being added to the family circle. The single woman looked on pityingly.

If after years the wife who had struggled in poverty had all cares lifted from her shoulders and her heart by her strong willing sons and daughters. It was her turn then to pity the single woman who had bartered happiness for a business career losing in old age because of her infirmities, and being forced to pay strangers liberally for every hand's turn they did for her little by little the full amount of her savings. She knew too late marriage would have been best.

The great singer, the artist, teacher, stenographer, she who is engaged in any money making career should realize that her years for making and saving money are all too few. What then? A lonely and disappointed life if she must carry her burden the rest of the way alone.

Taken all in all marriage is the best career a woman can engage in for happiness at a time she needs it most. One cannot engage in business pursuits and attend to rearing a family at home at one and the same time, but home life is best. The love which shelters a woman therein is worth all the wealth the world holds or the worldwide plaudits of a fickle public.

The Clumsy Jury System.

From the Minneapolis Journal

The jury system is one of the oldest features of Anglo-Saxon justice. Along with the common law it has come down to us from ancient times. But is it not time seriously to consider whether it has not outlived its usefulness, and whether it should not be swept away in part or entirely?

Any citizen who is called to serve as a petit juror in Hennepin county must be profoundly impressed with the clumsiness, the inefficiency and the sheer wastefulness of the system.

In the first place there is the injustice of the method of summoning citizens for jury duty. This is so devised that, while one man is called to serve with great frequency his equally competent neighbor is never called at all. The interference with one's business might be borne, if the burden was distributed with something like equality.

But if juries could be depended upon to do exact and prompt service, the burden of participating in court procedure could be borne. In the nature of things, however, the ordinary jury is a very imperfect instrument for the dispensing of justice. It is made up of men who know little or nothing of law, who are puzzled by court proceedings with their technicalities, their objections and motions, their recondite rules of evidence.

The jury in theory is to be judge of the facts and to get its law from the court. But in judging of the facts it should be guided by law. After the tedium of a long and boresome trial, many jurors are more concerned with reaching a compromise verdict than with doing justice. Other jurors are planning how to prolong the discussion so as to eat sundry meals at public expense. Others are merely obstinate, and, having taken a warped view of the case, stick to it in defiance of the opinion of the majority.

In short the result of a jury trial is about the most uncertain thing on earth. The jury may disagree and make another trial possible. It may reach an utterly unwarranted conclusion. It may find a compromise verdict which does justice to neither party. It may even be corruptly influenced or its action swayed by prejudice or passion.

Judges, lawyers and many laymen pretty well agree that justice should be dispensed by courts and not by juries. Unimportant and trivial disputes should be submitted to single judges for decision. Weightier matters should be passed on by three or five judges sitting together.

It is believed, for example, that the eight judges sitting in the Hennepin district could hear all cases without juries and dispose of them promptly at half the expense of the present clumsy system. And justice would be not only prompter and less costly but surer than now.

It will take courage to cast over an institution so imbedded in our life and our traditions as the jury system, but it should be done.

WHERE ART CEASES.

Sheldon Cheney.

All art is a matter of nature or life acted upon by man; a part taken out of its accidental surroundings and given artistic form. At either side of the field of true art is a waste place, where art ceases to have beauty. And the waste on the one side is reached when the artist becomes so enamored of life that he forgets to interpret, to give artistic form, and brings forth a photographic image, while the waste on the other side is reached when the artist perfects his form but forgets to put life into it.

EXCELLENT FARMING CONDITIONS IN CANADA

Letters from Settlers Indicating Growing Prosperity.

The present year will add another proof that farming in Western Canada, when carried on with the same energy and system devoted to other lines of business, will bring about results fully as satisfactory.

Mixed farming as a tocsin has been sounded for a number of years, and today it is being adopted pretty generally throughout the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. There are those who have made no greater success of it than they did when they pursued grain growing alone, but where one has failed to accomplish what he had hoped to do, dozens have scored success.

From Sedgewick, Alberta, we hear of E. L. Deputy, for past twelve years manager for Frye & Sons packers, Seattle, who during 1914 were the largest buyers of hogs on Alberta markets. He is taking up active work on his 1,200-acre farm near Sedgewick. Although he was one of the highest paid salaried officials on the Pacific Coast, his frequent visits and personal knowledge of farming conditions in Western Canada convinced him there are greater opportunities in farming Alberta land than in commercial life with greater assurance of ultimate independence and prospects of home-making under the most desirable conditions.

Thomas McKay, a farmer near Hardisty, Alberta, has this to say about the country:

I came to Hardisty from Osage City, Kansas, nine years ago and took up a homestead here. This is a good district for the farmer who wishes to raise grain exclusively, and as a mixed farming country it cannot be beaten anywhere in the world to my knowledge.

I had ten cattle, which ranged outside all last winter, and this spring they were fat enough for the market, this without being fed but one night during the entire winter, they were fine fat cattle and looked beautiful. I raised some winter wheat here which weighed sixty-seven and a half pounds to the bushel, government weight, and which I shipped to Calgary. The miller who bought it said that it was the best wheat that had ever gone into Calgary. Wheat in this district yields as high as forty bushels to the acre, oats average sixty bushels. Alfalfa does well here.

All in all I think the farmers are very well satisfied with the country, and the farmer who farms his land intelligently is sure to make a success. The climate here is the best I have ever lived in the summers are delightful and the winters are mild. There has never been a blizzard during the nine years I have lived here nor any cyclones or wind storms."

A settler in the neighborhood of Gleichen, Alberta, spent $2,000 in improving his quarter section, has 125 acres ready for crop, keeps 70 head of stock, believes in mixed farming, keeps two hired men, one all year, the other in summer only. He milks 12 to 18 cows, and receives an average monthly cream cheque of $110. Last June he sold $1,200 worth of hogs and in November two more carloads, besides supplying his own requirements, and is not only making money but building up a good home amid desirable surroundings. This is an example of the possibilities open to the industrious in the Gleichen district.

It is stated in the last three months $38,000,000 of American capital has been invested in Canada, showing that United States financial men are satisfied of the solidity of Canadian institutions. Western Canada has been a heavy borrower and Western Canada's great resource is agriculture. U. S. financiers must be convinced that agriculture in Western Canada is sure and profitable or they would not be ready to invest so many millions in the country.—Advertisement.

More Words Followed.

"I'm a woman of my word," said Mrs. Prebscomb, with an air of finality.

"Indeed you are, my dear," said Mr. Prebscomb.

"When I go out I don't come home and tell an improbable yarn about where I've been."

"No, you don't, my dear," replied Mr. Prebyscomb mildly, "but that may be due to the fact that I have never had sufficient courage to ask you where you have been."

Famous Feats of Archery.

In the days when the buffalo was found in vast herds on the western plains there were Indians who, while riding at a gallop, could send an arrow through a buffalo's body. Remarkable as this archery was, it did not equal that reached by the archers of ancient times. It is of record that the MacReas of Gairlock, Scotland, were such skilled archers that they could hit a man at the distance of 500 yards. In 1794 the Turkish ambassador at London shot an arrow in a field near that capital 415 yards against the wind. The secretary of the ambassador on hearing the expressions of surprise from the English gentlemen present, said the Sultan had shot 500 yards. This was the greatest performance of modern days, but a pillar standing on a plain near Constantinople recorded shots ranging up to 800 yards. Sir Robert Ainslie, British ambassador to the Sublime Porte, recorded that in 1798 he was present when the sultan shot an arrow 972 yards.—Washington Star.

MRS. LYO... ACHES AND PA...

Have All Gone Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Terre Hill, Pa.—"Kindly permit me to give you my testimonial in favor of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I first began taking it I was suffering from female troubles for some time and had almost all kinds of aches—pains in lower part of back and in sides, and pressing down pains. I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the aches and pains are all gone and I feel like a new woman. I cannot praise your medicine too highly."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS LYON, Terre Hill, Pa.

It is true that nature and a woman's work has produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known. From the roots and herbs of the field, Lydia E. Pinkham, forty years ago, gave to womankind a remedy for their peculiar ills which has proved more efficacious than any other combination of drugs ever compounded, and today Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is recognized from coast to coast as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health—many of them openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; and in some cases that it has saved them from surgical operations.

Adversity.

A high character might be produced, I suppose by continued prosperity, but it has very seldom been the case. Glad Vacation Time.

The boy home from school for the summer vacation or the dear old farm, rested on his hoe and gazed over across the broad, hay-scented field where the game was going on. What, then, this problem of human existence with which science has wrestled futilely for ages?" And his revered parent, leaning over the fence, said he didn't know, but, all the same there would be no baseball for sonny that afternoon, and if he didn't hoe out that 'tater patch before night there'd be some wrestling done, though, that'd make science open her eyes if she should chance along by the woodshed that evening —Exchange

Sickness, brought on by worry over an alleged shortage in the office which Mr. Lewis had formerly occupied, is attributed as the cause for Lews taking his life Lewis got up this morning and had only been out of bed a short time when he secured a revolver and shot himself in the head. It is not known whether Mrs. Lewis was in the house at the time of the shooting. Two of the daughters, Ruth and Namio, were attending a school function; Mildred, the youngest daughter, was in an upstairs room asleep. Lewis was dead when the members of the family reached his bedside, and they were unable to give any assistance. Lewis returned from Montana about a week ago, where he had gone on a business trip. He retired from the office of couty treasurer last January and later went to Montana, where it was reported he intended to enter the banking business. He is survivied by his wife and three daughters. Sarah, the oldest daughter, is employed by the firm of Kimball and Hayes at Mason City. The other daughters are Ruth, Namoi and Mildred. Ruth and Namio graduated at the high school last evening.

The Kilt in History.

The Scottish kilt, as an article of dress, dates back to historic times, and was originally, so far as can be figured out, merely a plaid blanket worn about the shoulders with one end gthered about the loins in cold weather. The mountaineers of the Balkans wear the kilt, and students say that the soldiers of the Assyrian kings wore a costume very closely akin to the kilt of Scotland

In the Day of Temptation.

Some day, in the great years to come, you will be wrestling with the great temptation, or trembling under the great sorrow of your life. But the real struggle is here, now, in these quiet weeks. Now it is being decided whether, in the day of your supreme sorrow or temptation you shall miserably fail or gloriously conquer Character cannot be made except by steady, long-continued process. —Phillips Brooks

Advice to Readers.

Very ready are we to say of a book, "How good this is—that's exactly what I think!" But the right feeling is "How strange that is! I never thought of that before, and yet, I see it is true, or if I do not now, I hope I shall some day." But whether thus submissively or not, at least be sure that you go to the author to get his meaning, not to find yours. Judge it afterward if you think yourself qualified to do so; but ascertain it first. And be sure also, if the author is worth anything, that you will not get at his meaning all at once; nay at his whole meaning you will not for a long time arrive in any wise —Ruskin.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLE

Few Doses Stops Backache Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders.

It is no longer necessary to [illegible] suffer with backaching, kidney [illegible] have disagreeable bladder and kidney disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings, cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood the poisonous waste matter that clogs the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, every principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy [illegible] ings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in any case.

"BROKEN ARROW"

It's not an old play under a new title, but an entirely new and up-to-date Western comedy drama and has never been presented in your city by any other company before. "Broken Arrow" is not a play for nummies or degenerates but is presented for the amusement of ladies, gentlemen and children who enjoy legitimate comedy drama interpreted by a company of ladies and gentlemen. At Klemme in a Big Tent on Tuesday, June 15.

Considerable excitement was caused at the Albert Thronson home at Ventura Tuesday morning. About three o'clock the inmates were aroused by a little dog, and Mr Thronson rushing down stairs discovered a lamp exploding In extinguishing the blaze his hand was seriously burned, which will lay him up for some time —Clear Lake Reporter.

Good Apple Crop In Sight

A report for May from the secretary of the Iowa Horticultural Society states that from the present conditions Iowa will have 90 per cent of a full crop of apples. The codling moth has been slow, on account of cool weather, in making its appearance, but this is no sign that considerable damage will not be done by it before the season is over. Last year a great many orchards bore enough apples for the codling moth or apple worm to breed in great numbers Those who have already sprayed their apples from one to three times should not forget to spray for the second brood the latter part of July or the fore part of August. Apple prices from the present fruit crop outlook should be good this year. The college clearing house has already had demands for summer apples, but it is hard to find a market for wormy apples

ONLY FEW DAYS TO WAIT

There is a new Western comedy drama coming to your city, Klemme, in a Big Tent, Tuesday June 15. The title of the new play is "Broken Arrow' and it is credited with possessing an element which its predecessors lacked and which doubtless more than anything else has contributed to its phenominal success. It has the comedy element clearly and consistently engraved in the plot—presented by a first-class company, with concert band and orchestra and the original "Cairns Bros," famous Megaphone Quartette.

IOWA CAN RAISE CUCUMBERS

There is no Need of Importing Them From Other States

School girls are proberbiably fond of pickles. So are most of us, and yet Iowa people this year are eating cucumber pickles that grew in Michigan and Colorado, because Iowa and the warmer states southwest,, the under side of cucumber leaves are attacked by little, soft bodied insects that suck the juice and life from the plant, and it can produce few or no good pickles. Entomologists have known for a long time what would kill every one of these plant lice that it touched, but they have not known how to put the poison rapidly and cheaply enough onto the under side of the leaves. "This we have done for the last two years," says C. L. Fitch of the department of agricultural extension of Iowa State college. "By the use of what we call a trident, set for an instant over each hill and the sudden discharge of spray under pressure of 150 to 250 lbs. to the square inch, we throw all the leaves up and get every louse. The same insect also attacks watermelons and cantelopes. Last year we sprayed 175 acres of watermelons. This year we expect to have two engine driven sprayers at work and to spray not less that 300 acres of melons and cucumbers. The department of agricultural extension Ames, Iowa, will send to those interested a circular letter telling how to deal with this pest in home gardens and in the field The most essential is that this work be done in time It is insurance and not cure. The cost in a large way is less than one dollar per acre for labor and materials.

People discover comets now without ever looking through a telescope or even looking at the sky It is done by examining photographs of the sky made through large, special telescopes. The new photographs are carefully compared with older ones of the same region, and any new objects which are found on them are investigated. Miss H. S. Leavitt, one of the assistants at the Harvard observatory, recently discovered a comet in this way, says the Pathfinder It proved to be the Metcalf comet which was discovered on its former trip in 1906 This comet is right ascension eight hours, 28 minutes and declination 1 degree, 20 minutes minus This would place it about halfway between Regulus and Prosyon, but there is no use in looking for this comet, for it is far beyond the reach of all ordinary methods of observation. It took a telescope with a 16-inch lens to catch it, and the "eye" that saw it was a camera which was many times more sensitive than the keenest human eye. However, it is always possible that one of these faint comets will come closer and thus become easily visible.

Among the immense mass of ancient Chinese records and manuscripts brought back from the buried cities and caves of ancient Khotan, in central Asia, and now stored in the British museum, is one called the Tun-Huang-Lu, a topographical description of part of Khotan itself This little geography was written in the time of the Tang dynasty in the Seventh century, but probably contains matter from earlier authors Among the specially interesting natural phenomena of the country described in the Tun-Huang-Lu is a large sand hill, which at certain times gave forth strange noises, so much so that a temple in its vicinity was entitled the "Thunder Sound temple."

IOWA LEADS NATION IN VALUE OF ITS LIVE STOCK

Washington D C, June 6.—Iowa makes a remarkable showing in wealth in a bulletin given out by the census bureau today It is shown to stand fifth in the union in the value of its property The only states ahead of it are New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania and Ohio, in the order given.

The bulletin is one dealing with the estimated valuation of national wealth. It shows the estimated true value of all property in Iowa based on 1912 figures, is $7,868,454,211 Ohio is but little ahead of this, Illinois and Pennsylvania about double it New York has over $25,000 000,000 of property

When it comes to live stock, Iowa leads as the greatest state in the union The value of its live stock is given as $491,613,546

Its nearest competitor is Texas, and Texas is nearly $100 000,000 behind

ONE IOWA EDITOR OWNS PRIVATE RAILROAD COACH

Traer, Ia, June 6--Not every editor in Iowa has a private car Elmer E. Taylor of the Traer Star-Clipper however is the owner of a real railroad coach combining the features of Pullman sleeping porch Delmonico cafe and parlor luxury It was acquired when he was extensively engaged in handling Canadian and Texas lands and now is subject to the directions of his kindness of heart

He has invited the old employes of the Star-Clipper to be his guests on a trip to the Panama-Pacific exposition, their expenses being confined to the payment of regular fare and the party intends to leave Traer on the evening of June 23, going by way of Cedar Rapids to joint the National Editorial association's west bound train on the Santa Fe

THREE SUITS OF CLOTHES HANDICAP MAN IN WATER

Greene, Ia, June 6 The body of the young man found in the river here proved to be that of Woody Herndon It was impossible to find any clue to his identity until his brother, Harley Herndon, who has been working on a farm near Rockford, came down to investigate.

He had been working on a farm for John Martin When last seen by his brother, two weeks ago Sunday, he complained of not liking the place. It is thought that he attempted to cross the river in a boat, and in some way tipped out and being hindered by three suits of clothes, was unable to save himself The body passed the Marble Rock dam, and if it had not been discovered would probably have passed the dam here

INCOMPLETE CENSUS DOES ODEBOLT AN INJUSTICE

Odebolt Ia June 6 -Odebolt gained in population from 1910 to 1915, in spite of the incomplete figures of the enumerator showing an apparent loss of 50 in that period The claim of a gain has been established in a careful count made under the direction of the Odebolt Booster club In 1910 the official population for Odebolt was 1,283 the enumerator's total for 1915 was 1 233 A careful canvas made by the Booster club gives a population of 1 382 which local interests accept as the correct figures, no matter what the official schedule may show There is not a vacant house in Odebolt at the present time, and the large number of new families during the past five years leave no question of a gain instead of a loss

MUSCATINE MENACED BY HEAVY FLOOD LOSSES

Muscatine Ia, June 6.—Muscatine county is almost an island at this time. With the Mississippi river at flood tide and the Cedar river to the north well above its banks, the area under water in this county at this time is unprecedented Railway and highway traffic between the west part of the county and adjoining counties has been cut off by the flood conditions along the Cedar Roads and bridges have been inundated and washed out by the water, and not until the water recedes will it be possible to estimate the damage to the county road system. Thousands of acres of ground are under water.

ANGRY SOLON MAYOR SHOOTS EDITOR FOR CAUSTIC CRITICISM

Wounded Man Not Expected to Recover—Two Bullets Are Lodged In Lung.

Solon, Ia., June 4.—Texas and Kentucky are not the only places where editors are held to "strict accountability," according to the old time code.

Frank Kregel, editor of the Solon Economy, was shot and seriously wounded last night by Mayor Wolf, whom the editor had been subjecting to caustic criticisms. Two bullets from Mayor Wolf's revolver lodged in Editor Kregel's lung and it is not believed that the wounded man can recover.

"Bad blood" had existed between the editor and the mayor for some time and there had been expectations of a personal encounter No one expected, however, that the feud would lead to such serious results.

The men met on the streets of Solon yesterday afternoon and exchanged a few heated words. It is claimed Kregel made a move to attack the mayor, and that the latter then pulled a revolver, firing two shots into the editor's body at close range.

DES MOINES INVESTIGATES ALLEGED PAVING TRUST

Des Moines, Ia., June 4--Councilman Mitchell has started an extensive investigation to ascertain the reason Des Moines is unable to obtain satisfactory paving at a reasonable price. He has written to a large number of the leading cities in the country to secure the views of their officials on the "high cost of paving," and also is endeavoring to determine whether it is possible to break up the paving trust he says exists in Des Moines

Incidentally, Mr Mitchell is investigating the durability of the various kinds of paving, particularly asphalt Last year Des Moines paid an average of $1.93 a yard for sheet asphalt Mr Mitchell has discovered that other cities are securing the same brand of asphalt at a much cheaper price

Baltimore, which is one of the first cities the councilman communicated with has written him that asphalt is being laid there at an average price of $1 55 cents a yard

FRIENDS OF M. DRISCOLL BELIEVE HE WAS MURDERED

Sac City Ia June 4.- Relatives of M Driscoll, whose body was found in the Des Moines river south of Des Moines Monday told Chief of Detectives MacDonald yesterday morning they had reason to believe he was murdered The relatives say they understand he had a large hole in his left side, which appears to resemble a bullet wound

The body was so badly decomposed however, that it will be difficult for doctors to learn whether Driscoll was shot

The friends and relatives of the dead man are quietly investigating his movements on the night of February 9, when he was last seen alive

The detective department is inclined to believe that Driscoll's death was due to drowning He is believed to be the man whom Mrs Susie Tyler living on South East Sixth street, saw floating down the river on a cake of ice.

POPULATION FIGURES ON VARIOUS SAC COUNTY TOWNS

turns of 1915 show that Sac county has a population of 17,507 a gain of 502 over 1910 Nearly all the townships show a loss, but the increase in the population of the towns more than makes up the difference Sac City now has 2,529 inhabitants, a gain of 328 over the previous census The population of the other towns are Odebolt, 1,233; Lake View, 812, Wall Lake, 726 Schaller, 681, Early, 583, Auburn 409 Lytton, 210, Grant City, 178 Odebolt is the only town showing a loss, but last week the Odebolt Commercial club completed a census showing 1,382 people now in Odebolt, but the work was done too late to change the official figures

ARE TEACHERS LABORERS OR MEMBERS OF PROFESSION.

Des Moines, Ia June 4 Cases to determine whether a school teacher is a workman or is practicing a profession, under the workmen's compensation act, have been sent to the Iowa industrial commission for adjustment Welker Given, secretary of the commission, yesterday said that the matter will probably go to arbitration

Verna Sanders and Rose C Smith school teachers, of Keota, Ia., were injured by an automobile in Sigourney, April 26, while on their way to a county institute, whence they had been sent by the county superintendent

They have applied for compensation. Miss Sanders was injured about the head and neck Miss Smith suffered an injury to the spinal column The school district had insured its risk with a casualty insurance company The company has declined to pay compensation on the ground that there is question whether the young women were injured while in the line of duty, and whether they can be termed workmen under the compensation law The insurance company maintains that street accidents are not occupational and that they are events to which all persons are liable

$175,000 IN SIGHT IF SHORT LINE IS JUNKED

Atlantic, Ia., June 4 W Harding Davis, a railroad supply man, who deals in second hand railroad equipment, is in the city with a view of buying as junk the rails and equipment of the defunct Atlantic Southern It is said that the price to be paid if the deal with Mr. Davis is made, will be $100,000.

Included in the company's right of way or that portion of it which is owned outright by them, are some 400 acres of land, which, at a conservative estimate, is worth $40,000.

In addition to this is the value of terminals, etc., which will probably reach $30,000 or $35,000 more, making a total of about $175,000 that the company will secure for its property

DEPUTY WARDEN SULLIVAN NOW STATE PAROLE OFFICER

Fort Madison, Ia., June 3.—Announcement was made at the prison here of the appointment of Charles H Sullivan to the post of state parole officer and his resignation as deputy warden, effective June 15. The name of his successor has not been divulged.

Sullivan has been connected with the prison force here for the past seven years The appointment to the parole agency comes from the board of parole His headquarters will be at Des Moines.

ADVENTISTS FEATURE CLAIM EARTH NOW IN FINAL DEATH THROES

World War Big Theme at Annual Iowa Conference—Climax Due In Turkey's Fall.

Waterloo, Ia., June 4.—Even now the earth is in its death throes, according to the views of speakers at the annual conference of the Seventh Day Adventists of Iowa, in camp meeting at Chautauqua park.

All of the Adventist bible students look upon the great European war as an omen of the early coming of the final judgment day. They look for Christ's second coming when the battle of Armageddon is fought. The scene of that final conflict will be in the valley of Jehosaphat, in the Turkish empire in Asia When the Turk is driven out of Europe the hour will soon come.

"Turkey's fate in Europe and Asia will close the great drama of earthly history," said Pro. C S. Longacre, of Washington, D. C., in his sermon on the meaning of the European war in the light of bible prophecies. "The downfall of Turkey in Asia will constitute the last trumpet blast announcing the death knell of all the nations at the battle of Armageddon The nations now are filling their cup of iniquity and heaping up wrath against the day of wrath."

IOWA BANKERS TO MEET AT DAVENPORT, JUNE 22

Davenport Ia, June 4 P W. Hall, secretary has announced practically the complete program for the 29th annual convention of the Iowa Bankers' association, which will be held here, June 22 and 23 More than 500 bankers are expected to attend this meeting, at which speakers of national repute will appear

Without doubt the status and possibilities of the federal reserve system will come up for a large share of informal discussion, but there is nothing on the program to indicate that any formal action affecting Iowa bankers' attitude toward the system will be taken

From present indications there is to be a lively battle for the position on the executive council of the American Bankers' association There are six candidates avowedly in the field now, and it is known that at least two of these are conducting something of a letter campaign

REPUDIATES GUILTY PLEA AND ACQUITTED BY JURY

Waterloo Ia June 4 - After pleading guilty to a charge of illegal fishing a week ago Joe Briggs a patrol driver changed his plea to not guilty and demanded a trial and was acquitted by a jury in Justice Knapp's court The jury was out only a few minutes and took only one ballot

Briggs arrest was caused by information filed by R T St John in connection with the arrest of deputy fish and game warden Elmer Goodell Four others also were arrested

The defense alleged that the prosecuting witness had used undue influence to persuade the defendant to plead guilty and that when he had time to consult an attorney he promptly changed his plea

SEVERAL MONTHS BEFORE TOTAL ON STATE CENSUS

Des Moines, Ia. June 4—Although the taking of the Iowa census was formally completed Monday night it probably will be several months before any figures will be given out on the state totals The first process will be to verify the census cards of the various cities, towns and townships, throwing out duplications or other records that do not conform to requirements This preliminary work will be an immense task After each census division is checked over then the record will be in form for an estimate on the state's total population General confidence is expressed that Iowa will show a fair gain over 1910 and many who have kept in touch with the situation think the 1915 total will go beyond 2 500,000 Sioux City shows the largest percentage of gain on local returns of any city in the state

YOUNG ITALIAN BEAUTY AND LOVER MISSING

Mason City, Ia. June 4 Whether Saltena Polanti an Italian girl ran away from home was kidnaped or has eloped, is what is puzzling her parents as well as the police Jesse Colarci a foreman at the Lehigh cement plant is missing as well and he has been paying the girl some attention Miss Polanti is only 14 years old, but is said to be an Italian beauty Sheriff Marsh has been notified and in addition to this the girl's parents say that they are minus about $200 They object to Colarci having the daughter let alone paying a dower of that amount Officers are trying to locate the couple

IOWA CROP BULLETIN.

Des Moines Ia June 4 Following is the regular Iowa crop bulletin for the week ending May 31

The week was wet, and cool, the average daily deficiency of temperature being about 6 degrees Rain fell every day from the 25th to the 30th, inclusive, and in many localities the amounts of rainfall were excessive. Every part of the state received two inches or more the greatest amount being 10 28 inches in Union county All creeks and rivers are out of their banks at some places. Much bottom land is flooded and considerable damage done by washing uplands No field work was done and there is yet much corn to be planted, and some replanting will be necessary The rains were however, highly beneficial to pastures, meadow, fruit and garden truck Small grain is stooling nicely and is generally doing well, but there is some complaint of damage by Hessian fly in fall wheat in the southern counties and the crop is becoming too rank in many localities Considerable alfalfa cut before the rains is still in the swath uncured The week closes with clear warm weather and all conditions are more promising"

SPENCER—The census of Spencer complete today shows 4 175. and Clay county 14 611 Five years ago the city showed 3,004 and the county 12,766.

FARMER FOUND DEAD; BODY BOUND TO BUGGY

Onawa, Ia., June 2.—Jack Lovell, a wealthy farmer living in Monona county between Dunlap and Onawa, was found near his home yesterday morning dead.

The body was tied to the seat of his buggy and there was a bullet wound in the abdomen. The horse had been unhitched and was grazing nearby. The wound had been made by a 22 rifle

No further particulars had been received when the coroner of Monona county left for the scene The theory is that Lovell was murdered

COURT DECISION ON NEW LIABILITY LAW JARS RISK CONCERNS

Holds Employers Not Compelled to Carry Industrial Insurance Policies.

Des Moines, Ia., June 3.—Reports have been received here that Judge Smith, of Cedar Rapids, will rule, in a test case pending before him, that employers cannot be compelled to carry industrial insurance. The decision will not attack the features of the law fixing compensation for deaths or injuries, but will fix the right of the employer to use his own judgment in providing for the indemnity, as in other liabilities and contracts. The employer can take out industrial insurance, or he can carry the risk personally, so the court will rule.

Among attorneys here there is a general feeling that this construction will be upheld by the supreme court, thus presenting a new situation in the administration of the compensation act. The surety concerns, in particular, will be somewhat disturbed if the Cedar Rapids ruling is upheld by the higher court.

The most important effect of this decision, it is claimed, will be to reduce the rates on industrial insurance, on which there has been considerable complaint. If the rates are put on a basis generally accepted as reasonable, it is probable that most of the large employers of labor will prefer to take the protection even though they are not compelled to do so. The option, however, will enable them to carry their own risks if the rates are unsatisfactory.

NEWLY CREATED BATTERY TO GUARD IOWA SHORES

Davenport, Ia., June 3.—That a battery is to replace Company B, of the Iowa National Guard, and that all the necessary equipment, including horses, will be furnished by the government arsenal at Rock Island, was information received by Capt. Dan F. Evers, of the local company, from the war department.

The battery here is one of two authorized by the state legislature. Its duty will be to study the guarding of the Iowa shore of the Mississippi.

Iowa is the first state to comply with the order of the war department in this particular. The battery will be equipped with four 3-inch guns, 12 caissons, battery wagon, store wagon, 10 horses, mechanics and other details.

Officers from the arsenal will instruct the members of the new battery

VETERANS OF THREE WARS IN KNOXVILLE CEMETERY

Knoxville, Ia., June 3.--As the result of an investigation of a committee of the G A R and the W R. C., which was selected to place markers at soldiers' graves preparatory to the Memorial services here, the record shows that there are a total of 100 veterans of the civil war buried in the city cemetery, to say nothing of the score or more buried at North cemetery, Aldrich and other grounds near town

In the city cemetery (Graceland) lies the remains of one veteran of the war of 1812, Alexander Mathews, and five of the Mexican war—Maj. D. P Long, Capt. Thomas J. Jenkins, Joshua Jenkins, James Spencer and George R Mathews.

BRIDGE GIVES WAY AND TWO BOYS ARE DROWNED

Clarinda, Ia., June 3 Roy Depew, 28 and Earl Depew, 12, brothers, lost their lives by drowning in the Nodaway river near Hepburn, southwest of Clarinda They were sons of Mr. and Mrs J L. Depew, of Clarinda, and, accompanied by Mrs. Roy Depew and two children, were en route to Clarinda in an automobile bearing flowers for the memorial services. They had proceeded five miles from home and were midway of a bridge over the Nodaway, which gave no indication of weakness, but which had evidently been undermined for it gave way under the load. The other members of the party managed to escape, but the Depew brothers were carried down stream and drowned. The Depew family is one of the most prominent in this section of Iowa.

DES MOINES MAY IMPOSE BONDS FOR JITNEY BUS

Des Moines, Ia June 3 - The question of regulating jitney busses is likely to be taken up by the Des Moines city council again this week as a result of a serious accident here Saturday night. Five persons were injured when a jitney overturned. On account of the slippery street the automobile skidded. In trying to divert the car from the rails of a street car track the driver broke his steering gear and lost control

The driver who had the accident chanced to be one of those who is unable to make good personal injury damages in case action is begun. The result is that the city council will be urged to reconsider its action in turning down the requirement of an indemnity bond

Only last week union labor turned down a resolution opposing an indemnity bond for jitneys. At the next general meeting it is expected to go on record on the other side.

TO FIGHT JUNK ORDER ON IOWA SHORT LINE

Des Moines, Ia., June 3.—J. H. Henderson, commerce counsel for Iowa, will hold a conference today at the capital with Ralph Pringle, attorney of Red Oak, to prepare for the fight to be made before the state railroad commission to compel the owners of the Atlantic Southern to resume service

The commerce counsel yesterday said that he had read that De Roo Weber, general manager of the Atlantic Southern, had brought a business man from St. Louis to Atlantic last week to look over the road's property, with the view of purchasing the rails for junk.

"There will be no sale of the road for junk or otherwise," said Henderson. "We will take steps to prevent it until we have presented our case to the state railroad commission and have received a decision as to whether service shall be resumed. We expect to make a strong showing."

DEGREES FOR 300 STUDENTS AT IOWA STATE COLLEGE

Ames, Ia., June 1.—More than 300 men and women will get bachelors' degrees in the various courses at Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts during the commencement exercises this week. Thirty will get masters' degrees, 14 will get professional degrees, and 75 others will get certificates in other than the full four-year courses. That makes a total list of candidates for degrees and certificates numbering more than 425, the largest ever presented to the state board of education.

CARRANZA TO ... FOR RECOGNI...

In Reply to Wilson Note ... tutionalist Chief Will ... That With Aid He Can Win.

Vera Cruz, June 7 "Appreciative, friendly and serene" such was the tone of General Carranza's reply to President Wilson's note After carefully considering the note General Carranza concluded that it contained nothing other than hopefulness for the constitutionalist cause and it was announced that his reply to Mr. Wilson would be handed to John Silliman, personal representative of President Wilson in Mexico, for transmission to Washington within a few days, probably on Monday or Tuesday

As the note has been read and more by Carranza officials and members of his cabinet it has created a feeling that President Wilson has taken no harsh action toward Mexico

A distinct feeling prevails that a more definite attitude at Washington will result in hastening a solution of the Mexican problem without outside aid. How this is to be done no one professes to know except General Carranza himself and he expresses the opinion that his intended recognition of Mexico City will place the constitutionalists in a better position to be recognized by the Washington government.

It was learned that Carranza intends to interpret the warning and tacit hint that he is the man best qualified to assume ascendency in Mexico and most likely to receive recognition if the constitutionalists return to Mexico City. It is understood that Carranza will point out a steady progress by the constitutionalists, indicating early victory over Villa. Also that Carranza will point out that American recognition would greatly hasten peace in Mexico.

Other points in the reply will be that General Carranza appreciates the kindly sentiments for the Mexican people as expressed by President Wilson, second, that President Wilson has always been regarded as the champion of the down trodden people and that those struggling for a democratic government look to his friendship, and third, that the constitutionalists have already undertaken pacification and uniting all factions, but that their efforts had failed because of the machinations of Villa, who was backed by the Clentifico party, and fourth, that General Carranza considers the outlook bright because he is convinced that he will be able soon to reoccupy Mexico City and reopen traffic confident that to restricted actions of the north and the country is rid of him.

Montreal, June 7. The Thompson liner Ionia for Montreal with freight from Middlesbrough, England, was torpedoed and sunk off the north coast of England at noon Thursday, according to a report received by agents of the line here last night. The captain and crew were landed at Kirwall, Scotland. The vessel carried no passengers.

DANISH STEAMER CYRUS DESTROYED BY TORPEDO

Stavanger, Norway, June 5.—The Danish steamer Cyrus with a cargo of coal from Burntisland, Scotland, for Copenhagen, was torpedoed Thursday afternoon. The crew, none of whose members was injured, was landed yesterday by a Norwegian steamer at Stavanger. The men state that the Cyrus was torpedoed without warning.

TWO TRAWLERS SUNK IN NORTH SEA BY BOMBS

Lowestoft, Eng., June 5.—The crew of a Lowestoft trawler was landed here yesterday. The members say that their vessel was stopped in the North sea Thursday evening by a German submarine. The crew was ordered into the boats after which the trawler was sunk by bombs. The Aberdeen trawler Chrysophrasus also was sunk.

THREE SMALL VESSELS ARE SENT TO BOTTOM

London, June 5.—The steam drifter, Ena May of Peterhead, the trawler, Strathbran, and the sailing ship, George and Mary all have been sent to the bottom by German submarines. The crews of all three ships were saved.

FRENCH STEAMER CAN CARRY A SUBMARINE

New York, June 5.—A French tank steamer designed to mother a submarine reached this port today from Bordeaux. The vessel is fitting with opening bows through which a submarine may enter. When the submarine is in position in the ship's interior the bows are closed and the steamer is then ready to sail and discharge the submarine at distant points whereever desired.

The steamer is the first of three vessels of her type built and building. She is named the Kangaroo.

EQUAL SUFFRAGISTS TO DECIDE ON PLAN

Expect to Adopt Policy to Be Pursued In Next Congressional Campaign.

Chicago, June 7. Suffragists from all parts of the country began arriving here today to attend a conference of the National American Women's Suffrage association, which opens tomorrow. The meeting will continue until Wednesday. More than 200 prominent suffragists were expected to attend.

Chief of the subjects to be discussed, it was announced, is the question of policy of the national association toward the coming congressional campaign.

The national association favors the Shafroth amendment, calling for a referendum of the states on the question of suffrage while the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage, a rival organization, favors the Bristow-Mondell amendment to the pending suffrage bill. This measure calls for a constitutional amendment without referendum.

DARING FEAT WON DAY AT PRZEMYSL

Russians Concede Brilliancy of Austro-German Stroke But Minimize Military Importance of Forts.

Petrograd, June 7.—News of the fall of Przemysl apparently has awakened no apprehension here. It is conceded that the Germans have won a "moral victory," but the strategic importance of the fortress according to the opinion expressed here had been nullified before the Russians relinquished it.

A leading Russian military expert, analyzing the situation says:

"Having crossed the river San with two armies which were to begin operations against the fortress the Germans found themselves in an extremely dangerous and unstable position, being attacked on their left flank they were compelled to shorten the strip of ground they occupied on the right of the San. Any reverse of these armies would have turned the German movement into a catastrophe, since retreat to the rear would have been cut off by the river San and the pressure of the Russian forces at Sienawa on the German left.

"Accordingly the Germans were forced to hurl their attack against the fortress, throwing forward enormous forces.

Forts Indefensible.

"The indefensibility of the fortress was due to the fact that the Austrians had blown up the most important forts upon their evacuation of Przemysl, coupled with the configuration of the land. This was unsuitable to a stubborn defense for the reason that its undulations made it possible for the enemy to hide approaches.

"The primary idea in the construction of the Przemysl fortress had been to meet attack from the eastward. There had not been sufficient time to reconstruct the damaged fortress on the west and on the north and to adapt the position to defense against attacks from these directions.

Fired Last Shells.

"Russian long range guns, the expert says, shooting to the last shell in to the thick masses of advancing Austro-Germans caused them severe losses. Eventually, however, the Russian authorities reached the decision to remove the army from the fortifications.

"Strategic considerations," the expert concludes, "led to this same decision since the Russian Przemysl army constituted a sharp wedge cutting into the German lines and subject to being attacked from every side. To defend this crescent-shaped front required tremendous forces and it was clearly the desire of the Germans that numerous forces be diverted to this front for defensive purposes."

"It is estimated that the proper defense of the Przemysl fortress would have required the concentrating there of forces equal to those of the former Austrian garrison, namely 145,000 men. It would have been necessary also to develop to their fullest capacity no less than 1,500 guns and to re-establish all the destroyed forts which in the short time available was impossible.

GUNS THE KEY TO GERMAN STRENGTH

Inferior Force With Superior Equipment Hold Back French While the Russians Are Forced Back.

Petrograd, June 7.—For the first time in this war, the Germans in their latest advance into Russian territory, have adopted a new tactical formation for attack. The new formation is likened by military experts here to the Macedonian phalanx—with this difference, that it is composed, not of individuals but of divisions and army corps.

This phalanx, in the advance from Cracow, moved along the line of the Gorlice-Jasio-Rzeszoff railway, and included 10 full army corps, of which five forming the main striking head, were picked troops withdrawn specially for the purpose from the French front.

The phalanx was superabundantly provided with artillery, including a large number of heavy batteries. The latter were also in many cases brought across Germany from the French front. For example 24 battalions of the Prussian guard corps had with them 40 batteries, half of which were of heavy caliber.

This ancient battle formation newly applied in modern war, had naturally a tremendous driving force, but it was deprived of any great possibilities of tactical movement by the fact that it was chained to a line of railway, whereby alone it could maintain its supplies and munitions in the quantities required by such a huge concentration.

The rate of movement of the phalanx in a forward direction cannot have exceeded four miles a day, in the opinion of Russian experts. But its momentum was irresistible, and it was this phalanx formation which forced the crossing of the San river at Lezachow. It was assisted by an immense flotilla of aeroplanes.

The Germans, in withdrawing many of their best troops from the French front, filled the gaps necessarily left there, with overpowering technical superiority. Thus where the Germans find themselves opposed by 1,000 men and two machine guns, they post 100 men and 20 machine guns, confident that by continuing on the defensive with an extended use of the technical adjuncts of warfare they can safely withdraw their best troops for temporary service elsewhere.

Colonel Colmonoff, the best known newspaper military expert in Petrograd, discusses the French position in his latest article. Pressure from two sides, he says, is an elementary principle of coalition warfare. In the fighting of the present month, the Russians have drawn upon themselves enormous masses of first grade German troops withdrawn from the west front. Naturally the French have tried to reply by putting renewed pressure upon the weaknened enemy facing them. But extra rapid firers, extra artillery, and the use of gases, are taking the place of men in the German lines on the west, and for this reason the French attempts at exerting pressure have shown no signs of relieving the Russians.

BRITAIN RECRUITING YOUTHFUL AMERICANS

Boston, June 7.—Allege recruiting of American young men for the military forces of Great Britain is the subject of an investigation begun by federal officers here yesterday.

According to a cablegram from the United States consul general at London, which was included in a message sent by Secretary Bryan to Congressman Peter F. Tague, of this city, at least 15 youths have been enlisted in violation of an agreement with the British board of trade regarding the United States shipping laws. These and other cases are being inquired into, it is understood.

Secret service agents are cooperating with United States District Attorney Anderson and his staff, on orders from Washington, to learn what inducements, if any, have been offered youths to ship on British vessels as caretakers for horses and cattle.

One of the oldest irrigation ditches known to man has been discovered recently in New Mexico. It is probably between 1,000 and 3,000 years old and lies in a valley near Ft. Stanton. It is so ancient that sedimentary deposits from water passing through have changed its mud to limestone in ... ious places.

MOVE NOT POPULAR

Objections to Sealed Proposals of Marriage.

Speculations as to Some of the Results if a Proposed New York State Law Should Be Put Into Effect.

The attention of all single men and maidens, and of widows also, is directed to a bill introduced into the New York legislature providing that no agreement shall be enforced by the courts unless they have been reduced to writing and signed by the parties. This is a subject worth consideration at all times, but it is especially appropriate at the season when a "young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."

The purpose of the bill, ostensibly, is to protect men from suits for breach of promise which are, strictly speaking, blackmailing enterprises. But it would serve equally well to protect men whose favorite recreation is to make love to women, and when that has been accomplished, make some more love to some other women. The written proposal of marriage, duly signed, has several points of advantage about it, but it is important that all marriageable persons should be well informed of the measure if it should become a law, and be on their guard. If the rules of the game are to be changed there should be full notice for the protection of all concerned.

The change would probably reduce the marriage rate in a notable percentage. There are some bashful men who find it easier to propose by letter than orally, but most men glide gently into an avowal of their affection under the personal magnetism of the charming creature, and are liable to be scared off by the production of a blank form looking like an income-tax return, with the request of the girl that they fill it out and sign it while she is communing with her soul whether to add her signature.

When Sir Something Orother proposed to Peg o' My Heart, who had already received matrimonial overtures from two undesirables, she asked: "Are you making a proposal of marriage to me?" Whereat the man she was dying to marry stalked off to the window and looked gloomily into the river, and the alarmed girl upbraided herself for her folly in talking too much.

In this case the man had to get over his alarm at the gross, open and palpable naming of the transaction, because the play could not have gone on otherwise; but many a proposal off the stage has been permanently wrecked by the injection of too much common sense into an affair usually described by others than the participants as a piece of silliness.

How many men would sign and seal a written agreement of marriage if the girl, upon receiving the tender avowal, had promptly gone to her father's desk and obtained a sheet of paper and a pen and ink and asked the infatuated man to please reduce his pleasant remarks to writing?

Perhaps it would be just as well to leave the proposal to oral or osculatory terms and merely abolish suits for breach of promise of marriage. No woman really wishes to marry the man who has thrown her off, or if she does, it is only for the possession of some of his money. The modern woman sneers at the idea of marriage as a career; she can make her own career, just as her brother does.

Therefore, pecuniarily, she is not injured by a broken engagement, and the law undertakes to indemnify the woman, not for her injured feelings, but for the substantial, material loss when a good catch gets away from her. The suit for breach of promise is an anachronism. — Philadelphia Record.

GET POWER
The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by selecting food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

"Not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach trouble," writes a lady from a little Western town.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heart-burn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I kept up its use. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heart-burn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain, disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 lbs., my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts did it."

A ten days trial will show anyone some facts about food.

Ham Honesty

YOU wouldn't give a child a bottle of poison to play with.

Yet when you let a child eat ham that is unreliable you run about the same risk.

Some ham, as you very well know, is not fit to eat. It's not properly cured, and it's kept from rotting by poisonous preservatives barred by the pure food law.

It is your duty to buy ham only where you know you'll get the real article. This is most important. Buy here.

THE ONE HE LOVED

By MARY H. WITHERELL

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Poor fellow!" murmured Rose Darrell, and her gentle face softened as a tall, handsome young man came down the pretty park path and sat down on the rustic bench beside her, engaging in casual, friendly conversation.

The "poor fellow" was Ernest Harper. He looked grave and troubled, but it seemed as though the presence of the cheery little woman beside him made him momentarily forget his anxieties.

"How sorry I feel for him!" breathed Rose as they parted. "How unworthy is she of the love of a man like him."

"If Rose only knew!" soliloquized Ernest as he went on his way. "Ah, me! life is a sad enigma."

Here were the facts in the case: Ernest Harper was engaged to the sister of his dearest friend, Lora Moody. And Rose Darrell knew that Lora did not love him, was a flippant flirt and would bring him pain and disappointment in the years to come.

How she had found this out was her own treasured secret.

Ernest was surprised to be aroused from his morning slumber by the announcement of a servant that Mr. Moody, Lora's father, was in the parlor below and "would he please dress and come down at once?"

When Ernest joined his early visitor he found Mr. Moody pacing the room up and down in a state of great agitation.

"Ernest," he spoke in an unsteady tone, "I've got some bad news for you."

"Ned—" began Ernest.

"No, Lora."

"She is ill?"

"Worse!" groaned the unhappy father. "Ernest, boy, be brave! We deplore it all, and you have been the man all through but drive her from your thoughts. She is unworthy of you."

"You mean—?"

"She eloped last night with Lieutenant Trescombe."

It was a severe shock to the astounded fiance, but less from personal grief than pity for the chum and his family, upon whom this hard blow had been brought. In a measure he was relieved.

"If Lora loved him," he said, quietly, "she will be happy with him."

"But you—you? We feel so for you!"

"Don't think of me, Mr. Moody," returned Ernest. "I only wish them joy and contentment."

"You are a noble fellow!" declared Mr. Moody.

"Free!" Ernest Harper whispered to himself as later that morning he once again strolled in the little park, thinking over the acute change in affairs that had come about. Was he thinking, too, of Rose? If so, that accounted for a new brightness in his face as he made her out at a little distance.

She greeted him with a warm handclasp, her face showing deep womanly sympathy.

"I am so sorry," she said in a subdued tone.

He sat down beside her with a deep sigh. It seemed as though a strange restfulness came over him. He knew what was in her mind—friendly pity, genuine interest. She was rather surprised at the calm, grave manner in which he took his trouble. Rose drifted the conversation into general channels. She manifested an interest in his work. She spoke of a book he had written and he was gratified to discern that she was familiar with all its details and especially appreciated the parts of it which he himself prized.

At the end of a week the Moody family heard from the truant daughter. She was married and was visiting with the family of her husband. He was an empty-headed fellow, but had wealth and lively social connections, and, while glad of his escape from marrying a woman he did not love, Ernest really believed that Lora would be happy in her new environment.

Ernest decided to leave the village. He went to bid farewell to the girl he cherished as a true friend. They were seated in the garden when a little brother of Rose came running up to her.

"I found the locket, sister!" he cried, excitedly. "On the croquet lawn," and he handed to Rose an article at which Ernest stared strangely.

"Why!" he could not help exclaiming, "where did that come from?"

Rose turned scarlet, she evaded his glance. She was terribly flustered.

"I—that is, Lora—"

"Cast it aside—yes, I know that," said Ernest, "but—"

Rose suddenly recovered her composure.

"Shall I tell you the truth?" she asked frankly. "Well, then, I felt very sorry for your sake."

"And sister has worn it ever since till she lost it," broke in the little brother, "and she cried when she did—"

"S-sh!" faltered Rose, but the truth was out, and Ernest Harper read her tell-tale face aright.

Ernest covered the trembling hand of the young girl at his side with his own. He gazed earnestly into her eyes.

"Rose," he said, "could it be possible that you also kept that rejected memento for my sake?"

Her dear, sweet face bent lower out of sight. She could not reply. But her hand did not leave the gentle caress of his own and Ernest Harper knew that he had found perfect bliss at last.

Good Work of Humble Worm.

Worms are great promoters of vegetation by boring, perforating and loosening the soil and rendering it pervious to rains and the fibers of plants by drawing straws and stalks of leaves and twigs into it, and, most of all, by throwing up such infinite numbers of lumps of earth called wormcasts, which form a fine manure for grain and grass. The earth without worms would soon become cold, hard, void of fermentation and consequently sterile. This has occurred in many cases where the worms have been either accidentally or intentionally destroyed, and the fertility of the soil thus lost has only been restored when the worms had again collected and resumed their fertilizing work.

Not the Right House.

It had been a hard day for the book agent. Sales were desperately slow, and as a last resort he decided to try a nearby house despite its shabby appearance. "Have you a Charles Dickens in your home?" he asked politely. "No," she snapped. "Or a Robert Louis Stevenson?" "No." "Or a Walter Scott?" "No, we ain't, an' what's more, we don't run a boarding house here either. If you're looking for them fellows you might try the house across the street. I understand they keep boarders."

Bitter Plaint.

Being without money and friends, the accused was assigned an attorney by the court. Despite his lawyer's efforts a conviction resulted. Calling the convicted man before him, the judge asked: "Have you anything to say before I pass sentence?" "Yes, your honor. It looks to me like some people around here—naming no names—are in cahoots. I'm not forgetting who inflicted that lawyer on me."

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

To Every Customer in Klemme and Surrounding Territory, Greeting:

Attend Our Band Concerts

We are looking foreward to see you spend many pleasant evenings in Klemme this summer attending our weekly band concerts, which will be held every Thursday evening in our fine band stand at the park and good seats have been purchased so you will be able to sit down and enjoy the music. We feel sure that you will enjoy this weekly outing and make your plans to be with us once a week at least. Our band is now one of the best in this section of the state, and will give a variety of music that will be enjoyed by everyone.

We want to see You at our Big Celebration

Klemme will make the Eagle Scream, Saturday, July 3rd and plans are under way to make it the biggest and best celebration ever held in Klemme and you know what that means. The various committees are hard at work and are making preparations to entertain a monstrous crowd. Klemme wants to entertain you in honor of our Independence and you will surely enjoy the entertainment that we will give you. Keep your eyes pealed and your ears open and we know then that you will not think of celebrating elsewhere.

FARM TOUR, SATURDAY, JUNE 26th

Of course a great many of you are figuring on taking in the big farm tour, but if you are among those who did not give it much thought—remember that you will be more than welcome and will enjoy the trip much. The tour will start from Klemme at 8:30 a. m.

We will Appreciate Your Trade

With the opening of the most delightful season of the entire year, we the business men of Klemme wish to extend not only an invitation for your business throughout the spring and summer, but to point out to you the folly of trading elsewhere.

That you have a right to spend your money where you please, no one denies, but the practice of spending it out of Klemme works an injustice to you in the end just as surely as it injures us at the time you take or send it away. Our town is the financial center of the community in which you live and from which your living must come. The more money we can keep at home the better will the financial conditions be here. If they are good, you, Mr. Workingman, will have employment at good wages. If they are bad, you will spend many idle days or will be compelled to work for a less wage than could otherwise be granted. Every dollar you send away from Klemme makes it just that much less probable that local conditions will be satisfactory to you. And, anyway, there is not a single good reason why you should send one penny out of town. Every necessity of life can be bought at home at as low a price as anywhere else, quality considered, and it is worse than folly to close your eyes against quality and look at the price, only.

And you, Mr. Farmer, should consider the matter carefully before going or sending out of town to buy. If financial conditions in the community are kept in good condition, it will be easier for you to get credit; either from a retail dealer or from the banks, should you need it. If the community is drained of its money, retailers are unable to extend credit, and when their receipts fall off, the cash in banks must decrease accordingly and ready money is not easily had.

All of the above is good, sound, business judgement. If you, the public, as consumers, will give a little study of the fundamental principles of community success, you will readily see, as we do, that it is just as much to your own interest as it is to ours that you make every effort to spend your money where you make it.

We are looking forward to a good business year. Our stocks are on hand, and it will be a pleasure for us to show you and to prove to you that you cannot realize more for your money than right here at home.

THE MODERN ATLAS.

By Arthur Symons in Cities.

Water, camels, sand, then broader water, boats, a little station, with a veiled woman standing in a doorway then more water and sandy grass, a few trees, then waste land, a long line of bullocks ploughing then, between the railway and the water, cluster of colored houses, mostly of wood; then trees, more waste land, a little hay, with hills beyond, then field, more clusters of houses, ploughed land and water, at last the wall, with its gaps and towers, a grave yard, gardens; then between roofs and walls the long curve of Constantinople. A dense smell, dogs, houses, then an actual sea shore, with men wading barelegged in the water, and boats coming in laden with melons then streets of houses, with fragments of turreted walls two birds on every turret, side streets cutting deeply between two lines of low red roofs, faces of many colors, strange clothes then, over the roofs but close, the water, houses, domes, minarets of the city, in a flash, veiled suddenly by the walls of the station fastened about one.

At the end of my first day in Constantinople I find myself bewildered, as if I have lost my way in my own brain. Seem to have been blown through a whirlwind out of which I can call nothing tangible I recall the drive from the station near midday through dense moving red-capped crowds, an angry mob, as it seemed, surging about one each going his own way heedlessly and violently I tried to catch every detail, as it changed before me to fix my attention and my memory upon a fluid spectacle. The timbers of the bridge creaked and pitched under me, these unintelligible figures came towards me passed, went their way and beyond them, on both sides of me, lay the water, a crowded forest of masts along the quays, from which caiques glided outwards, in front, tier above tier, Galata the tower, the new town, Pera. Walking back in the afternoon, down unpaved cataracts of streets, across the torrent of the bridge, I found myself again in Stamboul I remember lifting a chain to pass under one of the gateways into the Bazaar the negro woman wrapped in a bright green mantle who squatted there, only her black face visible, the droning voice of a beggar reciting the Koran and then the narrow lanes hung with flippery, the dirty, mountainous paths under painted arches, crossing one another in a jungle of gaudy hedges. Then I remember only a confused mingling of hamals, bent double under mountainous weights the tall black hats and black cossacks of Armenian priests, the pleated turbans of Arabs, the thin, black crape over the faces of veiled women, hooded in dominoes; and everywhere, the dogs, lying in the roads and on the pavements, mock, sickly creatures, like poor relations, only asking not to be trodden on.

To walk, in Constantinople, is like a fierce and active struggle. One should look at once before, behind, and underneath one's feet, before, behind, underneath one's feet some danger or disgust is always threatening. I never walked up the steep road which leads from the bridge to Pera without the feeling that I was fighting my way through a hostile city. A horn blows furiously, and a black man runs up the hill, clearing the way before the dashing and struggling horses of the tram. At the same moment a cab drives at full speed down the hill, and the horses set their feet on the pavement In front of you a man balances slices of offal on a long pole across his shoulder, they dangle before and behind he swings cheerfully with his burden through the crowd. A Kurd stooping under a weight higher than himself follows step by step behind you. Your feet slip in slushy mud, and catch on the cobbles or in the gaps of the road. A dog with a red wound behind his ear, and a long strip of mangy skin on his back lies asleep in the middle of the pavement. You step into the road to avoid the dogs and the hamals, and wheels and horses are upon you You step back into the midst of the dogs and the hamals, as you stand aside for a moment, a beggar with a handless arm rounded into a stump, a woman with her face eaten away in the cavity of the hood which she draws back before you appears suddenly, filling what has seemed the only alley of escape The sun soaks down into the narrow street, the smells which in Constantinople seems to ooze upwards out of the ground and steam outwards from every door and window, and pour out of every alley, and rise like a cloud out of the breath and sweat and foulness of the people.

Cross either of the bridges, and you must look not less carefully to your feet. The old bridge hangs by a thread. it was broken in two and has never been mended only patched, in the middle, where it is some inches narrower, an iron plated barge supports it. It sways, creaks, catches your feet, seems at every moment about to fall abroad into the water, which you see through the holes in its planks. The railing is held together by iron wire, the ends of the beams hang out ragged and broken over the water. The Grand Pont is more solidly based but it is made of rough planks set together in irregular lengths and at uneven levels, nailed roughly, the nails standing up out of the planks. It is always in course of making planks lie about in the road, waiting for use, men are working above great gaps, through which you see the water. As wheels rattle over it the planks leap up under your feet, you can scarcely set foot on a plank that is not quivering. On each side is a narrow sidewalk, slightly raised and clamped at the edge with iron. A cross current drives at you as you walk along it, people are crowding up and down from the steamboats of the Bosphorus and the Golden Horn, which have their quays moored to the right and left of the bridge. Wheels are upon you from every side, there is no rule of the road, every one fights his own way through for himself.

ELDEST DAUGHTER OF GOV. DUNNE TO WED YOUNG LAWYER

Eileen Dunne.

The engagement of Miss Eileen Dunne, eldest daughter of Gov. and Mrs. Edward F. Dunne of Illinois, to William J. Carboy, a young Chicago lawyer, was recently announced. The wedding will take place in the executive mansion at Springfield early this fall.

The Lake-and-Rail Decision.

From the Chicago Herald

"These boat lines under control of the petitioning railroads remarks the interstate commerce commission in its lake-and-rail decision have been first a sword and then a shield The epigram is unusually accurate

The origin of these "railway" lines of lake steamers is well known They were formed to enable railways which reached from the sea only to the eastern end of the great lakes to compete with railways which reached to the western end and also to offset water way competition on the eastern half of the journey by offering water transportation on the western half

But when most of the old "trunk lines" --from the Atlantic to Lake Erie--reached across to Lake Michigan and in a way to Lake Superior as well the situation changed Also the attitude of railway managements toward the use of the boat lines changed As the commission says

When these roads succeeded in gaining control of the boat lines which had been in competition with paralleling rails in which they were interested, and later effected their combination, by which they were able to and did drive all independent boats from the through lake-and-rail transportation, they thereby destroyed the possibility of competition other than such as they were of a mind to permit These boats are now held as a shield against a possible competition of new independents

Therefore the commission orders that the railroads concerned divest themselves of ownership and control of these steamer lines, basing its decision not only on the interstate commerce act but also on the Panama canal act It is rather surprising that the railroads have not sooner grasped in this matter the requirements of public opinion and positive law

The great lakes and the Erie canal with the improvements which Illinois will doubtless make in her canal-river system form water roads from the heart of the nation to its outer portals The use of these water roads should not be restricted by the special interests of land roads.

WAITING FOR YOU

Yes, waiting for every farmer or farm son — any industrious American who is anxious to establish for himself a home and prosperity. Canada's hearty invitation this year is more attractive than ever. Wheat is higher but her farms are just as cheap and in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta

160 Acre Homesteads are Actually Free to Settlers. Other Land at From $15 to $20 per Acre

The people of European countries as well as the American consumers must be fed—thus an even greater demand for Canadian Wheat will keep up the price. Any farmer who can buy land at $15.00 to $30.00 per acre—get a dollar for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre is bound to make money—that's what you can expect in Western Canada. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada. There is no conscription and no war tax on lands. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada; or to

The Embusques.

The French papers have been busy of late with the case of the "embusque," which is the name given to the man who chooses a safe job in the army. An incident seen last night on the fringe of Soho suggests that it is also applied to those who do not choose the army at all. A couple of French soldiers over here on leave (they were in joyous mood), coming down a side street, passed the kitchens of a well-known French restaurant. They were attracted by the sight of the cooks in the kitchens and studied them attentively through the grating. Then they began to taunt them with shouts of "Embusque!" The harmless necessary French cooks below, startled in this rough way in their "ambush," were furious. There was an angry clattering of pots and pans and an elaborate slanging match between the cooks and the soldiers. The language was rich and varied, and in the storm the sharp word "embusque" sounded like a bitter refrain. —Manchester Guardian.

"Yes. I went to her about it against father's wish She told father all about it you—what a miserable liar and sneak you are, and

"She lied" cried Eric fiercely

"Here! Don't you go saying my mother is a liar I'll I'll

"You're both liars No' Wait a minute. I don't believe Aunt Rena told your father that She's as mean as dirt to me, but I don't think she'd do that. I'm going to ask Uncle Horace"

Chetwynd's bloodshot eyes shifted "You'd better keep your mouth shut" he growled "Father's promised he'd overlook it if nothing more was said about it"

"Uncle Horace knows you're a thief" cried his cousin and I know it and I've got to help shield you too We've all got to protect the blessed Blagden name What a joke it is!"

Chetwynd's face was of a greenish white He looked over his shoulder as if in mortal fear that these words had been overheard You keep your jaws closed, he hissed

"What's Adam Carr been watching you" began Eric but the look of absolute terror in his cousin's face stopped him

Adam Carr he gasped his jaw sagging Has he been He pulled himself together with a mighty effort gulped a couple of times and then tried to grin derisively Ah come off You can't pull that off with me Adam Carr's on a bank job for father

"What did Judge Bright want to see you for last night"

"Say I'm not here to answer questions for you roared Chetwynd You are nothing but a pauper living off of us, anyhow You and Mary both of you. You're the scum of the earth If you didn't have father back of you nobody with any decency in 'em would look at you You know what your father was and what your mother was so why -

"Take care Chet Don't say anything more' warned Eric white to the lips

"And you'll both come to the same end," went on the other ruthlessly "Mary' Ho, ho' She's a fine one to talk She got caught with me and she had to lie out of it She put it all on me. And I was man enough to stand for it, too'

"You lie'

Chetwynd's eyes gleamed with a sudden malicious joy He gave vent to a nervous, uncertain laugh

"I do, do I" Say you saw me burn a letter just now didn't you? Well it was a note from Mary She's crazy about me I can do what I please with her, and at any time She's no better than any of the rest of her sort If you think she's so blamed good and virtuous-

"If you saw another word I'll kill you,' cried Eric quivering all over

"You're afraid to throw it' sneered Chetwynd wholly misunderstanding the emotions that shook his cousin's frame She was coming here to meet me today She Eric's heart gave a great throb of joy and triumph.

"You lie' She is out riding with Joan Bright. Oh, you cowardly dog' You beast!"

You can say such things to me because you've got a rock in your hand if—"

Without hesitation Eric tossed the rock into the ditch

Like a ferocious, suddenly freed tiger, Chetwynd sprang forward a snarl of fury on his lips They came together with a crash Twice Eric went down from savage body blows Once he was kicked in the side while trying to arise They fought their way but upon the rickety bridge the smaller youth carefully guarding his face from the wild murderous blows of the young giant At last the chance came to send in a telling blow of his own

He drove his fist against his cousin's jaw as he came in with a crouching bull-like rush death lust in his convulsed face

Chetwynd staggered back against the railing of the bridge clutching at it to save himself from falling A look of foolish surprise came into his eyes to be succeeded a second later by one of fearful dismay

"O God'" welled from young Blagden's lips.

The frail support creaked and splintered There was a tearing cracking sound, and then the rail gave way Chetwynd's shriek of horror was even less sickening than the groan that fell from Eric's lips as he leaped forward to catch the tottering figure on the edge

In the twinkling of an eye he stood alone on the shuddering bridge

Up from the depths came a horrid scream cut short by the crash of timbers and the thud of a heavy body on the rocks 70 feet below Then came utter stillness.

For a long time Eric Midthorne stood rooted to the spot petrified by horror He had waited an age it seemed for the thud of that whirling unseen body Now he knew that the thing which had been so vitally alive a moment ago was alive no longer

He waited for a shout from below or even a groan—anything that would bring to him the courage to look down on the thing that had swayed and writhed and clawed the air but a moment before He could see nothing but that—he could hear nothing but that wild scream.

His body seemed to have turned to ice. He was freezing. Suddenly his knees gave way and he dropped heavily in his tracks. Fascinated by horror, he dragged himself to the edge—to the very spot where Chetwynd had last been seen—and peered over the side, down through that dark, sunless rift in the rocks.

Dimly outlined against the black, moist floor of the ravine there was a huddled, motionless shape that took no definite form, but lay like a heap of discarded garments waiting for the visit of the old iron and rags man. For many minutes the youth on the bridge, transfixed by horror, glared at this vague shape, hoping against hope that it would arise and resolve itself into human form—into the human form he had hated so bitterly.

But there was no movement of the heap, there was no sound, there was no sign. The thing down there was Chetwynd Blagden—big, brutal, virile Chetwynd—and it was dead, horribly dead!

With a low moan of realization, Eric drew back from the edge, covering his eyes with his hands to shut out the dreadful sight.

He had killed his cousin'

He was a murderer!

CHAPTER X

THE FLIGHT OF CHETWYND BLAGDEN

Slowly his dulled brain took in the fact that someone was speaking to him that a voice, hard and metallic, was penetrating his consciousness. The sounds seemed to come out of the air, the enveloping air, he could not locate them and yet the speaker stood at the end of the bridge in plain view

"I'm sorry to say I taught you that blow" said the voice It seemed to the stunned bewildered boy that this sentence was repeated over and over again There had been words before these but they had failed to pierce his intelligence

Suddenly as if spurred by an electric shock he sprang to his feet to find himself staring into the grim unsmiling face of Adam Carr The realization that someone had witnessed the sickening accident he could not think of it as anything else came over him like a flash

There was a witness' There was someone to tell his uncle and aunt that they had been right about him all along' Uppermost in his mind, in that instant was the dread of their uplifted accusing hands They at least, would never believe that it was an accident They could see that he swung for it'

Yes I saw most of it said Adam Carr replying to the question of those great stricken eyes

Oh, Mr Carr why didn't you come sooner Why didn't you stop it?" fell in hoarse unnatural tones from the rigid lips

I saw it from afar The the rail was very rotten A child's weight would have broken it down See' With that, he stretched out his hand and pushed the remaining rail from its fastenings

It's a crime to let such timbers stay but this is no time to find fault We must get down there to him He may be alive"

He is down there dead' wailed Eric I can see him Look' That black thing there by the pile of shells'

Brace up' Brace up' Don't lose your nerve my lad I've seen many a dead man and so will you before you die You

But you've never killed a man, as I have I am a murderer"

"Don't be so sure that I've never killed a man my lad Come along! Don't be afraid He can't hurt you now

It's no use He's dead,' groaned the boy I know I can see He hasn't moved I I didn't know it would look like that Why there's no shape to it I

Adam Carr grasped him by the arm and fairly dragged him off the bridge and into the path that led by devious windings to the bottom of the ravine The boy was sobbing but his eyes were wide and dry his lips were contorted by the unspeakable grin that denotes overpowering horror

"I didn't mean to do it" he cried over and over again He forced me to fight He was licking me when I hit him that time I couldn't have beat him Mr Carr The rail"

Stop talking," grated the man Don't whine about it It's done and that's all there is to it"

"I'm a murderer," groaned the miserable boy

"They said I'd do it some day They'll hang me Then what will become of Mary? Oh, why did I stand up to him" Why didn't I run""

"Because you're not that sort" snapped the detective Now shut your mouth. You've got to begin it sooner or later, and you'd better start in right now Not another word out of you Stop it I say'

Half-blind with horror, the unhappy youth stumbled along in the trail of Adam Carr It did not enter his mind to flee from the hated spot He followed as if hypnotized

They were five minutes in reaching the spot where Chetwynd lay, a crushed, spineless mass. Eric threw himself down beside the body, pleading in accent wild for a word, a single word from the lips of his late adversary

Get back commanded Adam sharply Let me attend to this.' He took the boy's place In a moment he arose, and shook his head 'It's all up with him. Dead as a mackerel"

"Try again' Maybe he's breathing Try his heart" cried the wretched Eric "We must go for a doctor I'll go You look after him

"No use my lad He's done for He'll never bother you again he'll steal no more drawings from you he'll but we'll talk about that later on Here' Grab hold of his legs.

Eric shrank back, aghast. "What—what are you going to do?"

"Hide it I mean him under that clump of vines over there" Eric still held back The man looked at him for a moment and then laid his hand on his shoulder "See here, Eric,' he said, a wonderful kindness in his voice, no one knows of this but you and me No one ever need know He's just disappeared that's all disappeared forever People do that sort of thing sometimes And here his eyes narrowed let me tell you this your cousin had the best reason in the world for skipping out"

I don't understand,' murmured the bewildered Eric

You will when I explain Take hold of him Don't be afraid We'll hide him until after dark"

Eric shook his head dully "No, I can't do that, Mr Carr It's wrong"

"Didn't you hear what I said about being the only witness?" demanded Adam, 'No one will ever find you out, depend on that"

"I've got to tell Uncle Horace,' cried Eric, twisting his fingers. "I've just got to."

'Well, if you won't you won't," said the man grimly "Stay where you are. I'll do it myself"

Eric shuddering, turned his back while the other man took up the limp figure and, groaning under its weight, struggled across the rocks to the dense clump of vines that sprang from the base of the wall.

"Now you can look,' he remarked coolly, a few minutes later He had covered the body in the mass of green vines.

Eric looked on dumbly as the older man, with furtive glances aloft and up and down the dark crevasse, began a thorough and systematic search of the ground, his methods not unlike those of a dog smelling out a buried bone. He picked up a match-safe and pieces of the broken crystal of the dead man's open-faced watch. A few scattered coins, part of a gold collar button that had been snapped in two by the strain on the band, the top of a fountain pen—nothing seemed to escape the trained eye of the searcher, who worked with a swiftness that was amazing. For yards in every direction he scanned the ground. At last, with a satisfied grunt, he gave over the search and began to wash the spattered blood stains from the rocks, scooping up water from the trickling rivulet that seeped through a crack in the wall

Young Midthorne, limp as a rag, sat on a boulder his chin in his hands, and watched these proceedings as if fascinated.

Adam came over and touched him on the shoulder "Let's get out of this,' he said sharply Without a word, Eric arose and followed him up the detile. Not a word was spoken until they came out upon the ledge far above. The young man walked as if in a dream. He was completely under the spell exercised by this calm, emotionless master of destiny.

They seemed to be utterly alone in the world, these two. The placid landscape held no other living creature save themselves

After a swift, penetrating glance about him, Adam Carr strode out upon the bridge, motioning his companion to remain where he was He renewed his careful search At its conclusion, he calmly kicked away all that remained of the broken rail. It clattered upon the rocks far below, bringing a sharp quiver of alarm to the silent watcher.

I guess there's nothing left to give us away," remarked Adam, as coolly as if he were speaking of the most trivial thing in the world. "Now, I'll give you a few pointers, Eric. You can take my advice or leave it just as you please, death, or mine. We'll go up there but I want you to understand that I am your friend and you can depend on me to the day of your on Bud's Rock and talk it over."

The long shadow of the rock stretched out below them on the slate colored plain The late afternoon sun had slipped down behind the upper ridge Through Eric's dazed, torpid mind ran the incongruous thought that Joan and Mary were in from their peaceful, happy drive through the shady lanes. He sat beside Adam Carr on the grassy slope staring before him with blurred eyes as the man's low, insistent voice kept forever pounding at his intelligence

"You are not morally guilty, my lad, so get it out of your mind What happened was an accident It might just as well have been you who went off the bridge You

"Why are you saying all this to me?" asked Eric, out of his stupor.

"I want to help you You must be saved It wasn't your fault, you say I believe you, Eric, but I've had so much to do with courts and juries and public opinion that I am in a position to know the world would doubt your story Your uncle and aunt knew that you hated Chetwynd Do you suppose they'd believe you now? No, my lad. They'd say you waylaid him, knocked him on the head, and tumbled him into the cut You have no witnesses, and I could not help you. I saw nothing but the end of the row For all I know, you may have attacked him and he was defending himself as best he could. You may have struck him first from behind I have only your word for it. I should have to testify that I saw you strike him and knock him through the rail My testimony wouldn't help you any Besides, they would have proof that you had your own reasons for killing him in cold blood I know all about his mistreatment of Mary, and I know that you charge him with taking your drawing I know everything there is to know about his actions during the past three weeks I've been watching him all the time. Let me tell you this he's better off dead"

But I—I didn't mean to do it, I swear I didn't," murmured Eric

That's why I say you are not actually guilty. In any event, it was self defense If it were not for your well known hatred for him, your own word might be taken for that But you had threatened to kill him. At least, so he told your uncle and aunt and Judge Bright on more than one occasion"

I never threatened to kill him," cried Eric, in a cold perspiration. "He lied, if he said so"

"That's what I told Judge Bright. The judge doesn't believe it of you, but at the same time if he were called upon to testify he would have to say that Chetwynd told him that he was afraid of you It would be bad for you. Now, if you'll be guided by me, you can save yourself It—it might mean hanging, my lad and God knows you don't deserve punishment of any kind"

'But he dead They'll search for him They'll find his body I—I never could stand up and deny it if they accused me of it"

"Now, listen to me," said Adam Carr, earnestly, fixing the boy with his keen eyes. "They won't find him. I'll see to that. I'm going to stand by you in this business, but you've got to stand by me You've got to keep your lips closed forever I can't afford to be mixed up in it, don't you see? I'm supposed to hunt down men, not to assist them in escaping"

"I can't do it'" groaned the boy.

"See here! Answer me this question: did you deliberately, wantonly kill your cousin?"

"No' God knows I didn't."

Crisis Faces Islam.

From the Indianapolis News.

With the fall of Constantinople to the Musselmans, Europe paled. The east had at last come face to face with the west, and it was an east of military prowess, of strange intellect, of pomp and misery, of religious devotion and political corruption Faces, costumes, tongues were alien. The capture of Constantinople bridged the physical gulf between Asia and Europe, but the abyss which separated east from west endured The koran was set against the bible Islam against Christianity, the Prophet Mohammed against Jesus the Christ Then arose that dazzling chain of sultans, the first of whom took as his title, 'The Shadow of God Upon Earth."

Mehmed V, the reigning sultan, is about the thirtieth of his line. There may be more, there may be fewer, but each has had his peculiar distinction, if not in war, in magnificence The rise of the Mohammedan power followed Mohammed II quickly It seemed as if the deluge had broken through, and the prophet's flag was carried almost to the gates of Vienna ere Europe could concentrate strength sufficient for the time. When the Bulgarian royal family renounced Christianity for Islam the government of Italy and northern Europe became panic stricken. Pope Boniface IX preached a crusade, and, in years, the invading tide receded. But it was not until the Russo-Turkish war, or those which followed, that the hold of Turkey on the Balkan kingdoms, originally Christian, was weakened. Islam, centuries ago, helped to sow the seeds of discontent in the Balkans, which, within the last few years, were harvested in two wars. In these the flag of the prophet was drawn fairly into the city of Constantinople, but afterward was set up in Adrianople and elsewhere which the erstwhile foes of Islam were fighting among themselves.

But Islam today meets a different task Its capital originally seized, is the prize once more. The Turks have a habit of calling Constantinople Oummondunia, "The Mother of the World." Napoleon once called it "The Empire of the World." The pious Mussulman thinks of it to this day as Der el Saadet, "The City of Felicity."

Gambling with dice and cards has prevailed from the earliest times. We do not read of gambling houses in the classic literature of Greece, but there can be no doubt that the vice was very widely practiced in private houses. In Rome, under the emperors, gambling prevailed very extensively. Augustus and most of the succeeding sovereigns were passionately fond of the dice, and the Emperor Claudius wrote a book on the subject. A Roman would transport to a gaming resort his whole fortune—coins, papers and chattels—and, after losing all, would even seize the cloaks of his slaves to stake on a change of luck.

An Oil Burning Range with a "Three-in-One" Oven

You have a splendid range and a fireless cooker combined in this new NEW PERFECTION with the insulated oven. It bakes or roasts either fast or slow, or you can seal the oven and turn out the flame and cook by the easy, economical "fireless" method.

The insulation that makes this wonderful convenience possible saves so much money in fuel bills that a NEW PERFECTION soon earns its moderate price.

It burns clean, convenient, economical oil—which also means no more carrying of coal or wood or cleaning out ashes.

Price Low—The price of this NEW PERFECTION with the Insulated Oven is extremely reasonable. It costs little more than a good fireless cooker, less than the average coal range, while giving you the service of both. You can see it at your dealer's in two sizes. Ask him for the latest NEW PERFECTION Wick Blue Flame OIL COOK STOVE with the Fireless Cooker Oven. Look for the triangle trademark.

The Most Sensational Light Car Upon the American Market

C. W. WILES

A runaway accident happened to Father Peter's last week when R. W. Stephenson's young driving horse came to town alone in the evening a distance of three miles and dropped dead at the rear of R. E. Hanson's veterinary barn. The horse was sick, and about a week before was morbid and was brought to town and Veterinarian Hanson doctored it and the animal became alright. The horse on becoming ill again evidently thought he would go to the doctor himself, but as it was late at night and the doctor was not at the office relief was not obtainable and the horse was discovered dead early in the morning. The old saying "Telephone, Don't walk," would have been used probably if the horse could have talked. However, this episode is a good advertisement for Mr. Hanson, and further goes to show that animals know more than they are given credit for.—Forest City Summit.

The Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church delightfully surprised Mrs. W. M. Kirkwood at the H. W. Jensen home last Thursday afternoon. The party was given for Mrs. Kirkwood as a recognition of the valuable services she has given to the organization during her years of residence here and she was presented with a set of fine silver knives and forks as a remembrance of the occasion. She has been a hard worker in the Ladies Aid and will be missed when she moves to West Bend.—Ringsted Dispatch.

Miss Roxanna Schaper was elected president of the Germantown Epworth League at their annual election of officers Wednesday evening. Seventeen new members were added to the list, making a total membership of eighty young people for Klemme and Germantown, and others are expected to join soon. Meetings are held every Sunday evening before the preaching service, and a prosperous future is looked for.

The Epworth League of the German M. E. church held their election of officers last Wednesday evening. Following are the officers which were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Ralph Ludeke; 1st vice-president, Mrs. Witter; 2nd vice-president, Minnie Lenz; 3rd. vice-president Esther Gruetzmacher; 4th vice president, Hulda Gruetzmacher; Secretary, Viva Ridder; Treasurer, Martha Lau; Organist, Hulda Gruetzmacher.

The Klemme ball team journeyed over to Rockwell Tuesday, for their first game of the season with the fast Rockwell semi-pro team and were defeated 6 to 1. The Klemme boys went over rather short handed and feel that they done pretty well to hold down Rockwell's fast team as well as they did. This was the locals first game this year while Rockwell has played ten and won eight of them, meeting some of the fastest teams in the county. The score was 1 and 1 up to the seventh inning.

Klemme will celebrate. That should be joyous news to the people of this committee. At a meeting of the Commercial Club last Friday night it was unanimously decided to make the eagle scream in Klemme this year, and as the 4th falls on Sunday, Saturday, July 3rd. was selected as the day. Various committees were appointed and they have already commenced to act and a rousing celebration is being planned. The surrounding community will understand that Klemme never pulled off a celebration that was not a hummer an it is planned to make this the best ever. Do not let anything alter your plans to be with us, Saturday, July 3rd and come early and stay late.

FORMS COCAINE HABIT IN STORE

Sixteen-Year-Old Boy Is Wreck as Result of Use of Drugs.

TOTTERS INTO COURT

Judge Comments on His Pitiable Condition and Sends Him to an Institution Where He Will Be Cured.

New York.—Magistrate Appleton, in Yorkville court, saved from prison Joseph Ryan, sixteen years old, a cocaine victim, who lives with his parents at 1414 Second avenue. The boy was sent to the Central Islip hospital, to be cured of the drug habit.

"This is most pitiable," said Magistrate Appleton, as the boy, thin and tottering, was led before him. "What on earth are you trying to do, young fellow? Are you trying to commit suicide?"

The boy did not answer. He had been employed in a drug store in Broadway, and there, he confessed to the police, had fallen into the habit of pilfering cocaine and using it. He told also of going to the East Seventy-fourth street dock, which is a rendezvous, he said, of boys with whom he shared his drugs.

Detective John J. Kilroy of the Second branch detective bureau said he had been watching the boy's odd actions for three weeks and suspected he was using a girl of his own age as a go-between in the drug trafficking.

Ryan's parents had noticed him growing thin and haggard of late, but did not know the cause of it.

"Cigarettes are bad enough for a young fellow of your age," said Magis-

"What on Earth Are You Trying to Do, Young Fellow?"

trate Appleton. "You will be able to overcome this awful habit just as you can give up cigarettes. Instead of sending you to prison, I will send you to [illegible] at Central Islip, L. I., where you will be cared for without charge. [illegible] Now be off with you."

LOST BOY IN WITH [illegible]

"Jodie," Aged Seventeen, Thinks He Is John Jones, Dollar Watch Young.

Los Angeles, Cal.—"JoJo" once was a white boy. That is because he is dark, and now Probation Officer Holmes of Los Angeles is trying to make him a white boy again.

The boy is seventeen and has the most peculiar history of any youth ever within reach of the juvenile court. "JoJo" was known to John Jones—at least he thinks. The Indians who took him when he was a small boy couldn't pronounce the name, so they did the next best thing. They made an attempt, and "JoJo" was the result.

The difficulty encountered by the boy in recovering his name as a full blooded white boy is a manifestation of the morals due to lack of attention in his early years as was with the Indians. This the probation officer believes has made him backward mentally. It is believed, however, this can be corrected.

Forestry service experiments have demonstrated that the strength of a piece of wood may be seriously impaired by slight compression failures due to rough handling Dropping a beam across a skid may cause a compression failure at the point at which the beam strikes the skid, and it will be at this point that the beam gives way when it breaks under a strain too severe for the weakened fibers to withstand. Hitherto unaccountable breakage in hickory wagon spokes and other presumably strong materials are now attributed to compression failures caused by wind storms in the period of growth or by hard usuage in lumbering and manufacturing processes. These compression failures show themselves in the form of little diagonal streaks or wrinkles across the grain, and are always a sure sign of weakness.

Property owners in the United States were assessed a total of $1,350,000,000 for taxes in 1912, or $13.91 per capita, according to a census report, an increase of 86 per cent, over the total levy for 1902 The assessed valuation of real estate and other property subject to tax totaled $69,453,000,000, almost twice as much as in 1902. Under this estimate there was $715.48 worth of property for each person in the country in 1912 New York state's levy for all purposes in 1912 was $221-467,000. Pennsylvania was second highest with $93,375,000. Illinois was next, with $84,834,000, followed closely by Massachusetts with $82,566 000. New York s per capita was $22.80 Pennsylvania $11.52 Illinois $14.37, and Massachusetts $23 27

VICTIMS OF "HEIRESS" WHITAKER MAY PROVE TO BE HARD LOSERS

Besiege Office of County Attorney—Woman Stands Pat.

Des Moines, Ia., June 19.—The office of the county attorney yesterday was besieged by persons who sought his advice about the return of money given to Mrs. S. D. Whitaker that they might share in the inheritance of Sir Francis Drake when the $400,000,000, she said was due, had been collected. She is under arrest and an attorney from Chicago came yesterday to defend her in any prosecution.

Some of the prominent lawyers who invested in the prospect of getting something out of the estate declare they are satisfied there will be some money coming to them and they will not back out.

The whole scheme appears to have been broken up, but Mrs. Whitaker maintains she has done nothing that is illegal. The matter will go to the grand jury.

RUSSIAN WHO FLED FROM WAR NOW WORKS FOR CZAR

Webster City, Ia , June 19.—M. Boynoff, of this city, is just in receipt of a letter from his nephew, Geo. Boynoff, of New York city, bringing news that the latter is now in the employ of the Russian government buying ammunition in the United States for delivery to the forces of the czar Russian arms, ammunition and horses bought in this country are shipped to the battle front over a route which takes many weeks, via Pacific coast points, across the Pacific to Vladivostok and thence through Asia and Europe to the eastern battle line.

Mr. Boynoff has been in the United States only eight months. His home is near Odessa, a port on the Black sea He left Russia at the very outbreak of the war, bound for the United States and freedom. He was two months, however, in getting here, having to travel by a round about route in order to avoid apprehension. He studied medicine in Switzerland.

Arriving in New York city, he made his home with relatives. Recently he became acquainted with one of the attache's of the Russian embassy in this country This diplomat took a liking to young Boynoff, who is well educated and has a good business address. Because of this he offered him a government position as an agent in this country for Russia.

MUTT AND JEFF ROBBED MASON CITY BARBER SHOP

Mason City Ia , June 19 —According to reports received today from Charles City, there is no clue to the holdup of last night The dogs failed to get scent of the thieves Two men entered the Beach barber shop, and unmasked, demanded that the 12 men who were in the shop hold up their hands. There was an immediate compliance and the two men deliberately commenced searching pockets and took their time to it and secured in all some $35 They didn't seem to care for watches or jewelry They wanted nothing but cash When they had completed the job they disappeared and there was too much consternation in the barber shop to quickly get busy on the job. It occurred about 10 30 o'clock and at that time there were a number of people on the street The Waterloo blood hounds were used One man was tall and the other very short

EAGLES OF IOWA LEAN TOWARD BORDER CITIES

Iowa City Ia June 19 Two things featured the Iowa state convention of Eagles here today The first was the announcement that delegates would favor river towns for future conventions, for the reason that Iowa was going "dry" in 1916, and the fact that Illinois Eagles had promised to meet in Rock Island on the date of the Iowa, 1916, convention if it was held in Davenport. The second was the beginning of a scrap between W H Bronson, of Des Moines, and Charles Saas, of Davenport, for the secretaryship Frank Hassel, of Burlington, will be elected president

DES MOINES MEN ARE EAGER CONTRIBUTORS TO HEIRSHIP SCHEME

Strange Woman Secures $2,-100 Before Game Is Stopped By County Attorney.

Des Moines, Ia., June 19.—County Attorney Wilson, Sheriff Griffin and Deputy Charles Miller yesterday afternoon interrupted Mrs. Sudie B. Whitaker's "get rich quick" scheme when they arrested her at her apartments in the Chamberlain hotel and took charge of a portion of her papers, "contracts" and "certificates." She claimed to be heir to half of "the $400,000,000 estate of Sir Francis Drake," and was issuing certificates of stock to those who helped her, financially, in prosecuting her claims.

Mrs. Whitaker was charged with obtaining money by false pretenses and gave a $2,000 bond signed by Frank Hall, president of the Corn Belt Land & Loan company. Clint Hartzell, of Leslie, an investor to the extent of $100, was arrested when he attempted to help get away with Mrs. Whitaker's purse by her instructions, and was released under a bond of $750, signed also by Hall. Mrs. Whitaker will be given a hearing on June 28.

Mrs. Sudie B. Whitaker was raking in the coin right and left when Deputy Miller entered parlor "H" yesterday afternoon. The room was filled with men and even after the arrest had been made and Mrs. Whitaker was preparing to accompany the officer, an assistant continued filling out contracts.

County Attorney Wilson said last night that Mrs. Whitaker had told him she had collected more than $2,100 of Des Moines money since coming here two days ago.

Following is a partial list of reported investors in the scheme:

Hubert Utterback, district judge, $50.
I. T. Jones, attorney, $33.
A. D. Pugh, attorney, $33
C. S. Cooter, attorney, $133.
W. H. Curry, hardware dealer, $50.
C. L. Magee, proprietor dairy lunch, 1177 Twenty-Fourth street, $150.
W. D. Baldwin, deputy county clerk, $50.
O. H Olson, $50.
John B. Dorman, agent for school equipment, 312 Polk building, $100.
John Conroy, justice, $100.
Martin Conroy, contractor, $200.
Frank L. Hall, president Corn Belt Land and Loan company, $100.
Dr. A. L. Cochran, Cumming, $800.
Oscar M. Hartzell, 1163 Twenty-Sixth street, $2,100.
Canfield Hartzell, proprietor Locust lunch, $100.
Clinton Hartzell, Leslie, Ia., $100.
Hugh Reynolds, proprietor pool hall, 212 Fourth street, $200.
Nathan Hansford, engineer Valley Junction, $100
M Cahill, engineer, Valley Junction, $25
Not a few of the investors had "alibis" yesterday afternoon.

W D. Baldwin, deputy county clerk, declared that "some men had some money to invest and that he took it up and spent it for them"

Justice Conroy, before whom the woman and Hartzell were arraigned, said that he had given a non-negotiable note for $100

"I could not sue on it, it was non-negotiable and I was to pay nothing now," he said. "In case the estate ever was realized they were to take the $100 investment out of my share."

BOY CORN RAISERS BATTLE WEATHER DISCOURAGEMENTS

Logan, Ia., June 19 —Heavy rains, washouts and abnormally low temperatures have not been sufficient to discourage the boys, who are enrolled in Harrison county acre corn contest Professor Elderidge, of Ames college, and County Leader M A Humphrey have been touring the county this week and they find that nearly all of the original entries still have their hats in the ring, in spite of the backward spring and that they will continue on the fighting line until the last treasured ear of corn strikes the bumpboard Promoters of the contest declare the spirit manifested among the boys, in this respect, might well be emulated by the adult corn raisers, often too easily discourage by unfavorable conditions.

MASON CITY BOARD NOT DISPOSED TO ARBITRATE

Mason City, Ia., June 19 —At the present time it does not look as if there would be a satisfactory adjustment of the school trouble on here, over building a high school building, and the $300 000 bonds voted for that purpose The citizens' committee has waited on the board of education and explained the position of the protestors but the board is standing pat and state that during the winter they called into consultation 20 of the influential business men, and after going over the needs of the city the plan as submitted to the voters at the recent election was agreed to by all. At the election it carried by 30 votes, that there was no legal voting and that the count was an honest one They decline, therefore, to recount the ballots, annul the election, call a new election or slice down the amount voted in aid. If this is final on the part of the board, the move now of the citizens' committee will be to get a recount through order of the court and an injunction restraining the board from further action until the legality of the election is determined.

BLACK HAWK TREASURER SENDS OUT CLARION CALL

Waterloo, Ia., June 19.—Claiming that county treasurers have not been receiving the salaries they are entitled to under the statutes, F. T. Bentley, of Waterloo, former treasurer of Black Hawk county, is sending out letters seeking assignment of salary claims of the various county treasurers, preparatory to some kind of action to collect the balance due.

Just what Bentley has discovered in the laws to furnish the basis of his scheme, does not appear in the correspondence he is sending out. That he sees a chance to make enough money to make it worth while to proceed with legal action, seems evident, however, from the nature of the printed assignment and contract he sends out.

CHARLES WESLEY FLINT NEW PRESIDENT CORNELL COLLEGE

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 17.—Charles Wesley Flint, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been elected president of Cornell college, Mount Vernon. Dr. Flint is a native of Ontario, Canada, a graduate of Victoria college, Toronto, and has held various charges in Iowa, Connecticut and New York. He is president of the eastern New York conference board of education.

The presidency of Cornell has been vacant since the death of Dr. William F. King, which occurred a year ago.

DES MOINES COUNCIL FINALLY DECIDES TO FULFILL AGREEMENT

Action Taken to Deed State All Street Areas Involved In Extension Tract.

Des Moines, Ia., June 18.—Following an extended controversy, the Des Moines city council today voted to deed to the state all of the street areas involved in the famous capitol extension tract. An oral promise had been made that this would be done before the big appropriation bill was put through the 1913 legislative session, but later some members of the council were disposed to renig on the proposition.

The controlling idea in the action today was not so much one of generosity to the state as to avoid liability and expense for grading and caring for those streets. As the matter now stands, the preparation of the ground will be up to the state. A provisional agreement had been made, also, that the city would do the grading on these streets, but that promise is very likely to be sidstepped.

City officials claim that the grading on these extension streets would cost $15,000 and that they need the money for work in other sections of the city

In its completed form, the state capitol park will be a little more than 80 acres, as claimed by the criticis of the project If the succeeding legislatures carry out the Masqueray plans, the total cost of the park to the state will amount to more than $5,000,000.

UNGUARDED CHASM IS MENACE ON MAIN ROAD

Logan, Ia , June 18.—According to all appearances a serious accident was narrowly averted last evening when an auto came down the Clausen hill, along the winding public road to King creek, where a bridge over a deep gulch had been washed out by the heavy rains of a few weeks ago. View of the high embankment is obstructed because of intervening obstacles. However, the driver succeeded in bringing his car to a stop before taking the plunge. Three automobiles made the run down the Clausen hill yesterday on their way along the public highway to Logan, and came to a sudden stop near the unguarded brink of the high embankment

FURTHER SHAKEUP IS PREDICTED IN POLK COUNTY COURT HOUSE

Report of State Examiner Says Officials Have Been Guilty of Irregularities.

Des Moines, Ia., June 17.—A report of conditions in the county auditor's office and replete with disclosures of irregularities in that office in the past three years, is expected to result in prosecution of certain persons formerly connected with the office and may result, it is said, in certain present and former members of the board of county supervisors being forced to explain some alleged transactions to the Polk county grand jury.

According to the report, which is signed by State Examiner C. C. Hunt, the auditor's office was short nearly $100 on January 1, the amount having since been paid to the county treasurer The real feature of the report, however is the fact that the document is replete with disclosures regarding the apparent conduct of certain officials in the few months preceding February 15, 1915, although the record of irregularities extends back as far as 1912

The board of county supervisors is mentioned prominently on several occasions

County Attorney George Wilson yesterday went over the document and admitted that he will use it in his grand jury investigation of the auditor's office In fact, the official admitted tacitly that he has been awaiting the filing of the report for several weeks Expert accountants, employed by the state, have just completed the work of checking the office. The work was carried on quietly and it was not until a few days ago that persons about the court house had even an inkling of what was going on, it is said

Officials in the auditor's office were loath to give the document's contents "I wish you could pass this over for a while--at least until things are a little different," the deputy told a reporter who inquired for the report.

The deputy explained that he was thinking only of a certain employe who recently resigned, following the beginning of the county attorney's probe into the office.

The irregularities in the purchase of office postage are dwelt on at length in the "remarks" atttached by Examiner Hunt to the report The report itself shows that a shortage of $81.34 existed in the office January 1. A check paid to the county treasurer on January 25 made good this amount. County Attorney Wilson said at noon that former Chief Deputy Marion Keller paid this amount

Mr Wilson said that his investigation of the office shows that Keller also paid the $314 84 which was marked "to correct a postage account"

The report asserts that the board of supervisors received $600 on August 8, 1912, which never was receipted. This sum was later refunded.

ODEL DEFENDANT IN $75,000 SUIT FOR LIBEL

Des Moines, Ia., June 17 —M S. Odle, attorney and prominently identified with the Iowa Anti-Saloon league was served with an original notice by Deputy Sheriff Bonham yesterday in which E. D Marshall, attorney, states he will file a petition soon in the district court asking $15,000 damages for "slander and libel malicious and fraudulent prosecution and conversion of evidence" Marshall, it is understood, now is on a business trip to Nebraska. Odle declared that the first he knew of the intended suit was when he was served with notice by Deputy Bonham.

"I rented Marshall desk room in my office recently and was unable to collect my rent," said Odle. "I sued him and received a judgment of something like $80. I then garnished some of Marshall s money in the bank. I suppose this suit is a result of that action"

HARRISON COUNTY THEFT DISTURBING TO CONSCIENCE

Logan, Ia., June 17.—It is a calm belief among Iowa farmers that horse thieves could not flourish in these days, due to the extension of railroads, telegraph and telephone lines, and fast cross country transportation in automobiles. However, the confidence on this point has been somewhat jarred by the failure to get any trace of the valuable team stolen several weeks ago from the barn of L. L. Stafford, near Modale The owner of the team and neighboring farmers have posted a reward of $400, and police officers on both sides of the Missouri river have been co-operating in the search, but not one reliable clue has been secured Harrison county farmers are interested in pushing the search in order to discourage similar escapades. It is the general belief that the horses were not taken very far and that they are being hidden in a cave somewhere along the Missouri river bluffs.

FARMER HURT IN GAME; NEIGHBORS PLOW CORN

Odebolt, Ia., June 17.—Roxy Budd, a farmer living north of town, sustained a double fracture of a leg Sunday while playing baseball in a game between two neighborhood teams. Mr Budd is farming 160 acres without help, and on Monday the neighbors gathered at his home and plowed his corn.

IOWA STORY OF THRIFT INTERESTS EASTERN BANKERS

Rock Rapids, Ia., June 15.—Charles Shade, president of the First National bank of Rock Rapids, tells the story of the remarkable success of a young farmer of his vicinity who started in, empty handed, and in six years was able to buy a $28,000 farm. When the purchase was made he paid down $8,-00, gained in the six-year period $8,-and free and clear $6,700 worth of stock and machinery. The account of the farmer's progress was considered so striking by the National City bank of New York that it is retold in the bank's June letter

BIG BATTLES IN PROGRESS ON FRENCH FRONT

Struggles In Arras and Lens Regions Leaves Allies In Possession of Small Gains.

MILLION ENGAGED

Britain Believes Slow, Steady Pressure May Break Line, But Germans Are Holding on Doggedly.

London, June 21.—In what appears to be a death struggle of almost unprecedented ferocity even in this war of unprecedented fighting, 500,000 men, about equally divided on the German and French side are waging a terrific carnage in the region north of Arras, France. Tremendous losses appear to have been suffered by both sides.

A second battle of equal stubbornness and ferocity is raging in the Champagne and in Alsace. There the French have captured Altenhof and Hartmannsweilerkopf and claim to be driving forward on both banks of the River Aisne. Paris reports that the French are under the fire of their artillery, and German communications between Lille and Munster. One report declares that the Germans had set fire to Lille.

Capture Much Booty.

A large quantity of war material is reported to have fallen into the hands of the French in this region. A notably large quantity of rifles and cartridges is declared to have been captured. Included in the booty is the apparatus formerly used by the Germans in launching the deadly gases employed in the battles about Ypres.

In the battle north of Arras the troops have clashed with the bayonet in a rain of bursting shells and with hand grenades.

The French have encountered moats filled with water, barbed wire entanglements and other strongly defended positions, but London believes the battle is sweeping on in what may be a decisive conflict, one that will determine the German line and force a withdrawal of at least a large part of General Sir William Williams' armies now in northern France.

Still Holding On.

The French, according to the latest reports, are holding the Germans to the north of Arras. They now occupy positions on three sides of Souchez and this position may make the German position on this front untenable, in the opinion of British observers. Artillery duels are continuing with unabated fury.

The official report on the progress of hostilities issued by the French war office this afternoon says there is nothing to add to the communication of last night.

Sir John French, the British commander-in-chief, in an official report says the British still hold the trenches captured from the Germans east of Ypres and south of Festubert.

50 GERMANS TO PRISON.

Dunkirk, France, June 19 -A party of 1,150 German prisoners captured during the recent operations in Belgium passed through here last night. It was noticeable that many of the men were quite young.

MAN WILL DELIVER SPEECH IN NEW YORK

Former Secretary Plans Rest Up Next Week—Wilson Pays Last Call.

Washington, June 21.—William J. Bryan left today for New York, where he will make a peace address in Carnegie hall tonight. It will be his first public utterance since he resigned as secretary of state.

Returning early tomorrow the former secretary will spend a few hours here before leaving with Mrs. Bryan for Asheville, N. C., for a brief sojourn. They are being kept busy receiving callers in official and diplomatic life who call to pay their respects. President Wilson paid a brief social call at the Bryan home late yesterday. The international situation was not discussed.

Mr. Bryan reiterated that there were no material differences on questions of policy between himself and the president except those that arose over the German submarine controversy. Mr. Bryan's statement was made in connection with reports circulated since his resignation that he had been ignored by the president while secretary of state, the truthfulness of which he has denied.

CZARS HESITATE TO ASSIST ALLIES

Editorial Offers Satisfactory Terms Must Be Confirmed By Neighbors.

London, June 21.—Rumors as plentiful as contradictory emanate from the capitals that the entente allies have offered Bulgaria generous territorial concessions, which special dispatches from Petrograd declare to be absolutely satisfactory. Nevertheless, it is evident that no definite alliance yet has been signed, and will not be until Bulgaria's neighbors have made the concessions she has been constantly demanding.

BRITISH PRISONERS ORGANIZE GOLF CLUB

Berlin, (via London), June 19.—The British prisoners at Ruhleben have organized the first concentration camp golf club. The interned golfers devote their spare time and attention

"SOME" VOICE, ANYHOW!

SILENCE NO LONGER THE RULE WITH W. J. BRYAN AS A CITIZEN

"More like his old self" than he has been at any time since he took over the secretaryship of state, was the description given of William J. Bryan in dispatches from Washington the day after he resigned. As secretary he had made a record for silence on all matters connected with American foreign affairs. Released from that office, he has freely sought the public prints, as the following record shows:

		Words

AUSTRIA SENDING IN CRACK TROOPS

Italians Claim Steady Progress and Have Occupied More Territory Than Vienna Offered to Yield.

Rome, Jan. 21 -The Italian invasion of Austria which is being pushed all along the frontier, is said by newspapers of Rome to have resulted thus far in the occupation of more than twice as much territory as was offered by Austria as the price of Italy's neutrality. A communication from the Italian general staff states that the Austrian fortress of Malborgeth is being demolished. Malborgeth is about 20 miles for Villach. This city, Trent and Trieste constitute the three present objective points of the Italians.

The reported shelling of the railroad station at Gorizia indicates that the Italian artillery batteries have been considerably advanced in the past two or three days.

Italians Make Air Raids.

Along the Isonzo front the battle on which hinges the fate of Trieste is assuming larger proportions. Austria has sent in reinforcements of her finest troops. A raid by Italian aeroplanes and dirigibles inflicted considerable damage on Austrian fortifications and railway stations on the Isonzo front.

Reports from all the fronts, state that strong bodies of first line troops, especially the emperor's own troops, Croatians, Bohemians and Hungarians, have been substituted for the Austrian gendarmes, customs guard and soldiers of the landstrum. All these first line soldiers have been hardened by over 10 months of war and make formidable adversaries. It is reported that Lieutenant General Count Cadorna, chief of staff of the Italian army, said regarding these troops

"Now we have foemen worthy of our steel."

Now Fight Discreatly.

The Italian Alpine troops themselves realize the difference and fight with greater circumspection, as was proven Wednesday afternoon when more than 1,000 Hungarians, commanded by a lieutenant colonel, again tried to take revenge for the Austrian reverse on Monte Nero. This time the Hungarians climbed Vrata mountain, hoping from that height, to dominate the Italian positians and outflank them.

Italian Alpine troops gradually surrounded Vrata creeping through the undergrowth. For some time they did not reply to the Hungarians' fire, it being a rule among the Alpine soldiers not to shot unless they can kill at least one adversary. Finally the moment came when, the Hungarians being within close range, the Alpine troops poured in a rain of bullets and then sprang out with fixed bayonets. The Hungarians were repulsed in confusion and tried to escape, but found the Alpine soldiers emerging from every side. Every member of the Hungarian battalion was either killed or taken prisoner.

Lieut Gen Count Cadorna summed up all this by saying that the Hungarians "were repulsed, counter attacked, and annihilated."

GRODEK MAY MARK END OF CAMPAIGN

Russians Preparing For Desperate Struggle Along Fortified Line In Front of Lemberg.

London June 21. -The forces of Russia are at bay along the Grodek line in Galicia, to the west of Lemberg where, with her vulnerable flank well protected by the marshes of the Dniester, she will defend Lemberg, the capital of Galicia. Neither side, however, reports much activity during the last 24 hours. The outstanding claim being that from Petrograde to the effect that the Austro-Germans have been hurled back into Austrian territory between the Dniester river and the River Pruth.

The Austro-German troops in pursuit of the retreating Russians have crossed the Galician border to the north of Sieniawa and have reached the heights north of Krezow, Russia, and occupied the Russian town of Tarnogrod, according to an official communication issued by the Vienna war office.

It has been said by experts the battle of Grodek may mark the final effort of the Russians to prevent their line from being broken. It is generally believed that this struggle will mark the crisis and the definite turning point in the great campaign in Galicia.

RUSSIANS PREPARING FOR GREAT STAND AT LEMBERG

Berlin, June 19, (via London).—A correspondent in Galicia of the Lokal Anzieger has sent the following dispatch to his paper:

"Aviators report that the Russians are fortifying heavily along a line, 10 miles to the west of Lemberg German advance patrols furthermore have established that the Russians are making a stand in front of them. If necessary, the Russian present line can be lengthened in the direction of Tomasz 'f in Russian Poland by the addition of whatever Russian forces are available. Conditions of the Russians are not favorable, but the railroads and highways radiating from Lemberg are of the greatest value to them for defensive purposes."

ADVERTISERS WILL BOOST HOME TRADE

Millions of Dollars In Sight For American Manufacturers, They Say.

Chicago, June 21.—Advertising men swarmed into Chicago today to attend the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, which opens tomorrow. The convention will continue a week. It is expected that 10,000 delegates will be in attendance.

William Woodhead, of San Francisco, president of the association, said that the convention would be the biggest in the history of the organization.

"Made in the U. S. A." is the slogan the convention is going to attempt to put into the mouths of every manufacturer and every consumer in the country, President Woodhead said

"The word 'imported' is not going to mean so much to our people in the future," he said "Untold millions of dollars worth of goods have been imported into the United States that can and hereafter will be manufactured in this country."

President Woodhead predicted that a great rush of business would sweep the country as a result of a readjustment of conditions caused by the European war.

GENERAL GOETHALS TO RETIRE FROM SERVICE

Washington, D. C., June 19.—Major General Goethals, governor of the Panama canal zone, will be retired from the army upon his own application some time this fall. Under an act of congress General Goethals is eligible for retirement at his pleasure.

POPE WARNS VIENNA.

Geneva, June 19 —The vatican is reported to have warned Austria that if aeroplanes attack Rome, imperiling lives and property with bombs, the holy see will break off diplomatic relations with the Austrian government.

TEUTONS NOW HOLD 1,600,000 PRISONERS

Berlin, (via London), June 19 Prisoners taken by German and Austro-Hungarian armies up to June 14 totaled 1,610,000, according to the Bavarian Staats Zeitung. The newspaper says this total is divided as follows:

Russians, 1,240,000, French, 255,000, English, 24,000, Belgians, 41,000; Serbians, 50,000

DEMOCRATIC STOCK AT PAR, HE THINKS

Maurice Connolly Says Recent Events and Trade Revival Means 1916 Victory.

Washington June 21 That a transformation has occurred in the country, politically, in the last three months is asserted by former Representative Maurice Connolly

He said several months ago he traveled through many states of the west and found the people blaming the democrats and the administration for hard times and was not impressed with the democratic prospects. Lately in going over the same ground he found a marked change, with republicans no longer sure of a 1916 victory

He says Wilson has made such a great impression on the country that no other democrat will be considered for the nomination and if the democrats can win at all, they can win with Wilson

Business has improved in all sections to a very marked degree," said Mr Connolly "Everywhere I found optimism Business men appear to realize we are at a point where we can become the greatest nation of the world commercially, and if we do not seize the opportunity we have only ourselves to blame I believe we shall be equal to the occasion."

STEEL CORPORATION PLANS ZINC FACTORY

Structure to Cost $3,000,000 Will Be Built at Pittsburgh, Says Gary.

New York, June 21.—The United States Steel corporation will build a new plant near Pittsburgh, probably at Donora, for the manufacture of zinc and byproducts, at a cost of from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000, according to announcement yesterday by Chairman Elbert H Gary Operations will be started if possible before January 1, next.

Judge Gary's statement in part follows:

"We have for some years been considering the building of such a plant in order to supply materials for our own use.

"The market for the products of the plant is largely in the Pittsburgh district and for this reason and the further reason that it is a good point for the assembly of raw materials, we have selected this location."

RUSSIA COMMANDEERS MUNITIONS FACTORIES

Berlin, (via London), June 19.—The National Zeitung's correspondent on the Russian border, who repeatedly has shown himself to be well informed, sends a dispatch saying that the Russian war ministry has ordered the military appropriation of all factories capable of making ammunition. The correspondent says that despite the fact that Russian ammunition factories are working three shifts of men, the production still lacks much of covering the gigantic consumption.

INTRIGUE AGAINST JOFFRE REVEALED

Plot to Elevate Gallieni Falls Through—Lack Guns and Shells to Smash 544-Mile Line.

The Hague, June 21 —According to authoritative information reaching here the failure of General Joffre to deliver an overwhelming attack on the German lines this spring is due to a miscalculation in the number of guns and the quantity of ammunition necessary to smash a strongly fortified line, 544 miles long

As the result of this Paris is in the throes of an acute political agitation very similar to that which led to the formation of the coalition cabinet in London but with the important difference that the censors in Paris have kept the public in complete ignorance of the existence of the crisis.

Discontent at the progress of the war has manifested itself in two movements among deputies and senators:

1 An attempt has been made to place General Gallieni above General Joffre.

2 The malcontents have intrigued for the overthrow of War Minister Millerand and Marine Minister Augagneur.

Both Movements Fail.

Neither movement has succeeded. Senator Paul Doumer former governor general of Indo-China and now member of the arm commission of the senate led the intrigue to displace Joffre. It has been said against Joffre that, although in his official statements he frequently states that the French army holds the military initiative and that the Germans are reduced to the defensive, he has so far failed to take advantage of his power of initiative by driving the Germans from French soil.

His excessive prudence and his unwillingness to sacrifice a single soldier in an uncertain offensive have driven senators in a hurry into an ecstasy of impatience, and they began a movement to displace him with Gallieni, whom they regard as a ruthless man of action, capable of blazing and hacking his way through enemy lines in the Hindenburg fashion

The plot quickly broke down, however, mainly because of Joffre's tremendous popularity with the army as a whole, and also with the French public

Clemenceau In Intrigue.

The movement against Millerand was generalled by Clemenceau and his friends, who sought to fix upon the war minister responsibility for the inadequate supply of big ammunition and guns for the spring campaign. M. Clementel, a former war minister, was named as Millerand's successor. But Clemenceau, as the cleverest parliamentary tactician in France, first sounded opinion in the chamber and senate, and refrained from striking openly when he found that Millerand still had the confidence and support of nearly all parties.

Augagneur is blamed for the unsuccessful diversion of invaluable military strength to the Dardanelles. He continues to hold office, however, because his overthrow on that ground alone would convey a rebuke to the British admiralty, the more so because it was the British who took the lead in those operations, Augagneur merely acquiescing.

Meanwhile an intensive munitions campaign has been undertaken by Senator Humbert and others, who daily urge that the whole of France must be converted into a gigantic workshop operating behind and feeding the army with guns, shot and shell.

FRANK'S FATE WILL BE MADE KNOWN SOON

Atlanta, Ga., June 19.—Governor Slaton at his country home, continuing his exhaustive study of the case of Leo M. Frank, under sentence to be hanged next Tuesday for the murder of Mary Phagan, said today he probably would not be prepared to announce his decision on Frank's application for commutation of his sentence to life imprisonment until Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning.

In China and Japan bells are clapperless and never are swung, their tone being produced by striking them or the outside with wooden mallets.

DO NOT WANT UNCLE SAM AS AN ARBITER

German Writers Say Mediation Offers From America Are Not Welcome.

Berlin, June 21, (via London).—The Morgan Post, commenting on a dispatch from Washington to the Cologne Gazette, setting forth that the question of peace is being discussed, says that Americans know full well that the self-constituted peace maker never is welcome; consequently he is not likely to force his advice where it is not wanted Dr. Ignaz Jastrow, president of political economy in the University of Berlin, discusses in the Tageblatt, the impossibility of accepting the United States as an arbiter, so long as Americans deliver weapons to the opponents of Germany. "In so much as every state can forbid the export of arms," the doctor says, 'we wonder how Americans can fail to see that this is prolonging the war, and how they can believe it is possible for them to act as peace mediators."

SEGREGATION LAW VALID.

Frankfort, Ky., June 19.—Constitutionality of the Louisville, Ky., segregation ordinance, designed to prevent people of either the white or the colored race occupying for a home or as a place of public assemblage a building located in a block, a majority of the residents of which are of the other race, was upheld in a decision yesterday by the Kentucky court of appeals.

OKLAHOMAN KILLED.

Washington, June 19.—Gilbert Teanhil, of Oklahoma City, Okla., superintendent of a Mexican mine, was killed while interfering in a private quarrel near Charcas, Mex., Wednesday A dispatch to the state department from Consul Bonny, at San Luis Potosi, today, announced that three arrests had been made.

REINSCH IN TOKIO.

Tokio, Japan, June 19.—Dr. Paul M. Reinsch United States minister to China arrived here today on his way to America. He will sail tomorrow on the steamship Minnesota, which has been repaired after having run on a rock off Iwanna on April

MANY DIFFERENCES IN OPINION IN GERMANY

Berlin, (via London), June 19.—Dr. Anton Meyer-Gerhardt, whose long report to Foreign Minister Von Jagow, Dr. Alfred Zimmerman, under secretary of foreign affairs, and Count Montgelas, head of the American section of the foreign office, acquainted these officials fully with the status of public opinion in the United States, will be given an opportunity to make a similar report direct to Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg before the actual work is commenced of preparing the German reply to the United States' note regarding submarine warfare.

Whether Dr. Meyer-Gerhardt, who was sent to Germany by Count Von Bernstorff, ambassador to the United States, will visit headquarters and present his facts to Emperor William in person, has not been decided. In any case, the German reply probably will not be ready for delivery in less than 10 days or two weeks.

Extended conferences between representatives of the various departments will be required to unify the views of the foreign office, the ministry of marine and the naval general staff for presentation to the United States.

These conferences and deliberations have not yet begun and there is nothing to show what direction the current of German policy ultimately will take.

BRITAIN TO ISSUE SMALL BONDS.

London, June 19.—Reginald McKenna, chancellor of the exchequer, announced recently that the British government contemplates issuing war bonds in denominations as low as £20

Ham Honesty

YOU wouldn't give a child a bottle of poison to play with.

Yet when you let a child eat ham that is unreliable you run about the same risk.

Some ham, as you very well know, is not fit to eat. It's not properly cured, and it's kept from rotting by poisonous preservatives barred by the pure food law.

DR. DRAYTON'S PATIENT

By JEAN DICKERSON.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Doctor Drayton dismissed his last patient just as the telephone at his elbow rang sharply. His sister's voice came over the wire, frightened with a burden of important news.

"I know you are dreadfully busy, Frederick," she apologized, "but Mrs. Weeks has just told me the most agitating thing—it's about Archer—"

"Spare me, Hannah," said the doctor, wearily. "I don't just understand why it is that people delight in acquainting me with news of my son's delinquencies; as a matter of fact, Archer has overcome any tendency to wildness and has settled down to hard work. I have hopes of his becoming something of a lawyer. Now, if you will excuse me—what?—eh? An actress? Well, boys will be boys—and er—well, good-by!" He banged the telephone back on the desk and frowned at the picture of his handsome only son that looked down from the wall.

"Hannah says a very common actress! That doesn't sound like Archer—but what can I do? I can refuse to give my consent to his marriage with the woman and estrange myself from my lad! What is that, Harris, a call?"

"Yes, sir," said the attendant. "Emergency case—the lady was knocked down by an automobile and they brought her in here. I had her taken to the private room."

"That is right, Harris. I will come at once."

The physician slipped into a fresh white coat and, opening a door in one corner of the office found himself in a small room fitted for emergency cases.

On the narrow white bed was the slender form of a young woman. Miss Smith, the nurse, was removing the black broadcloth costume with quick, deft fingers.

"Badly hurt, Miss Smith?" asked the doctor.

"A broken arm, I think, and I am afraid of concussion," she said in a low tone.

The doctor leaned over the lovely unconscious face of the girl and made a rapid examination.

"It may be concussion, but I think it is only shock. The arm is fractured—send Harris in."

Two hours later Doctor Drayton retired from the sick room satisfied that the unknown patient would recover.

"You will, of course, send her to a hospital," suggested Miss Smith.

"I think not," hesitated the doctor. He felt very tenderly toward the young thing lying there on the bed.

A week slipped by, and still the sick room was occupied, much to the unspoken amazement of Miss Smith.

One day the patient opened lovely hazel eyes and smiled at the nurse.

"Where am I?" she asked faintly.

"At Doctor Drayton's house," replied Miss Smith primly.

The eyes closed again and a faint flush stole over the pale face. "Please tell me what has happened," she murmured.

Miss Smith told her in a few words of the automobile accident in front of the doctor's office. "We have been unable to learn your name," she suggested.

"Alice," murmured the girl, and went off to sleep.

"Have you discovered her name?" asked the doctor on his next visit to the sick room.

"Merely that it is Alice—she seems disinclined to talk—it's rather a mysterious case, Doctor Drayton. Perhaps she has no home—no people."

"I wish she hadn't—I would adopt her in a minute," said the doctor gruffly as he left the room.

He found his son smoking in the library.

"Hullo, dad, rushed as usual, I suppose?" said the young man as he returned his father's hand grip.

"Yes—and I have rather a puzzling private case in the house."

A tap came at the door and Harris poked a disturbed face inside.

"I beg your pardon, Doctor Drayton, But Miss Smith wants you to come once—the patient insists on leaving the house and has demanded her clothes, and Miss Smith doesn't know what to do."

Archer followed his father into the hall.

Near the front door stood Miss Smith, her arms stretched across the doorway barring the departure of the young patient who had donned her street clothes and was standing pale and silent before the nurse.

"Madame!" expostulated Doctor Drayton.

"Alice!" cried Archer sharply.

In a moment Alice was in his arms and hiding a blushing disturbed face on his broad shoulder.

Record Diamond Drill.

The largest diamond drill core ever cut has just been presented to Lehigh university. It was cut in the Marcy vein, at the Maltby colliery, Scranton. The specimen is a core of an 11-inch diamond drill and the core is 10 inches in diameter. The object of the drilling was to drain some old workings at the Maltby colliery. A barrier of 183 feet had to be penetrated before the water, which had a head of 176 feet, could be tapped. The core shows the middle rock of the Marcy vein.

PRESERVE EGGS WHILE CHEAP

Process Is Simple and Inexpensive and Will Save in Living Expenses.

Living expenses of the Iowa household may be considerably reduced if steps will be taken to preserve low priced summer eggs for consumption during the winter. The process of preserving eggs is not difficult or expensive. Any earthenware, glass or wooden jar, tub or barrel may be used and the preserving mixture is prepared in a few minutes time. Among the various preservatives that have been tried, none is better than water glass. It may be made as follows:

Water glass (soluble silicate of sodium) is a pale yellow, oderless, syrupy liquid. It may be obtained from most druggists at from 60 to 90 cents a gallon. For use, stir 1 part of water glass by measuring into 9 parts of boiled water, either hot or cold. If mixed hot, allow the mixture to cool before using.

Kind of Eggs to Preserve

Only absolutely fresh, clean, unwashed, soud eggs with smooth, firm shells are suitable for preserving by these methods. Infertile eggs are preferred, as they keep better than fertile eggs Any dirty, stale, cracked or thin-shelled eggs should be discarded as they are liable to spoil and affect the good eggs around them. Any eggs that float in the liquid should be removed, as floating indicates that the contents of the egg are shrunken, leaving a large air cell. Such eggs are usually stale, cracked or thin-shelled. Metal dishes should not be used, as the solution will attack and corrode them. All vessels used must be absolutely clean and sweet because eggs are very susceptible to odors and taints of any nature. If a white deposit is found upon the eggs when removed from either the water glass or lime mixtures, it may be readily removed by holding the eggs under a faucet or pouring water over them.

DRAINAGE NOTICE

HEARING ON ESTABISHMENT OF DRAINAGE DISTRICT NO. 47.

Petition of August Prelipp.

State of Iowa, Hancock County. ss:

To R. Boelmann, Alonzo Ellwood, Christ Enabnit Sr., George J. Fischer, Herman Lauen, F. L. Lemke, Modern Brotherhood of America, August Prilipp, The Union Central Life Insurance Company, William Wesenberg, Clerk of Avery Township, owners and encumbrancers and to all other persons in any way interested in any of the following described real estate, situated in the County of Hancock and State of Iowa, to-wit:—

The South East quarter of the North East quarter; and the South East quarter; and the East half of the South East quarter of the South West quarter, all in Section 24; the North East quarter, and the East half of the South East quarter of Section 25, all in Township 94 North, Range 23 West of the 5th P. M., and all highways lying within or adjacent to any of the foregoing real estate.

You are hereby notified that on March 20, 1915, there was filed in the office of the County Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, a petition, addressed to the Board of Supervisors of said County, asking that certain lands hereto fore described be incorporated into a Drainage District and that a system of drains be constructed for the relief of said District.

You are further notified that on April 5, 1915 J. H. Lilly was appointed as engineer to make a survey, plat and profile of said proposed District, and that on May 12, 1915 said Engineer filed his report recommending the establishment of said District and the construction of a system of drains, and said report is now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said County and may be amended at any time before final action is taken thereon by the Board of Supervisors, and that July 15th, 1915 has been fixed as the time for hearing thereon.

All objections and claims for damages must be filed in the office of the County Auditor not less than five days before said hearing.

Witness my hand and official seal at Garner, Iowa, this 14th. day of June, 1915.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

COLONEL OF WOMEN VOLUNTEER RESERVES INSPECTS HER ARMY

UNDERWOOD-UNDERWOOD

Colonel Charlesworth is here seen riding along the lines of her "khaki girls," as the members of the London Women Volunteer Reserves are called, at Ealing, England. The volunteer movement among the women is gaining strength daily, and their drills are almost as strenuous as are those of the recruits of Kitchener's army.

DEMOCRACY OF THE CITY

By Walter E. Weyl, in Harper's Magazine.

Many of the evils of American life are exaggerated in the city, and many of the evils of city life are exaggerated in America Our national flippancy reaches its culmination in the city, as does also a certain glittering superficiality From the city spreads a virulent contagion of successful vulgarity an intense, exultant materialism, an over stimulated, hard gayness; an extravagance, an ostentation, boundless, competitive and self destructive The city gives itself up to dissipation with the cultivated youthfulness of the old roue it maintains in pleasure, as in business, the pace that kills. There is much that is febrile in the city's rush to make and spend money There is a certain deadening through excess of effort, through excess of stimulus, through over specialization It is a curious anomaly that in the monotonous country the labor of each man is diversified, and to that extent interesting, while in the fascinating, multifarious city the labor of each man is minutely specialized and to that extent monotonous

And yet, when all is said that can be said against the city when all is considered and weighed and balanced, the fact remains that in a moral as well as a physical sense the city advances more rapidly than does the country, and that it is precisely in the city, with its errors and its carelessness and its ruthlessness, that the foundations are discovered upon which is to be reared a great moral democratic American civilization While men, despairing of our city civilization, cry, "Back to the land," forgetful of the fact that you cannot return an urban population to the fields or a graybeard to childhood at this very time profound curative forces are at work, and from the heart of our omnipresent city evils themselves arises a new social civic ideal

This ideal is broad Everywhere in America city problems are being envisaged and attacked City poverty, city crime, city carelessness, city misgovernment, are being studied, analyzed, and combatted The housing problem, the rapid transit problem, the health problem the educational problem—these and 100 other problems of the city are approaching a point where at least a partial solution is in prospect. Formerly cities were burying grounds for rural immigrants, even within rather recent decades the annual city deaths equaled the city births. All that is now changed. Year by year the city death rate declines, and the time is perhaps not far distant when the expectation of life will be as great within as without the city walls.

In many ways, great and small, the city is emerging from the lawless and anarchic spirit which accompanied its early growth To take a single instance. It was formerly assumed that the further growth of American cities would mean riot, disorder and bloodshed. "The lower orders which inhabit Philadelphia and New York," wrote De Tocqueville, "constitute a rabble even more formidable than the populace of European cities. * * * I look upon the size of certain American cities, and especially on the nature of their population, as a real danger which threatens the future security of the democratic republics in the new world" This expected turbulence of American cities, however, never materialized Our cities have had their share of our common lawlessness, but riots have not been many or in a large sense serious. Popular education, a more general suffrage, the lighting of city streets the creation of a municipal police force, the organization of a civic spirit, have softened the former acute fear of desperate and sanguinary uprisings by tattered mobs

The very dependence of the city man on his thousands or it may be his millions of neighbors is the very source of a new civic spirit A very slight pollution of the common drinking water may mean a typhoid epidemic of alarming currency; an inadequate fire patrol may mean a conflagration of city-wide proportions. As the city grows, as the welfare of each individual becomes inextricably united with the common welfare, there arises a civic conscience such as would not be possible in a purely agricultural community In the midst of the omnipresent city dangers the city finds itself

Today in all our American cities there is an expression of civic ambition which is quite new in our history There is a looking ahead, a city planning, a provision of future difficulties, and a provision of future remedies, of parks and playgrounds and schools and subways and water works, and of moral agencies which will but slowly attain their full potency The city government, while retaining much of its old dishonesty and more of its old inefficiency, becomes somewhat city-conscious, and numerous private agencies, philanthropic or self-supporting, efficient or officious, wise or overwise, approach in a tentative or a direct manner the solution of serious civic problems. The progress, moreover, is democratic It is secured by many men, animated by many motives, working together in increasing harmony Our city newspapers, even the worst of them, appeal to broad masses in behalf of common ideals. In the school, in the public lecture, in the church, in the factory, in the newspaper or magazine, in the homes of wealthy men or in over-crowded tenements, we catch a glimpse of a growing spirit of civic solidarity and of a wider social solidarity based thereon

Moreover, it is likely that the good of the city will be as contagious as the evil has been, and that the city's ideals will spread as far and as wide as do its inanities and febrile extravagances The city more than ever before, is sending missionaries to the country, and the summer boarder the retired city man seeking a country home, the newspaper, the magazine, the moving picture, the phonograph, teach more good than ill The cities are taking their share of responsibility as well as of power They are furnishing their full quota of statesmen, business leaders, and intellectual guides The country boy no longer plays the role which he once played in American life. A man need not split rails to be president, and the city boy, educated in excellent technical schools, is more than a match for Emerson s undifferentiated though sturdy lad from New Hampshire. The city, it is coming to be realized, is a workshop as well as a playground It is a workshop in which team work is indispensable The essence and import of the American city, as it is coming to be, is democratic teamwork, industrial, political, and social

Art In Atchison.

From the Atchison (Kan) Globe.

In a town the size of Atchison it is not necessary to join an art study class to learn the history of art It is written on the walls of the houses in the town. When an engraving of "Washington Crossing the Delaware" hangs on the wall and a chromo of a woman with a shawl over her head stares over her left shoulder as though she were making a wish on the new moon, the house is ruled from kitchen to parlor by "mother," and she is between 60 and 70 years of age and believes in the "old masters."

When madonnas holding fat babies are on the parlor walls and highly thin women in red robes tooting bright yellow horns, which they hold to their mouths with wooden fingers, the lady of the house adores sacred art and knows how to pronounce, Fra Angelica, Bondenhousen, Raphael and the rest. When there is a picture on the wall of a motherly looking woman, while father and the child look on, visitors at the house recognize the art that was born during the Chicago world's fair, and when "Breaking Home Ties" became the rage. A little later period in the art history of the town is represented by pictures on the parlor walls of a fine, healthy looking young man wearing a monk's habit, with the cowl slipping off from his thick hair. People posted on "art" know that is a picture of Hosea. When there are pen-and-ink sketches of square jawed men and tall, bony young women in very low neck evening dresses the rage of Gibson pictures (now about extinct) is represented.

When there are water color pictures of girls with pink cheeks, lips puckered up as though ready to be kissed, and colored pictures of a chubby little girl under which is written "Innocence," with a scattering of funny pictures of gaily colored English ladies and gentlemen climbing in and out of busses, "modern art" is displayed, and the presiding genius of the house is a bride, and those pictures are wedding gifts.

Prisoners Kept Busy.

From the American Review of Reviews.

In one camp, a good deal of landscape gardening had been done around certain barracks, very tasteful, even artistic.

"You seem to be beautifying your grounds," was the casual remark to the German commander.

"Oh, that is the work of the French. They have a gift for it. It is beautiful, isn't it?" answered the camp commander, who seemed to be prouder of this work of the French prisoners than of any thing else, except one; although plainly he was proud of his whole establishment. "The French," he remarked, "are very industrious. They are easy to get along with too. There are some very talented men among the French. Look in here."

In a long wooden building were many men making various things from wood, with all manner of carpenters' tools—one sawing, another planing, and so on. All this product is sold, the purchase price going to the prisoner who made the article. There were several buildings of this kind, where all sorts of handicraft are practiced tailoring, shoemaking, the plaiting of various useful things from straw.

One end of the big room where the carpenters and cabinet makers were at work had been boarded off to itself, making a small separate room. This was the personal workshop of a young French sculptor, who at that moment was busy modeling a large and rather ambitious piece. His prison studio was adorned with a dozen or more of his creations, some of them very good.

This young man talked with great freedom and gave a more sensible view of their situation than did his mates.

"Most of the German officers are very nice and considerate," said he. "Of course, there are some who like to show their importance, and these are disagreeable."

'How is your food?"

"Of course, it isn't famous, but it's all right. One must not expect too much It is all for our country all of this, as well as the fighting"

"But you say you are comfortable here - do you want to get back to fight?"

"Very much' Very much indeed'" he answered.

Points on Politeness.

"Politeness is to do and say
The kindest thing in the kindest way"

We do not know who wrote it, but that is the basis of all etiquette and courtesy and gives you something to go by, when in doubt as to the proper thing to do.

When you receive an invitation to any social affair, no matter how informal, always acknowledge it, telling your hostess whether or not you will be able to come, and if not, why

If you find that you will have to be late, phone or let her know in some way if possible, then when you arrive, apologize for your tardiness.

When you leave express your enjoyment of the party and then at an early date, return the compliment, either by making a party call, or by asking her to be your guest for any entertainment that you see fit.

As to Superstition.

We are a highly educated people, entirely free from superstitions, and we laughed heartily over the necessity of warning the Russian soldiers that a solar eclipse was not a portent and had no military significance. But when we have a solar halo we inquire anxiously what it means, some of us think it means that we shall get into the war; others are apprehensive that it means the approach of the end of the world, we are quite sure that it means something serious, for we never saw one before Still, we are the most intelligent people in the world, and you can search us for any trace of superstition.

The origin of the English royal salute, which consists of 101 guns, is explained as follows by Lord Fisher. It was originally decreed that the sovereign should be saluted with 100 guns, but once when the duke of York, afterward William IV, was being greeted by the fleet, the officers in charge lost count, and ordered another round to be fired to make sure.

O, Country Mine, Take Heed!

In these dark hours of lust and hate,
Far, far beyond thine Eastern Gate,
Take heed from the long-centuried past,
Take heed, yes, from the struggle vast,
For more dominion raging now,
Or lo! that Liberty shall bow
To Wrong, O Country mine! take heed—
Take heed!

Conserve in wisdom thy rich strength,
Be wise, be humble, then what length
Of days shall fall to thee, while great
Shalt be thy story! So, the fate
Of fallen States shall never no,
Be thine, thy memory a woe'
O Country mine! I say, take heed--
Take heed!

Prophetical shalt thou thus prove
Of erst days when, with hearts of love,
Stanch builders proudly launched thee on
The tide of nationhood, alone
Of all thy craft, the strong winds free
To drive thee forth on Life's far sea!
O Country mine! I say, take heed—
Take heed!

And thou shalt live, indeed, supreme
In the World's thought! Each nation's dream
For self, in thy rare greatness, yea,
Shalt see fulfillment, lo! one day,
If thou with Truth dost keep thy word,
If thou forgettest not thy Lord!
O Country mine! I say, take heed—
Take heed!

—George Newell Lovejoy, in the Boston Transcript.

SQUACK AND THE GOBLINET.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

As little Squank, the pet goblin of the court of the Fairy Queen, was returning home early one morning with a buttercup full of honey dew for the fairies' breakfast, he heard a terrible shriek coming from the heart of a tulip.

Diving into the bower, Squank there saw that a great black beetle had imprisoned Queen Bee, who for the first time in her life was out honey gathering that morning. The huge beetle was whetting his pinchers to seize the poor little queen when Squank leaped upon his back and digging his sharp toes into the creature's sides, sent him howling in flight.

"Oh, how can I ever repay you?" exclaimed the Queen Bee, fanning herself with her wings.

"Don't mention it," replied gallant little Squank, and picking up his buttercup, started homeward.

Now, rescuing the Queen Bee had delayed the little goblin and so, in order that the fairies would not have to wait for their breakfast, Squank took a short cut off through the dominion of the ogre, Krakawax.

As he passed the ogre's gloomy castle he heard a mournful cry from far up in the topmost battlements of the great tower, and, looking up, he saw the loveliest little goblinette that his eyes had ever beheld behind the barred window of a prison cell

"Oh, little Squank," she cried, "can you not rescue me from the clutches of this dreadful ogre? He caught me yesterday and he says that, though I'm not big enough to eat, he's going to make sauce out of me at 10:30 o'clock this morning And it's now 6 15, and I don't want to be made sauce of." With that the little goblinette, whose name was Wanderline, commenced to weep again.

"My, this is a hard task, harder than fighting beetles," said Squank to himself. Just then he heard a buzzing and Queen Bee lit beside him.

"Run along home with the honey dew," she said, "and leave the ogre to me. But come back by 10 30."

Away scuttled Squank, and reached the fairy palace just as the cook, a busy little ladybug, was putting breakfast on the table.

Then he hurried back to the ogre's castle to see what Queen Bee would do. When he arrived there, Karkawax was just coming out of the gates. Before him was a great herd of cattle for his breakfast. Behind him came the cook. In a cake he carried was little Wanderline. It all looked hopeless for the little goblinette, and Squank felt very blue, but just then Queen Bee bustled up, looking radiant.

"Everything's all right," she exclaimed. "Better get on top of that fence there if you want to get a good view of the exercises."

"What's going to happen?" asked Squank, for he could not see how Queen Bee could prevail against the terrible Krakawax

"Just wait," replied Queen Bee Then, turning to Krakawax, she called out

"Oh, Krakawax, release the little goblinette, Wanderline, and I will not harm you"

'Ho' ho' ho'" roared Krakawax in laughter until the windows rattled for 10 miles around "You harm me? Ho' ho' ho! Now, come on, cook, and get busy I haven't had anything to eat today but half a dozen muttons and a couple of whales, and I'm just starving"

"Attention, hive guards'" sang the Queen Bee, circling about the ogre, and suddenly, as though springing from no where, thousands of little bees came winging into view.

"Attention, Hot Sting Battalion'" sang Queen Bee again, and thousands upon thousands more of busy bees came swarming in from every direction

"Charge'" sang Queen Bee again.

At that the swarms of bees flew straight upon Krakawax, darting in and stinging him on all sides. He fought and bellowed, throwing and thrashing his limbs wildly about, but it was all in vain.

"Oh, take them off, take them off'" he roared, and rushed madly off to the river, where he plunged in with the bees in hot pursit. Then little Squank and Queen Bee opened the cage and liberated little Wanderline, and all three hastened off to the fairy palace, where the Queen and her court welcomed them joyously.

But it was weeks and weeks before old Krakawax could leave his bed, for he had gotten 37,000 bee stings—and that is enough to make even an ogre very sick and very sore.

New England With the President.

Boston Letter to the Philadelphia Ledger.

The scholarly and American spirit of firmness of President Wilson's stand in his note to Berlin has wonderfully strengthened him with the people in New England, and public opinion throughout this section today is with his solidly. The anti-Wilson talk has died down to a whisper

When the situation has clarified the politicians will try to see just where they stand and how best to adjust themselves to the altered posture of affairs.

Too Much.

Tess—She must have been surprised when her husband gave her such an expensive birthday present.

May—Not surprised, my dear, but suspicious.

ARE PARTINGS FOR THE BEST?

"The heart that has truly loved never forgets,
But as truly loves on to the close,
As the sunflower turns on her God when he sets
The same look which she turned when he rose."

The girl who has, for any cause, parted from the man she loves, is sure unkind fate could not have dealt her a harder blow. If she could only bring herself to reason out the matter calmly she might find heaven had been most kind to her in denying her her heart's desire.

If jealousy has been the cause of sundering the ties that bound them, and she had been the one whom the green eyed monster had made a victim of she should ponder well whether or no the stand she took in the matter had been justified by the circumstances—her lover flirting with other maidens, or openly slights her for another whom he has taken about in utter disregard of his allegiance to her, encouraging the hopes of some other woman in the belief that he was still heart whole and fancy free.

If he had been guilty of any of these discourtesies, refusing either to repent or apologize, a proud, spirited girl could do nothing more or less than sever the betrothal cord that each might go a separate way. The lover who deliberately pursues a course which brings unhappiness to the heart of the woman who loves him makes a fickle, faithless husband. The girl who has force of character enough to give him up saves herself a world of woe which would surely be hers if she wedded him.

The heart which has once been poisoned by the virus of jealousy never fully recovers and is ever after liable to a recurrent attack from slight cause. She can never forget the stab to her pride, her mortification and humiliation. For a girl to marry a man of whom she is jealous means the suicide of peace and therefore happiness.

She has as little chance for congenial companionship with the drunkard with whom she has not the influence to cause a reformation.

If he is a rogue, to part from him is the best thing that could happen to save her future misery.

Women whose love affairs are brought to a sudden termination should be brave and be philosophers enough to say, and believe that whatever happens must be for the best. The pain of losing a lover and the loneliness of watching and waiting for one who will never come again would be greatly mitigated if the thoughts were refused the sweet pain of dwelling upon him constantly until the heart is sick with unsatisfied longing

To be bright and cheerful through such an ordeal is in truth easier said than done, women imagine, but in this belief they err—will power has everything in the world to do with it. Fill the mind with diverting useful thought. She whose hours are filled with exacting work finds little time for grieving over a dead past and what might have been. The sun is shining elsewhere, if such women could only look a little farther and behold it. The powers that rule often remove a worthless lover to give place to a worthy one who has all the attributes that bring happiness and sunshine to the heart of the woman whom they crown with their affection. The partings wept over today will be rejoiced over tomorrow, if we but knew it.

The Momentous Question.

Hudson Maxim, in the Youth's Companion.

We are the product not only of our own personal environment, but also of the environment of all the generations of man that have ever existed In order, therefore, that any other world should be inhabited with beings like us, the original nebula from which that other solar system sprang would have had to have the same mass as the original nebula from which our solar system sprang. Moreover, the celestial bodies that collided would have had to be identical in temperature, mass, and velocity with the bodies that collided to produce the nebula from which our solar system came. That earth would have had to be thrown off at the same time that ours was.

Furthermore, the sun in the solar system would have had to be hit with meteorites of the same number, mass and velocity as those that have hit our sun, for the mass and impact of all the meteorites that have plunged into our sun since nebula time has very materially influenced the heat that the earth has received. Finally, there would have had to be on that other earth virtually the same distribution of land and water, because the size and arrangement of continents and islands, rivers and seas on our earth have had an important part in shaping the human race.

If the letters needed to print the Lord's Prayer were picked out of a font of type, shaken up in a bag, and then dumped helter skelter upon a printer's "stone," the chance that in falling they would assemble themselves in the Lord's Prayer would be as great as the chance is that there is anywhere within the range of the telescope another world inhabited by beings like ourselves.

It is not improbable, however, that there are many worlds peopled with beings both inferior and superior to ourselves, but they must be as different from us as the worlds they inhabit are different from ours.

He Who Laughs.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

There are people who take life too seriously. They allow their souls to be eaten up with cares and anxieties. Many worries are useless and help nothing. Bits of humor are lost on these persons. They wonder how any one can be so thoughtless about the realities of life. In all the animal creation laughter is given to man alone; given him, like all other faculties, to make the best of. Laughter, it is true, is not for all occasions, but it has its place and is necessary to our wellbeing A laugh is a cure for many ills. It aids digestion and so tends to good health. It prolongs life. Laughter often settles a disagreement and prevents real troubles. Hard working business and professional men sometimes forget to laugh. The strain of work grips them hard, and they get old before their time. The ability to see the humorous side of an accident, a mistake, or a folly, is a great aid in making life more endurable. Laughter overdone, like all virtues carried to excess, is a vice or a folly. Cultivate your sense of humor Better to laugh too often than not to laugh often enough.

"Who laughs knows no defeat."

Why Alexander Wept.

From the Youth's Companion.

The teacher was telling his class about the conquests of Alexander the Great. He made the tale a stirring one, and at last reached the conquest of India Wishing to impress the children, he said, "When Alexander had conquered India, what do you think he did? Do you think he gave a great feast to celebrate his triumph? No; he sat down and wept!"

The children seemed to be a little disappointed at this childish exhibition on the part of the hero; so the teacher continued. "Now, why do you think Alexander wept?" he asked.

Up went a little hand; but when its owner saw it was the only one in view, he hurriedly withdrew it.

"Come on now, Tommy," said the teacher in his most persuasive voice, "why do you think Alexander wept?"

"Please, sir," said Tommy, hesitatingly, "perhaps he didn't know the way back!"

Strange Death Message.

It may have been a strange tragic coincidence. Some will there was more in it than that husband of a Paris woman who himself a musician, left for the shortly after mobilization His was Remy. CHAPTER XI.—(Continued)

He undressed in the dark, leaped into bed and although the night was very warm, pulled the coverlet over his shivering frame, and closed his eyes so tightly that they hurt, in the effort to go to sleep instantly whether his brain willed it or no. Many minutes passed and sleep came not because he courted it so zealously. He heard the muffled strokes of the ancient clock in the hallway below. He remembered that it was out of repair—it had been ever since he could recall—and was as likely to strike 15 as it was one, it never struck the correct number. The hour was 3, he knew, but he found himself wondering how far out of the way the futile timepeace would prove to be. He counted 11. Then the silence was more deathlike than before. The incongruous thought flashed through his mind that his uncle, being a methodical person, was singularly remiss in allowing the clock to go on such a prolonged tantrum as this.

Suddenly he remembered that he had not said his prayers. He never had missed saying them before. Mr. Presbrey had been particularly imperative about the prayers. Formerly he had knelt at the rail of the bed to say them, but of late he had been mumbling them in bed, asserting an independence that rather pleased him, although he was careful not to apprise Mr. Presbrey of the departure. Impelled by a strange power which would not be resisted, he slipped out of bed and knelt once more in the old, accepted way. Before he knew what had happened, in the course of the set prayer which the minister had prepared for him, he mumbled the sentence, "bless Uncle Horace and Aunt Rena and Cousin Chetwynd and bless my dear sister."

But there he stopped. Chetwynd! The name seemed to strike back at his lips. The prayer was ended.

As he started to rise, a long, quavering cry came from Mary's room. He sprang to his feet, electrified, his whole body rigid from the shock to his overwrought nerves. With bated breath and glaring eyes, he waited for a repetition of the sound. It came a moment later, this time louder and with a note of terror.

"Eric!"

It was Mary's voice after all. A wave of relief surged over him. In two bounds he was at her door.

"What is it? What is the matter, Mary?"

"Come here, Eric," she cried plaintively. "Oh, I've had such a terrible dream. Please light the gas, just for a minute. It was so real. I wonder if it could have been true. Did you hear any one go out of my door?"

"No," he replied, stopping in the middle of the room, conscious of a strange premonition. "You were dreaming. No one has been here."

"Light the gas. I am so nervous. I thought Chetwynd was in the room, standing at the side of my bed, with his hands reaching out to grab hold of me. He had the most awful look in his face. He was saying something to me. I couldn't catch all of the words, I was so frightened, and his voice was so thick and hoarse. But I did understand part of it. It was bad oh so vile. I don't know why I should dream such things. Won't you light the gas, Eric, please?"

But he stood there as if turned to stone—the blood in his veins congealed. She heard strange, mumbled words on his lips.

"Oh, God, I wonder if he was here. Can he be here now in this room?"

"No, no, you ninny," cried she, with a shrill little laugh. "Of course, it was a dream. I'm wide awake now. I'm sorry I disturbed you, Eric. But—please stay with me for a little while. It was so real, and I'm such a coward. You know how frightened I am of him, anyway. Sit down on the bed, Eric."

"I shan't light the gas," he said resolutely. He would not let her see his face. That was out of the question.

He sat down on the edge of the bed. In the darkness her eager little hand sought his, and found it as cold as ice.

"How cold your hand is," she cried.

"Is it?" he asked mechanically.

"Listen, Eric, and I'll tell you why I had the dream. They say there is no explanation for one's dreams, but I don't believe it. I think, if one can only go back into one's mind, in some little forgotten corner of it, he will be sure to find an impression, or a thought, or a memory, that will furnish the cause for every single dream. Sometimes we may have to go back of our present existence, into the one before this, or maybe we project ourselves into a future incarnation but we—"

"Don't talk nonsense, Mary," he interrupted gruffly.

"It isn't nonsense," she cried. "Joan and I were talking about reincarnation today. She believes in it just as I do. She thinks when we die our souls pass on to another body, and the good in us grows while the bad decreases."

"Tell me, what caused this dream of yours?"

Her hand began to tremble. "I ought not to tell you," she said nervously. "You will quarrel with Chetwynd. You—you—Oh, Eric, you might do something dreadful."

"What, for instance?" he asked deliberately.

"You must promise me first that you won't—fight him. Oh, I am so afraid, Eric, that you will let your temper get the better of you."

"What has he said to you—what has he done?" demanded her brother, his hatred for his cousin lifting itself above all other sensations. Oddly, he felt a sudden, fierce desire to fall upon and destroy a living Chetwynd."

"Promise me."

"All right. I—I shan't do anything," he groaned, and she mistook the tone for one of bitter resignation.

"Well, he insulted me today. I—I can't tell you what he said to me, Eric. It was too vile. I could have killed him myself. He—"

"What did he say?" demanded Eric. She was struck by the sudden, exultant note in his voice. It was as if he were glad that she had been subjected to the affront.

"I can't tell you. He is the vilest thing in all this world. Oh, I hope God will punish him—I know he will. When I cried and told him never to speak to me again, he said—Oh, Eric, dear, I can't tell you."

"Go on, go on!"

"He said I wasn't any better than mother was, and for me to stop whining. He scared me by threatening to tell people that I—I had already been bad—like the girls at French Fannie's—and if I didn't—"

Eric stood up and lifted his clenched hands to heaven, a great sob of joy bursting from his throat.

"Oh, now it's all right! It's all right! I'm glad! Curse him, I'm glad!"

18

Mary sat bolt upright and cried out in alarm.

"What are you saying, Eric? Glad? Why—why are you glad?"

He caught his breath. The thrill of exultation passed in a flash; his turbulent thoughts crowded into a narrow channel that led him back to safety. For the first time since the events of the afternoon, he found himself in full possession of his wits. A wonderful cunning took lodgment where despair and remorse had been. God had punished. It was God, after all. Adam had said so. Mary had hoped it would be so. God had punished, through him—the one best qualified to be His agent. It was as it should be.

His brain worked quickly. "I'm glad we know just the kind of a scoundrel he is. There won't be any row between us, Mary, but I'm going to tell him in the morning that he's got to let you alone. That's all. I can settle his case by telling what I know about the girl he's keeping in New York."

Then, to ease his own mind, he briefly told her of that single phase in the unsavory life of their cousin, carefully refraining from any mention of his speculations, leaving that to the developments of another day. Mary was appalled by the disclosure.

"What would Aunt Rena say if she knew?" she whispered, in awe.

He plied her with questions, eager to obtain further justification for himself, and succeeded in getting a rather tearful statement of facts. Chetwynd had made vile proposals to this 16 year old girl, and had threatened her in no vague terms. The hateful encounter took place at the noon hour, just before she started out for her drive with Joan.

"Won't it be fine if they will let me go to Miss Sinnox's with Joan," she cried in the end. "If only to get away from Chetwynd. I—I don't believe I could stay here next winter. Eric with you away at college. I am so afraid of him. Why—why I placed a chair against my door tonight. I was afraid he might try to come in before you got home."

He started. "Before I got home?"

"I looked into your room at 10 o'clock and you were not there."

He turned very cold. "It was so hot in there that I went outside for a little while," he explained dully.

"I listened nearly all night for him. He was out, too. Go and listen at his door, Eric. See if he is in there."

"Nonsense. I can't go snooping around like that. He's in, of course. He won't dare come in here. You're foolish dear. Go to sleep."

"Leave your door wide open, please," she begged.

He was silent for a moment. "I'll tell you what I'll do. You're nervous, and I don't blame you. I'll get a blanket and a pillow and lie here on the floor by your window."

She was satisfied. In 10 minutes she was sound asleep, secure in his presence. He lay very still and tense under the window ledge, staring wide eyed up into the darkness, the soft night wind blowing across his face.

At last his hands unclenched themselves and his whole body relaxed in surrender to the new despair as he lay there thinking it all out.

He could not go on being the sweet heart of Joan Bright.

At 10 o'clock Adam Carr presented himself at the bank and inquired for President Blagden. He was informed that Mr. Blagden had not yet come down. He had not been late before in the memory of the oldest employe.

"Overslep, I dare say," remarked Adam laconically.

"He never does that, sir," replied the ancient person who served as janitor and day watchman.

"I'll wait," said Adam. "By the way, is his son here?"

"No, sir. That's what makes me think there's something wrong up at the house."

"Have you telephoned?"

"Mr. Gray did, a moment ago. No one is ever late here, sir. That is among the employes. It's Mr. Blagden's rule. Sickness is the only excuse. Or a death in the family."

"Umph!" said Mr. Carr.

Horace came in at 10:30. His first glance was in the direction of the teller's cage occupied by his son. Adam noticed a slight contraction of his eyebrows, and a no uncertain pursing of the lower lip.

He intercepted Mr. Blagden before he reached the door leading to his private office.

"Just a word, Mr. Blagden—" he began.

"Not at present, if you please," interrupted Horace, so irritably that the listening clerks forgot themselves and looked up. Mr. Blagden was never anything but suave.

"I can't wait," announced Adam shortly.

Horace paused. His austerity seemed to crumble before the very eyes of the furtive watchers. Indeed, they were permitted to witness an amazing metamorphosis. He had turned sharply at Adam's curt remark. For a second or two his haughty stare held. Then his lips parted and his hand went up with a spasmodic jerk as if to reclaim physical control of his features, but no power of his own could conquer the sudden feeling of dread and apprehension that rushed up from within to reveal itself in his eyes. Intuitively he knew that calamity was upon him. A blow was about to be struck.

"Come into my room," he said harshly. It would never do for those fellows behind the counters to see the blow fall, and to go forth with the story of how he shrivelled beneath it.

Adam followed him into the private office.

"Well," said Horace, turning upon him as soon as the dor was closed.

"I have discovered the thief," said Adam quietly.

For a full minute the two men faced each other.

"How much do you ask? What is your price, Adam?" asked Horace, a deathly pallor in his cheek. He put out his hand to steady himself against the table.

"Price?" demanded Adam, with a frown. "What do you mean? I ask for nothing but the private reward you offered in the name of the bank."

"It—it isn't young Payson?"

"No, it isn't. If I were you, Horace, I'd put that fellow back in his job here. He's honest."

"Speak out, man. Tell me the truth. Have done with it," cried Horace, suddenly losing control of his nerves. He was shaking like a leaf.

"You were bent on punishing the thief, Horace. You said you'd give $1,000 to see him put where all thieves ought to be. In all the history of the bank, there had not been a thief among its employes. This thief was the only thief. You were determined to make a lasting example of him. You were going to punish him if it took years to find the necessary proof. Well, I've got the proof, all of it. There's enough of it to put him comfortably where all thieves ought to be."

Horace made a great effort to pull himself together.

"Will you be more specific, Carr?" he said, but his voice shook.

Adam looked at him in wonder, and with a trace of pity in his eyes.

"It's going to be pretty hard, Horace. I hope you'll take it like a man."

Horace straightened up, his gaze tried to meet that of the detective without quailing.

"I have asked you to be quite specific, Carr," he repeated.

"Where is your son?" demanded Adam abruptly.

Horace seemed to draw his shoulders in as if his body was undergoing a tightening process.

"My son? He—See here, Carr, what do you know of him? Where is he? Don't waste words. For—for God's sake, out with it."

"Do you mean to say that you don't know where he is?" demanded Adam loudly. "Isn't he at home?"

"Sh! Not so loud, please! No, he is not at home. I will be quite frank with you, he did not come home last night. He's—he's gone."

"Are you speaking the truth?"

"Sir!"

"I understand, Horace. It is natural for a father to shield his son. He confessed to you. You are going to stand by him while—"

"Carr, as God is my witness, I did not suspect my son until I looked into your eyes out there in the bank a few minutes ago. Then, something seemed to tell me what it was you had come to say—and to do. Now, Adam, I am asking you how much you want. What is your price?"

Adam Carr drew back his arm as if to strike. A savage light leaped into his eyes.

"That's the second time you've asked me that question. I'll answer it this time." He stuck his hands into his coat pockets and faced Mr. Blagden squarely. "I have a price and you'll have to pay it. You'll be a long time doing it, Horace, but it's got to be paid. Once you accused me of being a thief. You drove me out of this town, disgraced. You—"

"I was a boy then, Adam. We are men now. I ask you to overlook that—"

Adam held up his hand. "You have never publicly admitted your error, even though you knew you were wrong. All these years you have allowed Corinth to believe that you are still unconvinced. I want to say to you now that I wouldn't sell the knowledge I have of your son's rottenness for all the money in this bank. You can't pay my price in money, Horace. You can only pay it with suffering. You are a good man. Good men suffer harder than bad men. You had no mercy on your sister. You are pleased to say that she's in hell, that's enough for you. Your children? You—well, we won't speak of them. I suppose you can't help being what you are."

"I am an honest, God fearing man—a Christian whose—"

"And like that other God fearing man, you have a prodigal son. Will you have the courage to kill a fatted calf when he returns to you, blackened with shame, or will you publicly consign him to the devil as you did your sister because she was not good enough to come in for your passover?"

"My boy can be saved. The cases are not the same."

"How about the Widow Payson's boy?"

"Have you done with this! What do you mean to do?"

"I am going to put my proofs—and they are unassailable—before the people of Corinth."

Horace eyed him quite calmly. He was master of himself once more, so far as outward appearances are concerned.

"This institution will not prefer charges against the son of its president. I shall restore all of the money that is missing. That will be the end of it."

"Not exactly," said Adam, with a smile. "You forget me. I am going to hunt this world over until I find the thief. Then I shall bring him back to you. It rests with the bank, of course, whether he shall be sent to prison. But I shall do my part, never fear. You can't keep me from hunting him down, and you can't keep me from giving the story to the world. Sit down, Horace. I want to tell you just what I know of your son's actions."

Half an hour later, Adam Carr left the bank. Before 5 o'clock in the afternoon representatives of New York and Boston papers were in Corinth investigating the report that the son of Horace was a defaulter, and that he had fled.

The whole blighting story of Chetwynd's crime was to find its way into the great newspapers.

Corinth was appalled!

Once more Todville rejoiced, and along the water front the denizens spoke without fear or restraint. The smug little city was shaken as by a monster convulsion.

A Blagden had gone wrong! A male Blagden! A son of The Blagden at that!

Paris Tries Hard to Be Herself Again.

By Edith Wharton, in Scribner's.

It is a good sign to see the crowds pouring into the shops again, even though the sight is less interesting than that of the other crowds streaming daily—and on Sundays in immensely augmented numbers—across the Pont Alexander III to the great court of the Invalides where the German trophies are displayed. Here the heart of France beats with a richer blood, and something of its glow passes into foreign veins as one watches the perpetually renewed throngs face to face with the long triple row of German guns. There are few in those throngs to whom one of the deadly pack has not dealt a blow; there are personal losses, lacerating memories, bound up with the sight of all those evil engines. But personal sorrow is the sentiment least visible in the look of Paris. It is not fanciful to say that the Parisian face, after six months of trial, has acquired a new character. The change seems to have affected the very stuff it is moulded of, as though the long ordeal had hardened the poor human clay into some dense commemorative substance. I often pass in the street women whose faces look like memorial medals—idealized images of what they were in the flesh. And the masks of some of the men—those queer tormented Gallic masks, crushed-in and squat and a little satyr-like—look like the bronzes of the Naples museum, burnt and twisted from their baptism of fire. But none of these faces reveals a personal pre-occupation; they are looking, one and all, at France erect on her borders. Even the women who are comparing different widths of Valenciennes at the lace counter all have something of that vision in their eyes—or else one does not see the ones who haven't.

It is still true of Paris that she has not the air of a capital in arms. There are as few troops to be seen as ever, and but for the coming and going of the orderlies attached to the war office and the military government, and the sprinkling of uniforms about the doors of barracks, there would be no sign of war in the streets—no sign, that is, except the presence of the wounded.

Lusitania is the ancient Latin name for a country whose borders were almost identical with those of modern Portugal.

Several hundred women in Firwood, Pa., have started a crusade to place under the ban every store, theater and other business that uses bill boards as an advertising medium.

Canada is Calling You to her Rich Wheat Lands

She extends to Americans a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help to feed the world by tilling some of her soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think what you can make with wheat around $1 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada. There is no conscription and no war tax on lands. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. SAW NO REASON FOR SPEED

Some Food for Thought in Epigram Made by Moroccan Statesman About the Lusitania.

The sinking of the Lusitania recalls an epigram about this ship which the sultan of Morocco's grand vizier made to Jules Huret.

The grand vizier, a very old man, received M. Huret, who is a French journalist, in Fez. M. Huret described the wonders of modern science and invention to his host. He told him about the Lusitania, then just completed, which could do her 27 knots an hour.

"Think of it!" said M. Huret, enthusiastically. "Think of it! A great ship that goes 27 knots an hour!"

But the vizier yawned and said:

"Why do you Christians always want to go so fast, when all roads alike lead to the grave?"

Two Kinds of Water.

It was a training school for navy recruits and the young ensign had been detailed to teach the "rookies" the rudiments of learning.

"Name the various bodies of water," wrote he on the blackboard, "and state how many there are."

It was a simple question to big John Henry.

"Two kinds of water," wrote he, "carm and rouf."

Aggrieved.

"Did you say that my production is a thoughtful, educational and moral entertainment which couldn't offend the most refined sensibilities?" asked the manager.

"Yes," replied the playgoer. "Isn't it true?"

"Maybe it is. But I don't see why you should want to knock business by talking about it."

A Test.

"At last," said the young woman, "I am sure that I have made my commencement essay properly profound and dignified."

"How do you know?"

"I read it to father and he didn't understand a word of it."

Big Money in Sorghum Production in Iowa

A news dispatch bore the intelligence last fall that a man in one Iowa city had disposed of 900 gallons of sorghum at 75 cents per gallon. He was sorry he had not the facilities for making 10,000 gallons. He says he could have disposed of ten times his output. Requests came to him for shipments from parties so far west as Idaho, but he was compelled to disregard them.

This man insists there is money in sorghum. He contends that if he was able to produce 900 gallons during a dry season and make money that he certainly could do even better with favorable climatic conditions.

It is his belief that cane will produce 100 gallons of sorghum per acre under ordinary conditions, and will in addition produce 43 bushels of seed which can be sold for $1.15 per hundred pounds. He says the average income would thus be about $100 per acre, which is $85 net.

The main objection to cane has been that it is a ground robber, but this individual says emphatically "Corn following cane does better than corn on any other ground."

He would have sorghum mills in every township and he claims it would be a paying investment.

Success In Iowa

Four Acres Produced $300 Worth of Winter Apples

In the fall of 1913, Mr. B. W. Barnes a farmer living near West Liberty harvested and sold $300 worth of good winter apples from an orchard of about four acres, 1-3 of which is set to summer and fall varieties. Mr. Barnes sprayed this orchard once, using lead arsenate and lime sulphur according to the formula prescribed by the State Department at Ames. This was put on just when the petals had fallen from the blossoms. Mr. Barnes says that he does not think one spraying is sufficient to produce the best results, but he is more than pleased with his first attempt and will spray more thoroughly this season.

DANCING COMPLICATIONS
A DANCER'S STORY.

"Well," began the father of the family as he shook out his dinner napkin, "how is the dancing class going? Are you learning all the new steps?"

"I guess so," Caroline admitted gingerly. "It's swell!"

"Gee!" said her brother. I just hate the old class!"

"What's the trouble?" their father inquired.

"Oh," Caroline piped up happily, "he's mad because Bunny danced with his girl all last time, and——"

"No such thing, tattletale!" protested that young man. "I guess I don't care anything about that stuck-up Hallie Bliss! I guess I wouldn't notice her if there wasn't hardly any other girl on earth! And she can dance with Bunny a million times for all I care! You needn't be so smart!"

"Tut, tutt!" reproved his father. "If she isn't your girl how did you know which one Caroline meant? Appearances are against you, Edward! Though I would say that at your tender age I should regret knowing that your affections were becoming entangled——"

"Aw," his son burst out, red faced, "Caroline needn't talk! She has an awful case on Larry Jones, and he don't give two cents for her!"

"He danced with me more'n with anyone else," Caroline came back calmly. "If he'll dance with me I don't care whether he gives two cents for me or not, do I?"

"There!" cried her father to the abashed Edward. "I trust this glimpse of feminine reasoning will teach you something, my son! It may keep you from big-headedness when some fair lady smiles on you!"

"I don't know whachu talking about!" protested Edward huffily. "Anyhow, I don't see what Caroline likes about Larry, for he's a punk dancer!"

"He isn't!" Caroline defended. "Not when you get used to him, as I have! It's just his legs are queer! They wabble below the knees and lag behind the upper part of him! You can't help dancing a little queer if your feet are two or three steps behind you!"

"Huh!" jeered her brother. "I'd pick out someone else to have a case on then if I was a girl! Why don't you take Pinhead Warble? All the girls are crazy about him, because he looks like a picture in a magazine—but, anyhow, he wouldn't look at you!"

"Pinhead!" hissed Caroline. "Him! He doesn't dance a bit better than Larry! His legs wabble, too, only they cave in at the knees something awful, and he's so tall you're afraid he's going to shut up like a jackknife! I know, because Susy told me it made her so nervous she never could have stuck it out, only she knew the new girl was jealous of her and she couldn't let her get a chance at Pinhead!"

"These social complications are distracting!" their father mourned. "I can't seem to get them straight. Aren't there any young gentlemen in the class with full command of their limbs?"

"Gee! You oughta see Bill do the high jump!" cried his son. "He's athletic, all right! We piled up all the girls' cloaks on a chair in the dressing room when they were dancing the Ta-Tao and Bill he jumped clear over the whole lot!"

"Then that's where my vanity box got smashed!" shrieked his sister in a fury. "And Susie's white fur was all mussed up and grimy! I'll tell the teacher on you!"

"She'd take your powder box away from you!" reminded her brother. "You don't dare. You're just mad because I told you you were stuck on Larry!"

"I have got a dreadful case on him," said Caroline, surprisingly complacent. She preened herself. "He asked me for four dances at the next party—so there, smarty!"

"Aw-w-w-w!" Edward was momentarily breathless. Then he rallied. "Betcha Pinhead won't ask you or anyone else!"

"Hallie Bliss told me something," his sister said absently to the atmosphere. Edward wriggled in his chair.

"Say," he offered beguilingly. "Honest, I didn't mean anything—what I said about Larry. His legs don't wabble so awful bad. Wh-what did Hallie say?"

"Said she was saving three dances for you." Caroline told him between spoonfuls.

"Gee!" Edward gasped ecstatically. "Did she, honest?"

"I take it," their father remarked, "that the dancing class, as a dancing class, leaves nothing whatever to be desired in the way of progress!"

"I guess so," said Caroline and her brother agreeably.—Chicago Daily News.

He Got the Number.

An amusing incident took place the other day in a large railroad goods-yard. A new man was sent to unload a wagon and to check the list of goods. He did the work, but forgot to fill in the number of the wagon in its place on the form.

On this being pointed out to him he departed, and returned after an absence of half an hour, and banged down the castiron number, wrenched from the side of the wagon, remarking:

"Shure, the next toime yez want the number of a wagon, ye can go for it yersilf."—London Tit-Bits.

Descendants of Youthful Unions.

A Chicago man recently offered one hundred dollars for the proofs that any great men have been produced by a family practicing early marriages throughout a century. In other words, he claims that three generations to a hundred years are all that there should be to result in vigorous descendants as a protest against recent medical opinions in favor of youthful marriages which, if constantly carried out from parents to children, would average four generations to a century.

Henry Mauss Passes Away

Henry Mauss was born December 7th. 1868 at Bernsdorf county Marburg Province Hessennassan, Germany. He was baptised and confirmed in the Lutheran church at the age of 21 years. He came to Illinois in the spring of 1890, and to Wright county, Iowa where he stayed and worked for several years. In 1892 he was married to Kate Blank of Belmond, Wright county, Iowa. To this union was born five children; John, Ralph, Grace, Alice and Raymond. Grace died at the early age of three years. In 1895 he united with the Methodist church of which he was a faithful member up to the time of his death. Fifteen years ago Menry Mauss and family moved to Rake where they have since resided. He was employed as section foreman of the Rock Island railroad. He was first taken sick with pneumonia which disease caused his death June 26th at 11 o'clock p. m. His end was peaceful. He reached the age of 46 years 6 months and 19 days. The remains were shipped here for burial and interment was made in Calvary cemetery.

Lightning Kills Man At Funeral Service

While the funeral services of Henry Mauss were being held at the Lincoln Lutheran church in Rake, Monday, the a young man by the name of Martin Quamm was instantly killed and four other men were severely injured and at this writing it is not known if they will recover or not. At least a dozen others were badly injured. In conversation with Rev. Peterson of Buffalo Center who had charge of the funeral he stated that he hopes that he never has to go through such an ordeal again. The church which is a large one was packed to its capacity and the whole congregation was thrown into a veritable panic and he was unable to finish his sermon. He finally was able to get the choir to sing which seemed to quiet the throng.

Everything Is Ready For Our Celebration

Everything is in readiness to entertain a large crowd at our celebration, Saturday, and if the weather just gives some decent treatment we will have the crowd, as everyone from far and near is planning to spend the day in Klemme—the most progressive town in Hancock county. YOU want to be with us.

In view of the fact that there will be a monstrous crowd here Saturday, all citizens are kindly asked to decorate their lawns and premises. We have the finest homes of any town in the county and with a little decorating should present an appearance that will make our visitors realize the fact that we are progressive, and are proud of old glory,

Young Man Is Severely Injured

Dr. Missman was called to the Gobeli home south east of town one day last week where their son Lester was quite badly injured when a team he was unharnessing crowded him up against the manger and then got him under their feet and trampled on him. One of his legs was broken, one arm broken, and very badly bruised all over. It will be some time before he is himself again and can feel lucky that he escaped alive.

Farm Tour A Success

The farm tour Saturday did not bring out a very large number of farmers for a number of reasons. Poor roads, too close to our big celebration and as it was a nice day the farmers thought it their duty to stay in the corn field and kill off weeds and you cannot blame them much. Those who did take the trip are very entheusiastic over the results and are anxious to have another one next year.

A very simple device has been recently designed for the purpose of locating needles in flesh tissue which surgeons are frequently called upon to do. The new process is said to be more satisfactory and also more convient than that by the use of the Roentgen rays, which is the method generally followed at present. First, the buried needle is magnetized by passing a magnet over the locality where the needle is suspected to be. Then another needle, suspended from a fine silk thread, is passed over the same locality, when the poles of the buried needle will attract unlike poles of the examining needle, causing the latter to swing around parallel to the axis of the buried needle, and if one pair of poles is nearer than the other, there will be a corresponding dip of the examining needle, somewhat after the manner of the "divining rod."

A Detroit Hungarian wrote to the Canadian deputy minister of militia offering an army of 200,000 Americans and Canadians for use against Germany and Austria in freeing Hungary. He received the answer that follows: "In reply, I am to thank you for your generous expressions of sympathy with the cause for which the allies are fighting, the cause of liberty and progress; but of your offer of assistance, it is not possible (however much we might like) to take advantage, for we are bound to respect the neutrality proclaimed by the president of the United States."

BERT MINION FIGHTS TO HOLD NEWSPAPER OWNED BY AL ADAMS

Brother and Sister of Former Humboldt Editor Contest With Foster Son.

Humboldt, Ia., June 26.—A court fight has been instituted for ownership and control of the Humboldt Independent, the newspaper conducted for many years by the late Al M. Adams, for 25 years secretary of the Upper Des Moines Editorial association. Bert Minion, in service with Al Adams for 33 years, is "holding the fort" against family relatives of Mr and Mrs. Adams, both dead. Minion claims that he was, in effect, the adopted son of Mr. and Mrs. Adams and that he had received verbal assurances that the plant would go to him by inheritance.

After the death of the former Independent publisher, Mr. Minion was surprised to find that no will could be found, although he expresses confidence that such a document was executed, naming him as beneficiary. A few evenings ago came the first warning that his right to the property would be questioned. He returned after supper to find the door bolted and the windows barred, with a notice tacked up, stating the administrators, who automatically became such, were a brother and sister and children of a deceased brother of Mr Adams, all residents of Humboldt county and that they had assumed charge of the plant of the Independent Subsequently the mail to the office was diverted and the bank account tied up.

Consulting an attorney, Mr Minion began action by first gaining entrance to the office by a back door, and later that evening having some bedding transferred to the editorial rooms, where, before midnight, he was joined by his wife with cooking utensils, and this has been their home since. One of them remains in command every minute of the day and night, and editions of the Independent come at regular intervals as before

It now remains for Judge Coyle to decide who is to succeed to the editorial pen of "Al" Adams, when he decides whether the injunction to oust Mr. Minion shall be granted or denied.

VERMONT WEDDING RECALLS SHATTERED IOWA ROMANCE

Manchester, Vt., June 26.—Mrs. Jessie Lincoln Beckwith, daughter of Robert Todd Lincoln of Chicago, and only living grandchild of the late President Abraham Lincoln, was married at the summer home of her parents yesterday to Frank Edward Johnson, of Norwich, Conn.

Mrs. Johnson's new union is much different from the one formed by her against the wishes of her parents in 1897 In those days Miss Jessie Lincoln, a society belle, was visiting at the home of her grandfather, James Harlan, at Mount Pleasant, Ia., when she met Warren W Beckwith, who was playing right halfback on the Iowa Wesleyan football team

An elopement followed, and the bride's father tried to place Beckwith in a responsible position with the Pullman company in Chicago.

The young husband, however, soon returned to the home of his father, Capt W Beckwith at Mount Pleasant, and later became professional baseball player in 1 or leagues. Then he entered the Spanish-American war as a volunteer A daughter was born to the couple the only great granddaughter of Lincoln

By this time the love cooled and separation followed, a divorce being obtained recently on uncontested charges of desertion made by the husband At last accounts Beckwith was a brakeman on the Burlington railroad and was living at Creston, Ia.

COURT RULES BOONE MAY PROCEED WITH COURT HOUSE

Boone, Ia., June 26.—Boone county is authorized to proceed with its plans of erecting a $200 000 court house, by a ruling given by the Iowa supreme court yesterday in the case of J J. Wells, J H Johnson et al vs. supervisors and county officers of Boone county

On September 2, 1913, the people of Boone county voted bonds to the extent of $200,000 to build a new county court house to be located on the site of the present court house Action was immediately begun in the courts to enjoin the county from proceeding, on the ground that the site proposed is out of the way and not suitable for a new court house No fraud was claimed. Apparently the only matter involved was as to where the structure should be placed

The high court declares that the supervisors have the right to make decisions such as the locating of a court house In the present case the county owns the site proposed

DEBS DENOUNCES ALL WAR AT CENTERVILLE PICNIC

Centerville, Ia June 26. Declaring that rather than obey the call of any country on earth to go to war if he would refuse and be shot as a traitor, Eugene V. Debs yesterday afternoon denounced all war at a big union labor picnic. "You have been told it is patriotism to fight for your country," he said "Let those who own the country fight for it It isn't a workingman's country

"It is just as great a crime for 10,000 men to face each other in battle and kill each other as for two men to fire deadly weapons at each other The very day that President Wilson had the nation pray for peace 18,000,000 rounds of cartridges left our shores. It was like a man praying publicly that his neighbors wouldn't fight and privately selling one a pistol and the other a sling shot."

DES MOINES FRANCHISE CASE WILL GO TO HIGH COURT

Des Moines, Ia., June 26.—The entire street car franchise fight, beginning with the claim that the street car company enjoys a perpetual right to the Des Moines streets, was reopened in the federal court by attorneys for the bondholders of the company George F. Henry, of Des Moines, and W. D. McHugh, of Omaha, attorneys for the bondholders, declared that they intend to take through the United States courts the fight in which the city was the victor in the courts of Iowa.

This turn has been taken to the injunction suit which was brought by the bondholders of the street car company to prevent by injunction the removal of the tracks of the company from the streets, because of the failure of the traction company to secure a franchise.

IOWA MAYORS TRYING TO DEVISE PLAN FOR KEEPING UP REVENUE

Loss of Saloon Licenses Tends to Disturb—Session at Des Moines Is Informal.

Des Moines, Ia., June 25.—The mayors of Iowa cities which will lose their saloons on January 1, 1916, when the mulct law repeal becomes effective, are in session at the Savery hotel to discuss ways to make up the revenue lost by discontinuance of the mulct law.

Mayor Cross, of Burlington, stated that the object of coming to Des Moines at this time is for the purpose of learning how the Des Moines city officials met the financial situation when saloons were voted out last February.

"We will have to get along without the mulct tax after January 1," said Mayor Cross. "We do not know how the conditions will be met. We are here for the purpose of exchanging ideas.

"We do not anticipate any trouble in the river cities in enforcing the prohibitory laws. There will be no disorder. We may have some difficulty in preventing bootlegging, but the law will be enforced with the same vigor as in other parts of the state."

The convention of city officials is unofficial. It was called by Frank G. Pierce, of Marshalltown, secretary of the Iowa League of Municipalities, at the request of interested officials. It is expected that a list of means of raising revenue other than by direct taxation will be made up for the consideration of the cities affected Ways by which city expenses may be reduced will also be discused.

Among the officials who arrived early today for the session were B. P. Poor, city attorney, and Mayor W C Cross, Burlington; Frank G Pierce, Marshalltown, Mayor Moorehead, Keokuk.

KOSSUTH COUNTY HAD FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOL IN IOWA

Des Moines, Ia., June 25.—The first Sunday school in Iowa was established in Kossuth in 1836 in the cabin of Jacob Westfall, according to the history of the first church school organization given by the Rev. D. M. Cassat, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Kossuth, at the pioneer workers' conference of the Sunday school convention yesterday afternoon. Dr. Henry Wallace, of Des Moines presided.

Two years after the organization of the Sunday school, a church was formed It was these church members who established Jefferson college. In 1855 the school became Yellow Springs college and was among the first colleges in the state From this college there went six missionaries and five ministers.

Among the pioneers of the state who gave talks during the pioneers' conference were Prof. J. A Lapham, of Des Moines college, president of the state association, 1903-4, J. T Harding, of Eldora, state treasurer 15 years, Mrs. D. B. Short, home department, superintendent 19 years ago, the Rev W R. Manning, of Carlisle, former president, Mrs. C. E. Risser, of Des Moines, primary department superintendent, the Rev D M. Cassat, of Kossuth, historian and county officer and Dr Henry Wallace, of Des Moines

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL CANNOT ENFORCE BARBER SCHEDULE

Des Moines, Ia., June 25 —The state executive council has found a proposition it cannot control. A short time ago it ordered the barber in the state house to establish a system of registration for shaves so that the state officials could go to the shop for an appointment in the same way that the official would go to the dentist for treatment.

In a letter sent to William C Ridenour, owner of the shop in the state house, the council explained that it had duly considered the shaving proposition and that it believed that valuable time would be saved to clerks and executives if they could know exactly when to go to the barber shop instead of waiting their turn when the shop is crowded The council offered to furnish the barber with a book in which to make the appointments.

The barber put the matter up to the patrons of the shop and they unanimously voted to turn it down They declared the proposition to be ridiculous and that a shaving schedule would be impossible to maintain They declined to co-operate Therefore, the barber business at the state house will continue to be carried on along the same old lines and the new idea will not be attempted.

WOMAN DIES SUDDENLY ON WAY TO SEE DAUGHTER

Mason City, Ia., June 25.—Mrs. Reina Janssen and her daughter, Reina, will be buried in one grave, Tuesday evening Mrs. Janssen was summoned from her farm home near Burchinal to the Park hospital in this city, where the daughter had been taken a few days before for an operation for appendicitis. The operation was performed, but alarming conditions were revealed and the mother was asked to come quickly that she might be consulted in regard to further operations. Mrs. Janssen arrived at the hospital about 8 o'clock and was going to the room of her daughter on the third floor As she was about to step on the landing at the head of the stairs, she was noticed to reel, and a few moments later was dead. It was heart trouble, due probably to the alarming condition of her daughter Miss Reina, 19 years of age, knew nothing of her mother's death. She lingered until yesterday morning, when death came to her. The bodies of both were removed today to the old farm home.

AUTO STRIKES WAGON AND TWO PERSONS ARE KILLED

Chicago, June 24.—O. W. Franklin, 35 years old, of Burlington, Ia., and Mrs. Eva Laudaul aged 25 years, of Chicago, were killed, and J Wicker, High Point, Ia., and Miss Mattie Briggs, Chicago, were severely injured here today when the automobile in which they were returning from Cedar Lake, Ind., struck a peddler's wagon.

Franklin and Wicker, the police say, came to Chicago to see the 500-mile automobile derby next Saturday. They met the women at a west side cafe last night and after visiting other cafes, drove to Roby, Ind., for a fish dinner.

OLD COUNTER BOOK TELLS OF GROCERY PRICES IN 1869

Webster City, Ia., June 24.—An old day book, kept in a Webster City grocery store during the fall of 1869—46 years ago—furnishes some interesting figures for comparison with prices of foodstuffs today Despite the fact that this was then a new country and that all supplies from outside were freighted overland, tobacco was about the cheapest commodity to be found on the market. It sold for 20 cents a plug

In those days patrons of the store got no discount on quantities A box of matches cost 10 cents and a dozen boxes cost $1 20.

COLORED CONVICT IS SHOT BY WARDEN FOR SHOW OF HOSTILITY

Bullet Strikes Prisoner In Arm and Injury Not Serious—He Had Made Threats.

Fort Madison, Ia., June 25.—Attacked by a convict armed with an axe, Assistant Deputy Warden Ben Skyles, shot his assailant, William Hall, colored, through the right arm.

The official had ordered Hall to "solitary" for an infraction of the rules, and on the way the prisoner broke from the guard and ran into his cell, threatening anyone who followed.

Skyles went in after him. Hall produced the axe he had concealed in his cell and advanced, threateningly, until winged by the deputy's bullet. Hall now is in the prison hospital. Skyles was unhurt. Hall is serving a five-year sentence for forgery. He has a bad prison record.

MORE GRIEF FOR TEACHERS IN COMING EXAMINATIONS

Des Moines, Ia., June 25.—School teachers who are to take the June examinations today and Thursday and Friday are advised to pass. If they do not pass in the next examination they will have to answer questions concerning manual training, domestic science and agriculture. So rules the instruction department of the state.

Twelve weeks normal training is not required of candidates who write the June examinations, the department has ruled. But after the June examinations 12 weeks' normal training or six months' teaching experience will be necessary to take the examinations.

Also after the June examinations knowledge in manual training, agriculture and domestic science will be necessary All who do not pass the June examinations will have to answer all the examinations called for by the new laws.

Candidates who fail will also have to prove 12 weeks' normal training or two years' teaching experience when they enter the second trial.

After July 1 all persons who enter the examinations for the purpose of raising grades or the grades of their certificates will be required to meet all the new rules.

$10,000 AND DIVORCE IS GRANTED MRS. McCLELLAND

Des Moines, Ia., June 25 —Mrs. Minnie McClelland yesterday afternoon was granted a divorce from her husband, Gideon McClelland, and given $10,000 permanent alimony by Judge William S. Ayres, of the district court. She charged cruelty The wife also was given the custody of their two children, Mildred Marie and Forest Earl, aged 15 and 11 years, respectively, and the father must pay $20 per month for their support until the son has reached the age of 21 and the daughter 18.

McClelland is the son of the late Nat McClelland, who died a year ago. He owned a farm north of Highland Park for years and left an estate valued at several thousand dollars, it is said The son owns several hundred acres of land near Polk City and operates a garage there. He is reputed to be worth between $50,000 and $60,000.

IOWA POPULATION TO SHOW FIVE PER CENT GAIN

Des Moines, Ia., June 25.—Iowa's population will show an increase of at least 5 per cent over the government returns of 1910, when the compilation of reports from over the state is completed according to an estimate made by Census Director A. W Swan.

The rural districts have stood practically still in the matter of population in the last five years, leaving the cities responsible for whatever increase the final figures may disclose. A number of the larger cities have shown a marked increase, including Des Moines, Sioux City Davenport, Waterloo, Cedar Rapids, Dubuque and Mason City.

Returns from the various sections are yet in incomplete form and the estimate made by the director is based on comparisons made in a few counties. These are sufficiently representative, however, to make the estimate seem fairly accurate It will probably be months before the statistics are ready for the printer, with all the data there is to work into shape for the report. All of the reports are yet to be checked, also, with thousands of errors to check back and incomplete returns to trace.

M'HUGH RESIGNS POSITION IN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

Davenport, Ia., June 25 - The coming retirement of John McHugh, of Sioux City, from Iowa banking circles was brought out in two incidents of the first day's session of the Iowa Bankers' association Mr McHugh filed his resignation as Iowa member of the American Bankers' association, announcing his intention to remove to New York about August 1 to take the vice presidency of the Mechanics' and Metals National bank In the second incident Mr McHugh, who is a former president of the state association, gave a farewell dinner at the Outing club to former presidents of the state organization

J C Dinwiddie, of Cedar Rapids, was elected to succeed Mr McHugh on the board of the American Bankers' association, winning over L. E. Stevens, of Des Moines, by a vote of 77 to 69 A C Smith, of Clinton, was elected as Iowa vice president of the national organization

CLINTON LIKELY TO SECURE 1916 SUNDAY SCHOOL MEET

Des Moines, Ia., June 25.—The Rev W. H. Beachler of Waterloo, will probably be reelected president of the Iowa Sunday School association at the annual business session to be held this afternoon

Members of the state executive committee stated yesterday that the custom of giving second term of office to the president of the association would undoubtedly be followed this year The procedure of election is by county caucus of delegates.

Clinton, which was an insistent candidate for the convention this year, will probably get the 1916 convention Dubuque is a contestant. Both cities were considered yesterday morning by the executive committee in session.

COUNTY OFFICERS MEET IN DES MOINES AUG. 17

Des Moines, Ia., June 23.—The Iowa Association of County Supervisors will hold its 20th annual convention in Des Moines for three days, beginning August 17, it was announced yesterday afternoon after O H Dunlap, of Washington county, president of the association, and A M Grimm, of Clear Lake, Cerro Gordo county, had spent three hours with Chairman Harry Barquist of the Polk board.

The associations of Iowa treasurers, auditors and county farm stewards will hold their annual meetings at the same time, it was announced, all four conventions being expected to bring about 400 visitors to this city.

ESTHERVILLE DOCTOR IS RECOVERING FROM TETANUS EXPERIENCE

Erroneous Report Given Out In News Dispatch That He Had Died From Attack.

Estherville, Ia., June 24.—Dr. G. E. Birney is not dead from lockjaw, as reported, but is recovering strength rapidly, after convulsions, and prospects are excellent for his complete recovery.

He has been kept loaded with antitetanic serum, 34,500 units having been given him since Thursday night.

He contracted the malady from a slight needle wound in his hand, received while amputating the arm of Irwin Calkins, of Emmetsburg, who died Thursday evening of lockjaw.

A short time before his patient's death the doctor took the first spasm. All the serum in the city and neighboring towns was given the doctor Thursday night and a fresh supply was secured in haste from Sioux Falls, Cedar Rapids and Des Moines.

Prompt use of the serum is responsible for saving his life. Dr. Behring, a specialist, was summoned from Des Moines, and nine other doctors were in attendance during the treatment, besides Doctors Kretzmyer of Emmetsburg, Fuller of Milford, Schooley of Terrill and Atkins of Superior and local physicians.

Two nurses who were scratched by the boy while in spasm were given serum treatment as a precautionary measure.

This is the first case of tetanus in this neighborhood where results have been obtained from serum treatment.

ABOUT 1,200 DELEGATES AT SUNDAY SCHOOL JUBILEE

Des Moines, Ia., June 24.—Fully 1,200 delegates to the jubilee convention of the Iowa Sunday School association arrived in the city yesterday. The Sunday school room of the Plymouth Congregational church, where the general sessions of the convention will be held, is used for the registration, assignment of delegates and offices for officers of the convention.

Beginning this morning section meetings divided in four groups, are being held simultaneously. The elementary department meeting will be held in the Central Church of Christ.

Four sections of the department will meet independently. Miss Elizabeth Dean will conduct the cradle roll section Mrs. Bert Morehouse will have charge of the beginners' section. Mrs. O C Miller, the primary section, and Miss Mayme Inglebright will conduct the junior section Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner of Chicago, national superintendent of the elementary work, will have general supervision.

Holstein, Ia June 24.—Another farm has been sold in Griggs township for the $250 figures. Henry Doehla selling his quarter section east of town to Chas. Adams, Gus and Mox Buhmann for that price, possession to be given next March

Mr Dohla purchased the farm eight years ago for $17 000 He sold 10 acres a few years ago for $2,000 and now gets $37,500 for the other 150 acres, giving him a net profit of $22,500 for his investment of $17,000 eight years ago. The investment has cleared Mr. Doehla over $10 per day every working day since he invested.

WATERLOO PLANS TO ERECT SOLDIERS' MEMORIAL HALL

Waterloo Ia June 24.—Black Hawk county is soon to have a soldiers' memorial hall, money for the erection of which was voted three years ago. Sixteen thousand dollars is available. The committee from the Grand Army posts of the county that is authorized to expend the funds has located the building on the river front, between Fourth and Fifth streets, on land owned by the river front improvement commission The ground dimensions will be 40x70 feet

The architect's plans indicate that the edifice will be ornamental, having a front on the river and one on the opposite side The site could not have been more central

FATHER OF IOWA OFFICIAL DIES AT HOME IN HANCOCK

Avoca Ia June 24 —John Fletcher, sr., a pioneer of this section, died at his home in Hancock yesterday. Mr. Fletcher was 77 years old and had lived in Iowa 67 years. He is survived by a wife and five children—John Fletcher, jr. of Des Moines, assistant state attorney general, Samuel and Noble Fletcher, of Hancock; Mrs. Howard Wilson, of Avoca, and Mrs. Fred Bullis, of Griswold. Funeral services will be held at Hancock Wednesday afternoon.

STATE INSPECTORS AFTER USE OF INACCURATE WEIGHTS

Des Moines Ia., June 24.—In a town not far from Des Moines there are five large scales that are under suspicion. Dairy Commissioner Barney received a telephone message from a resident of the town who said that no two of the scales called for the same amount of goods to weigh 100 pounds. An investigation was promised.

From all over the state, Mr. Barney says, requests are being made that large scales be tested

One man knew he was being cheated when he took his hogs to town for sale Another, an elevator man, found his grain weighed less in Chicago than it did at home, and he wants to find out if his scales or the ones in Chicago are wrong

DES MOINES JITNEY CASES UP FOR HEARING JUNE 25

Des Moines, Ia., June 24.—The jitney bus ordinance which was to have taken effect in Des Moines yesterday, requiring drivers to furnish indemnifying bonds in the sum of $2,000 and making other regulations of the business, will come up for hearing on its constitutionality in the district court next Friday. In the meantime the jitneys likely will be allowed to operate under the restraining order which the organization has petitioned for to hold up the ordinance. The measure is attacked on the ground that it is discriminatory in character.

MORE HARD SURFACING FOR MASON CITY-CLEAR LAKE ROAD

Mason City, Ia., June 22.—Bids were received by the city council and county supervisors for the construction of approximately four miles of concrete paved highway on the Mason City-Clear Lake road, a portion of which has already been paved. The city's section went to Shugart & Munson, of Nevada, at $1.56½ per yard for reinforced concrete. The firm also was low bidder on the county section, but the contract has not yet been awarded. With the construction of these two sections, half of the Mason City-Clear Lake road will be hard surfaced.

BRITISH ARMY 4,000,000 STR... WRITER DECLA...

London Newspaper Man In... rent Issue of American M... azine Says Kitchener H... Fooled the World.

GUARD SECRET CAREFU...

Vast Numbers of Men S... Have Been Moved U... Very Noses of Spies— Press Silent.

In the July American Magazine today, there is an article entitled "Kitchener's Great Bluff." It is a report of how England has secretly raised an army four times as big as has admitted. The details of the article include an interesting account of the tremendous part that advertising played in persuading men to enlist.

The author of the article is J. Ellibert Duckworth of whom the editors of The American Magazine say in a note:

"Mr. Duckworth is an Englishman belonging to a family of well known London and Liverpool journalists, and for the past 10 years, with the exception of two years in London, he has lived most of the time in New York where he has been connected with newspapers. At the outbreak of the war he went to England where he remained most of the time. During the winter, because of his unusual opportunities for getting inside information pertaining to England's part in the war, he came confidentially into possession of the facts in this article. On account of the strict censorship imposed by Lord Kitchener, no English journal has published them, and in truth, few Englishmen have known the real facts. Indeed, Mr. Duckworth himself has been unwilling, until now to communicate publicly what he has learned."

Under Noses of the Spies.

Following is a brief extract from Duckworth's article

"How Kitchener's army was secretly increased from 1,000,000 to 4,000,000 men right under the very noses of the ubiquitous German spies is one of the most amazing stories of the war.

"This grim joke on the kaiser was concocted by Lord Kitchener himself. He commandeered the services of the press to assist him to carry out the great bluff.

"When the British secretary of state for war first conceived the idea of putting into the field 4,000,000 men, he realized that it would be a colossal strategic blunder to allow the enemy to know what was really afoot. Rather the game should be to call for 500,000 men, and then press agent the world with stories lamenting the fact that, at last, the British empire was about to crumble up because the men of England had not be pluck to do their duty by it. The scheme worked out admirably.

Newspapers Kept the Secret.

"The campaign of silence was conducted on strictly scientific lines. The newspaper editors were told that any indiscretion would mean court martial, under the defense of the realm act, on charges of having published reports likely to interfere with the success of his majesty's forces. They were instructed to publish only the recruiting returns sent out by the war office. Independent census taking was strictly forbidden All articles on the new army, and even pictures of the soldiers, had first to be submitted to the censor. A permit was required even to own a camera.

"One London editor refused to 'play the game.' He published a picture of some soldiers without the permission of the censor. Lord Kitchener sent for the offender.

"'A second indiscretion,' he explained, 'will mean a court martial and jail.'

"'On what charges?' stuttered the astonished editor.

"'Never mind,' answered Lord Kitchener; 'we will clap you into prison first, and find the charges after the war is over.'

How Troops Are Moved.

"When it came to moving the British troops to France extraordinary precautions were taken to mislead the German spies. The regiments were not transported from Southampton to Boulogne or Havre. Instead they were shipped from what were really out-of-the-way and inconvenient ports—Newport, Cardiff, Avonmouth, Cardiff, Swansea and Barrow for example—to French ports as far from the firing line as St. Nazaire, Brest, and even Bordeaux on the Atlantic coast and Marseilles on the Mediterranean.

"Troop trains were invariably moved at night with drawn blinds. Sometimes they were run half way across the country before being switched alongside a transport Not even the officers were aware of their ultimate destination—whether it was to France, Egypt, India, or the Dardanelles.

"The engine drivers were changed every 20 miles or so, and the captains of the troop ships received their sealed instructions by wireless after they had put to sea."

CAMPAIGN FOR FACTORY WORKERS IN FULL SW...

London, June 25.—In England the campaign for munitions is in full swing with the possibility of national registration to ascertain the "man power" of the nation. That England appreciates the need of adding to her fighting resources is significantly indicated by the publication in the London Times of tables showing that the casualties of the officers during the last month come within a few hundred of the total officer casualties during the entire South African war. The total in South Africa was 2,252, while the lists to May 26, show that 2,440 officers have been killed or wounded, or reported missing.

AID FOREIGN BORN TO BECOME GOOD CITIZ...

Philadelphia, June 25.—A nation-wide movement to aid foreign born residents to prepare themselves for citizenship is under way today. It was inaugurated here yesterday at a conference of educators, naturalization officials and others interested in the proposition. Resolutions asking the Public Education association to formulate a program for the education of those preparing for citizenship was adopted.

Similar meetings it was announced would be held in many other cities on Independence day.

BLOODY STRUGGLE ON DNEISTER LINE

Russians Falling Back While Offering Desperate Resistance—Expect Warsaw Attack.

London June 25 Galicia and its borders continue the main field of military activity The Russians are fighting hard in the Galician territory that remains to them, either to save that territory or to give their retreating armies a chance to retire in good order Desperate battles, according to the official reports, are continuing along the Dniester, where the Russian claim to have retained the advantage despite their admission that Austro-Germar forces have pushed across the river in two places In both cases the crossing forces were pushed back and are clinging precariously to the left bank of the stream the Russians assert In the Kosmaczine district Grand Duke Nicholas is on the offensive and claims to have stormed a strongly fortified height by assault

Something of a lull in the fighting as compared to the feverish activity of the last fortnight is enabling military observers on both sides to take stock and forecast future operations

Petrograd claims that the Russian defensive positions are so secure that the Austro-Germans will not be able to withdraw many troops for use against the allies of Russia The Russians assert further that their present line before Warsaw is as strong as it ever was and that their armies on the River Dniester will fall back only if the eastward drive of the Austro-Germans from Lemberg threatens to cut them off

The authorities of the central empires are less communicative concerning their future intentions and movement, but it is believed that Warsaw again is their objective

FRENCH REPORT REPULSE OF MANY GERMAN ATTACKS

Paris, June 25. The French war office's afternoon statement reads

"North of Arras French troops last night attacked between Angres and Souchez and made further progress In the Lorenth, a German counter attack has been repulsed This engagement followed violent bombardment of our trenches to which our batteries replied

"In the Champagne near Rheims and also near Perthes the enemy yesterday and during last night exploded mines but did not deliver any infantry attack They were not even able to occupy the excavations made by these explosions

"In the Argonne and in Vauquois the fighting with mines continues and there occurred several local engagements marked by the throwing of bombs and of hand grenades

"On the heights of the Meuse at the Calonne trench the Germans last evening delivered a violent attack along our entire front, hurling asphyxiating bombs and flaming liquids After penetrating that portion of their former second line of defenses which we occupied, they were thrown out again by an energetic French counter attack At midnight the enemy attempted a further offensive, but found themselves under fire from our barriers and dispersed them with heavy losses

"At Loraine the enemy on two occasions endeavored to retake the positions he had lost near Leintrey He was completely repulsed In the Vosges, two German infantry attacks were checked by artillery and infantry fire They were delivered against Reich Ackerkopf, after a violent artillery bombardment

"A German aviator yesterday threw five bombs on a sanatorium at Zuydcoots, but without doing any damage"

TEUTONS CLAIM FURTHER PROGRESS ALONG DNIESTER

Austrian Press Headquarters, Vienna, (via London) June 25 The result of the successes achieved by General Von Boehm-Armolli's army in taking Lemberg and the battles east of the Galician capital, are making themselves felt also on the Dniester Since taking Mikoelalow, this army has been operating with General Linsingen's army to the south and has been pressing the Russians back upon their positions north of the Dniester The Russians offered a desperate resistance on the Dniester, especially in the center, to permit their retreating armies to save themselves and their war material The retreat of the Russians along the San and in the angle of the Vistula continues under conditions which are bringing successful results to the pursuing army of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand

TO MAKE NO PROTEST ON OPENING OF MAIL

Washington, June 25.—No protest will be made by the United States against interference with American mails passing through European belligerent territory to neutrals. Since belligerents are permitted to censor cable messages in transit officials here think letters would undergo the same risks.

Postmaster General Burleson already has ordered that mail to neutrals be sent on ships which do not touch belligerent ports

ITALIAN LOSSES AT PLAWA ABOUT 3,000

Austrian Press Bureau Emphatically Denies Capture of Stronghold.

Washington June 26 Dispatches to the Austro-Hungarian embassy here today said Plawa was still held by the Austrians and denied the claim that Italian troops have broken through. The telegram says

"In the face of false reports from Italian headquarters our press bureau states that Plawa is still held firmly by us. These positions were ordered taken by the Italian king, according to the statements of prisoners The Italians have never broken through, although they lost thousands in field attacks only

"At least 3 000 unburied dead lie before our positions Our losses were considerably smaller"

THORNE LEADS FIGHT ON FREIGHT ADVANCE

Iowan to Discuss Financial End of Railroading—C E Childe Also Appears

Washington, June 25 Argument continued today before the Interstate Commerce commission on the increased freight rates on packing house products proposed by western railroads C S Burg of the Missouri Kansas & Texas and C E Wright of the Northwestern and other lines replied to packers arguments against the increases

Mr Burg said much of the opposition was because of its possible effect on markets in western territory Mr Wright said the carriers felt they were warranted in demanding increased revenue and he believed that in selecting a few commodities they had tried to put the burden of the advance where it best could be borne.

Speaking for Iowa packers, W A. McCarnack told the Interstate Commerce commission that increased freight rates on fresh meat, packing house products, hides and fertilizer would add $100 000 a year to the burdens of his clients

State Railway Commissioner Clifford Thorne will speak for an hour and a half before the Interstate Commerce commission on the financial condition of the western roads and the leading financial issues in connection with the western advance rate case The magnitude of the case was described today by Mr Thorne as follows

"More briefs had been filed in this case than in any other in the history of the Interstate Commerce commission Over 75 briefs are filed and over 200 attorneys are in the case"

The commission listened to arguments on various schedules today including packing house products and fruits and vegetables Mr Thorne and C E Childe, of Sioux City, were among those to make brief arguments.

KANSAS WHEAT CROP 138,700,000 BUSHELS

Topeka, Kan., June 25.—Kansas winter wheat probably will yield 138,700,000 bushels this year, an average of 16.3 bushels an acre, according to the monthly state crop report issued today. This estimate is 2,100,000 bushels higher than the May forecast.

PASSPORTS FORGED IN ANTWERP, SAYS FRANCE

EGAN DISBARMENT ACTION LAUNCHED

Attorney General Reports on Assignment—Says Evidence Justifies Hearing on Complaints.

Pierre, S. D., June 25.—George W. Egan, Sioux Falls attorney and politician, may face a second disbarment proceeding in South Dakota. Late yesterday afternoon Attorney General Caldwell filed a report with the supreme court, holding that complaints on file justify the court to make an investigation of Egan's conduct as a lawyer and recommending that a formal hearing be held on the charges.

The attorney general's report is a formal preliminary in the proceedings. John J Kickland, of Minnehaha county, had filed a petition asking for Egan's disbarment and setting out certain alleged abuses. The supreme court, before taking up a general investigation on the petition, directed the attorney general to make a special investigation and report his findings to the court

Involves Three Suits.

This preliminary report is the one made yesterday by the attorney general in which he holds that the evidence at hand warrants the court in advancing to a formal hearing of the charges The Kickland petition refers to three cases—the Kickland case, the Jacob Hatland case of Garretson, and the Henry Riskgauer case of Charles Mix county Mr Caldwell's special report includes other cases not brought out in the Kickland petition

It is probable that the supreme court will designate a referee to take evidence in this disbarment proceeding and that the referee's hearing will be held at Sioux Fall. When the evidence has been assembled, for and against the accused, the papers will go before the supreme court for a decree

Disbarrd Once Before.

Mr. Egan previously was disbarred from practice in South Dakota, in connection with his method of handling the affairs of an aged and mentally infirm woman, Julia Ann O'Grady. Following a change in the personnel of the supreme court, and an apology by Mr. Egan he was reinstated to practice in the state.

The incidents of the present complaints have arisen since the restoration of his rights as an attorney.

Within the past few days Mr. Egan has announced himself as a candidate for the governorship in 1916, using a full page in the Sioux Falls newspaper to issue his statement. In this advertisement he made the claim that the disbarment action against him had been the moving impluse of his candidacy.

36 TONS OF METAL HURLED AT DUNKIRK

Fifteen Hours of Bombardment By 16-Inch Gun Does Little Damage.

Dunkirk, France, (via Paris) June 25.—Thirty-six tons of explosives and metal were fired into Dunkirk Monday from the German positions somewhere behind Dirmude. Several civilians were killed or wounded and considerable material damage was done, but not a shell reached the port or any other point of military importance.

The first shells struck in the city just at the break of dawn and others followed at intervals of 25 minutes until 6 15 in the evening. They came without warning, for though Dunkirk constantly hears the guns of the allies along the Belgian front, no sound comes from the monster weapons that hurls these 16-inch shells from a spot more than 20 miles distant. The shriek of the shell gives no warning of the missles coming as the noise is heard only in the last 200 yards of flight and almost simultaneously comes an explosion that makes the earth tremble.

The bombardment lasted 15 hours.

RUSSIA WILL GRANT AUTONOMY TO POLAND

Commission Under Premier Goremykin Now Arranging Preliminaries.

Petrograd, (via London), June 26.—The Russian council of ministers today decided to appoint a commission composed of six Russians and six Poles, under the presidency of Premier Goremykin, to deal with the preliminaries necessary to the carrying into effect of autonomy for Poland, which was proclaimed by Archduke Nicholas, commander in chief of the Russian army on August 14 of last year.

AL JENNINGS, FORMER BANDIT, WILL PREACH

One Time Oklahoma Outlaw Proposes to Clean Up City of Brooklyn.

New York, June 26.—Al Jennings, former outlaw and recently candidate for the nomination for governor in Oklahoma, is coming next October to clean up Brooklyn. He is going to conduct a religious revival there similar to those he is now conducting in the west and southwest. The Rev. Billy Sunday having sidestepped the job of reviving Brooklyn, the congregation of the Sumner Avenue Baptist church decided that Al. Jennings should have a chance.

The ex-brigand lived up to his reputation of taking all chances, and sent word that if Brooklyn needed a revival he would most certainly try his hand at it.

PORTUGAL IS PLEDGED TO SUPPORT OF ALLIES

Paris, June 25.—A Havas dispatch from Lisbon says:

"The ministerial declaration read in the chamber yesterday afternoon renews manifestations of sympathy for the allies, discloses the governmental decision to present to parliament documents which throw light on the attitude assumed by Portugal in relation to the European war and in conclusion affirms the country's resolution to seek revenge for damage suffered in Africa.

"After reading of the declaration, Alexandre Braga, leader of the democrats promised the government the support of his party."

SLATON OUT TOMORROW; MILITIA STILL ON JOB

Atlanta, Ga., June 25.—Militiamen, placed about Governor Slaton's country estate after martial law was declared Monday night, during a demonstration of protest against the commuting to life imprisonment of the death sentence of Leo M. Frank, were still on duty today. They will be maintained some time, notwithstanding Mr. Salton relinquishes the governorship tomorrow.

CONVINCE PUBLIC OF ADVERTISING VALUE

Chicago, June 25.—Plans for a campaign to educate the public to the idea that advertising does not increase the cost of articles exploited were made here today at a meeting of the executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. The campaign will be conducted largely in newspapers by a committee which includes E. T. Meredith, Des Moines, Ia.

BRITONS IN RUSH TO BUY NEW WAR BONDS

London, June 25.—About $750,000,000 of the new war loan had been applied for at banks alone up to noon today, according to the Evening Standard.

The rquests in the millions are being held back until next week. The present flow of subscriptions is mostly for moderate sums.

FIGHTING BEGINS FOR MEXICO CITY, ZAPATA RESISTING

General Gonzales, Carranza Commander, Is Attacking Capital In Artillery Battle.

HIS ADVANCE IS DELAYED

Both Sides Claim Victory at Aguas Calientes—Red Cross Relief May Be Postponed.

Washington, June 26.—Zapata forces defending Mexico City, have engaged the attacking Carranza army in a series of artillery duels and delayed its advance. No details were contained in the advices reaching here today, which were the first indications that the Carranza advance would be resisted.

Communication with Mexico City has been cut off since June 18, when General Gonzales, the Carranza commander, cut the wires to Vera Cruz at Otumba, 25 miles east of the capital. Consular advices from Vera Cruz today said the wires were still down and it was improbable that communication would be restored before Gonzales entered the city. Vera Cruz dispatches to the Carranza agency here have insisted Gonzales was trying "to save the city from the horrors of attack" and had been ordered to exhaust every means to induce the Villa-Zapata troops to withdraw without resistance.

The Carranza war department urges that the Red Cross relief expedition be delayed until after the occupation of the capital. General Carranza has promised full co-operation with it.

El Paso, Tex., June 25.—Further information as to the exact status of the military operations between the contending forces of Gen. Francisco Villa and Gen. Alvaro Obregon is awaited with keenest interest here. The claim of the Carranza agency that Obregon forces had occupied Aguas Calientes was accepted generally by the observers, notwithstanding the fact that the private messages, dated last night at Aguas Calientes and signed by Villa, were received here today. It was pointed out that a similar message was received from Villa under a Silao date two days after Villa had been driven from that city by Obregon forces.

The foreign chancelleries interested in the Mexican situation have been given to understand that the president will determine on some action in line with his recent statement on Mexican affairs after he returns from New Hampshire in July.

Some of the diplomats have received official statements that while the population was starving, $400,000 worth of foodstuffs were exported to Cuba from the territory held by Carranza in the first three months of 1915.

HOLD AN AMERICAN.

Washington, June 25.—C. E. Bates, an American, arrested at Caborea, Sonora, charged with having imported Carranza currency into Villa territory, has been ordered brought to Nogales, where Consul Simpich reported, today, he expects his release.

STAFF MISSES FIRE IN GREETING CHIEF

Governor Goes to Hotel Alone While Uniformed Colonels Wearily Wait.

San Francisco, Cal., June 26.—Through a hitch in arrangements the arrival of Governor Clarke, of Iowa, at San Francisco was a very unostentatious event. The governor disembarked at Oakland, was ferried across the bay like any plebeian individual and hunted up his hotel in San Francisco, without official escort of any kind.

The governor's staff of 17 colonels and lieutenant colonels arrived the day before, each equipped with three gorgeous uniforms, and the plan was to receive the governor with all the pomp and ceremony usually accorded to a Persian dignitary. The staff members, accompanied by some exposition officials, sallied forth to meet the governor but missed connections through confusion in the change of time out here.

While Governor Clarke was delivering his address here today, 200 members of the Des Moines Commercial club were "cut in" on special phones in their home town and listened to the speech. The general tenor of the address was in support of the claim that Iowa is the garden spot of the world.

"Whatever may happen or has happened elsewhere, Iowa never brings anxiety to her people," said the governor. "The products of her fields, frequently lavish, always are abundant. Iowa never fails. There is a sense of security and substantiality in Iowa."

TORTURE WOMAN; GET $120; FIGHT; CAPTURED

Los Angeles, Cal., June 25.—Seven Mexicans chopped their way into the home of Mrs. Louis E. Martinez, an aged resident of the Latin quarter near the Plaza early today, and applied fire to her feet which induced her to reveal the hiding place of $120 in gold. Three of the men then attacked her, after which they quarreled because $120 could not be equally divided among seven. The dispute gave Mrs. Martinez time to summon the police and five of the seven robbers were captured.

ARIZONA LEGISLATOR IS SLAPPED IN FACE

Phoenix, Ariz., June 25.—Representative James Goodwin, of Phoenix, had his face slapped today while explaining to the house of representatives his vote against a proposed "search and seizure bill." The bill was defeated.

Goodwin thought he observed that the house stenographer was not taking down his remarks and commented on her failure to do so. W P Mahoney, representative from Mohave county, took exception to what Goodwin said and an altercation ensued.

Elbert Bede Says:

In the game of hearts it is always your turn to play.

Kisses are sometimes the actions that speak louder than words

The grass widow makes nay wnether the sun shines or not

He who hesitates is won—says the leap year girl who has just proposed

A girl who gets to be an old maid has little faith in the efficiency of prayer.

A girl can quickly change her ideas of an eligible man to fit the one she can get

The person who decides all questions from his own viewpoint is not a fair judge

A woman may be born the equal of a man but it don't take her long to overcome it.

A man who can't make a name for himself is quite often satisfied to give one to a woman.

The world owes everyone a living—and is just as hard to collect from as others who owe everyone.

We all like the man who smiles—and that may be the reason why things come so easy for the smiling villian

When it is said that a woman carries her age well it is meant that she carries it where no one will ever find it.

Lots of big-hearted people don't let their sympathy go below the waist line—and carry their money in their pants' pockets.

In the clothes they wear women should learn the distinction between those that are attractive and those that are attracting.

The married man who goes away from home to hunt trouble would walk along the street lined with gold pieces and never see them.

When a man really prefers to live in the suberbs, the chances are that he want sto keep his wife where she can't get down town to shop so often.

Belonging to one political party or another must be largely a matter of habit—otherwise how could there be anyone in the parties opposed to ours?

When you get on the right track be careful that someone else does not get the right-of-way and come up from behind and butt you into the ditch.

A man's own opinion of himself is fully as reliable as the forecasts of the party vote made by the party leader just before the vote begins to come in.

A girl in love will never admit that all men are alike. A few years after marriage she may be of the same opinion still—she may think hers is the worst.

We are carless of the things that come to us naturally. That may be the reason some women we know take such particular care of their complections.

There isn't a freak reform idea of any kind that would't work all right if all people were honest—and for that reason most of them will never work.

One of the worst features of our free government is the bunch of tattered cadidates' cards that disfigure poles and old buildings from one election to another.

You hear a great deal about fighting roosters, but did you ever take notice of the way a prowling dog or cat retreats before the onslaught of the mother hen?

After a girl has been engaged seven or eight years hse begins to wonder if that is the length of time hubby would require in which to fulfill the promises made after marriage.

The man intoxicated with the nectar from a woman's lips may feel just as damphoolish over it the next morning as the man who was on a regular souse the night before.

A girl in Germany has just been married without the bridegroom. The groom was at the front and couldn't be present. Some day he may wish that the war had never ceased.

A revolutionist is usually somebody who is too cowardly to risk his own life to get something he desires, so he becomes a leader of the downtrodden and sicks them on from the rear.

If there is anything in the old saying about faith that move mountains, the woman who believes everything her husband tells her has faith enough to make this old world reverse its motions.

We should not be so quick to express our own conclusions when someone is found "not guilty." Think of the many things of which we are guilty, which our own hypocrisy keeps from becoming known.

When conditions are such as to make you wish to sit down and wait for things to become more propitious that is the time to get out and hustle, for your competitors with less energy than yourself will be doing what you wished to do and you will have the field all to yourself.

A man feels completely neglected both at the wedding and when the first baby arrives—but he may get some satisfaction from reflecting that those who go into raptures over the wonderful things done by delicate to the fly-wheel, without which the engine that operates the machinery could not run.

SUNDAY BASE BALL

The question of baseball in Belmond on Sunday appears to be apt to come up again, as the game of last Sunday has caused some discussion both pro and con. There are two sides to this question as to any other and it appears that a ball game properly conducted on Sunday is no worse than other innocent amusements in which various good citizens of Belmond indulge themselves on the Sabbath day. From a legal standpoint, there is no method by which Sunday baseball can be prevented unless the same becomes a nuisance to the residents of the locality in which the games are played. In the absence of a town ordinance controlling the matter, no official attention will be given the same as the entire matter is up to the town council. Should that body deem it necessary to enact an ordinance prohibiting such games, the ordinance will be enforced.—Belmond Herald Press.

THE SANE FOURTH

As a result of the movement started a few years ago for a national rational celebration of the Fourth of July, casualities consequent on the observance of the day have decreased at a surprising rate. Last year they were less than one-fourth of the number reported five years ago. Moreover, cases of Fourth of July tetanus have become almost a thing of the past. Back in 1903, the deaths from lockjaw caused by Independence day accidents numbered 417. Last year only three fatal cases were reported to the national health authorities at Washington. In the campaign for a sane Fourth, emphasis has been put on the danger attending the neglect of trivial wounds, particularly those made by blank cartridges, paper caps and the like. This, in a large measure accounts for the decreased mortality. Parents are learning that no wound or burn is too insignificant to be overlooked.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system, and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

MEET ME AT KLEMME, SAT., JULY 3rd

BOUNTIFUL PROMISE FROM WESTERN CANADA

Average Increase of Acreage in Wheat Over 22 Per Cent.

Province.	Wheat Acreage Increase.
Saskatchewan	25 per cent
Alberta	32½ per cent
Manitoba	15 per cent
Average for prairies	22½ per cent

Saskatchewan.

The growth of the crop during the past week was very satisfactory. Rain fell in many places during the early part of the week, followed by warmer weather, which has been most beneficial to the grain. Breaking and summer-fallowing were well under way, and conditions generally were most promising.

The following reports have been received by the department from the various centers: Denholm—A little rain needed in the northern part to start late grain; remainder of district plenty of moisture Davidson—Ideal growing weather; a few farmers harrowing grain to conserve moisture by breaking crust formed since last rain. North Battleford to Prince Albert—Good growing weather, crops looking well. Slight damage near North Battleford from cutworms, recent rains beneficial. Kindersley—Crops looking fine and prospects good, plenty of moisture, with prospects of more rain Every slough in this country is full. Prince Albert—Crops in fair condition, though cutworms and light frosts have done damage in some sections. Have had moderate quantity of rain.

Owing to prompt marketing of the harvest of 1914, the farmers were enabled to devote more time than usual to cultivation in the autumn, under conditions which were decidedly favorable and that combined with the opportunities for soil preparation presented by an early spring this year, has resulted in the seeding of a wheat area estimated at twenty-five per cent greater than last year. Areas sown to oats and flax may be less than last year, because of the concentration upon the cereal in greater demand for export Wheat seeding was completed eight days earlier than the average, under almost ideal conditions

Alberta.

"Prospects excellent. Abundant moisture throughout the province, following rain Area thirty to thirty-five per cent greater. Crop generally two weeks earlier"

Attention is drawn to the fact that the land has not been in such fine condition to work for years; neither has there been as much moisture as there was last autumn. This was protected during the winter by a little more than the average snowfall, which remained on the land, not being removed by the warm chinook winds, as is usually the case There never has been a more optimistic feeling than exists today, judging by the information received from various parts of the province. We feel justified in saying that the crop never went in under more favorable circumstances, weather splendid and land particularly well worked

While it is true that the acreage will be greatly increased, it is pleasing to learn that, despite the high price of feed, the receipts of milk and cream at the dairies continue to keep up, and that the output of the creameries has increased in quantity

One of the most encouraging things in last year's work was the increase of practically thirty per cent in the output of cream and butter south of Calgary.

Manitoba.

Owing to the exceptionally early harvest last year and favorable fall weather, a much larger acreage of land was prepared than usual, and partly for the same reason and the prospects of high prices for all kinds of grain, farmers took more pains in the preparation of land, so that the spring opened up with 1,235,000 acres of fully prepared land above the previous year Seeding was general by the 7th of April, some days in advance of the average. Since that time the weather has been exceptionally favorable for the sowing of wheat, and the farmers have taken full advantage of it Much of the crop is now above the surface There has been a very general and liberal rainfall; this will hasten the germination of the recently sown wheat, and will prevent the soil from drifting off the later sown crop. The area sown in wheat is fully 15 per cent greater than last year.

To sum up the agricultural situation generally, the Department of Agriculture says "The area is larger than usual, the land has been well prepared, and the wheat has been sown at the right time; not so early as to run the risk of being killed off by frost, but sufficiently early to insure its ripening in the fall"—Advertisement.

Hard on the Prosecutor.

A lawyer who was engaged by the city to prosecute one James Magee for keeping a gambling house, warming up to his subject, shouted:

"James Magee has kept a gambling house, does keep a gambling house! I have proved it again and again. I have said once and for all it is a gambling house, and I maintain it."

"That's right, your honor," said the culprit. "I'd have failed long ago but for the patronage of the honorable gentleman."

This is not a free country, but, with three or four exceptions, it is as free as any.

Fourth of July Warning

BY OLE O. ROE.
State Fire Marshal.

The Glorious Fourth is near at hand.

Inasmuch as its celebration is always attended with the use of some form of fireworks, I deem a word of caution in order.

More than 200 persons die; the fingers or eyes of more than 2,000 children are destroyed, and more than 600 buildings are burned annually in the United States as the result of the careless use of fireworks on the Fourth.

The small firecracker burns more houses than any other form of fireworks, and the paper balloon is a most dangerous fire producer.

The common skyrocket will set fire to any inflammable matter into which it may fall.

More incendiary fires occur on the Fourth than on any other day.

The Fourth is the fireman's busiest day.

The remedy is care.

Never allow firecrackers or other kinds of fireworks to be exploded or thrown in the back part of the yard, in back alleys, in or near barns or close to buildings containing inflammable matter.

Do not let young children handle fireworks; impress the older children with the danger of it.

Remember that all fireworks contain dangerous explosives and should be handled with the greatest care.

Remove all rubbish and all dry grass and other inflammable substances from your premises before the Fourth.

Be patriotic, but let your patriotism be tempered with caution and common sense.

Make it a "Safe and Sane" Fourth.

PREVENTING TETANUS.

From the Baltimore Medical Journal.

It is important to sound a note of warning each year just before the annual celebration of Independence day, calling attention to the possibilities of further reducing the mortality of tetanus. Consultation of the annual compilations made by The Journal of the American Medical Association of the tetanus cases occurring as the result of Fourth of July celebrations since 1903 will show that there has been a gradual reduction in number. In 1903 there were 415 cases of tetanus in the United States as the result of Fourth of July injuries; in 1911 there were only 18. Of the 18 cases of tetanus occurring in 1911, 10, or 55 per cent, terminated fatally, as compared with 93 per cent in 1910, 84 per cent in 1909 and 72 per cent in 1908. While these figures are very gratifying they can still be improved. Tetanus, and particularly death as the result of tetanus, are almost entirely avoidable.

Not only the layman, but also the physician, should be impressed with the fact that a death from tetanus should practically never occur. The loss of life from this cause must be ascribed entirely to the neglect of the patient or his parents to seek medical advice early enough after the injury. The experience of years proves conclusively that tetanus antitoxin is most valuable, but entire dependence should not be placed on it to the neglect of other treatment. Antitoxin is not a substitute for surgical care and treatment, it is an aid thereto. Fatal results may occur because antitoxin is injected too late or because the local infection is not given the necessary attention. The antitoxin should be used at the earliest possible opportunity, in sufficiently large doses. The injections may be repeated often and the dosage increased without doing harm to the patient.

The most essential curative measure is the proper treatment of the wound. The tetanus bacillus dies on exposure to air, and it is most important that every part of the wound be exposed freely to the air. The presence of even an infinitesimal quantity of oxygen stops its activities; therefore, a sufficient supply of oxygen will prevent its growth and the production of its poisons. Free incision under general or local anestesia exposes the wound sufficiently to the air. Thorough removal of every particle of foreign material from the wound and the application of a light dressing to prevent infection by pus organisms, with the other measures suggested, are sufficient treatment.

BRITISH OFFICERS WOULDN'T FIGHT

From the New York Tribune

When King George III of England wanted his army to coerce his American colonies into obeying the will of parliament there was mutiny—rank mutiny—by a lot of the most eminent officers of the time, with corresponding disaffection among the rank and file to such an extent that the king did not dare to try to send many of his own troops to America, but sent instead, first to Russia and then to Hesse and elsewhere, to hire mercenary officers and troops.

John Pitt, eldest son of England's greatest statesman and his successor as Earl of Chatham, was then a rising officer of the army He inherited so much of his father's zeal for the American rebels that he vowed he would not serve against them, and if, therefore, the king wanted his commission, why, there it was. The king did not want it, however, but sent Pitt to help fight through the siege of Gibraltar, from which he came home to be first lord of the admiralty and privy councilor Later he was at the head of that unlucky expedition to Walcheren which provoked the historic epigram:

Great Chatham, with his saber drawn,
Stood waiting for Sir Richard Strachan
Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em,
Stood waiting for the Earl of Chatham.

Augustus Keppel, Viscount Keppel, son of the Earl of Albemarle, one of the most prominent officers of the navy, also refused to fight the Americans. That was in 1775. The next year he was put in command of the channel fleet, and two years later, as admiral of the blue, he was commander of the grand fleet against the French. His career was marked with inefficiencies and scandals, but he never suffered for his refusal to obey orders against America.

Lord Frederick Cavendish, a member of one of the greatest historic families of England, was another of the mutineers of 1775. He was then a major general, but he was not required to give up his commission. On the contrary, he was made full general in 1782 and later became field marshal. He was one of the famous quartet of officers who at the beginning of the French and Indians or Seven Years' war took an oath not to marry until France had been conquered. The others were Keppel, named above; Moncton and Wolfe, the hero of Quebec. The sequel was that not one of them ever married. Wolfe, indeed, became engaged to Miss Lowther just before he sailed for Canada, but a hero's death claimed him before his intended bride.

Also there was Henry Seymour, Baron Conway, veteran of Fonenoy and Culloden. He had been conspicuous as a "traitor" in parliament and in the cabinet. It was he who moved for the repeal of the stamp act, at which moment, said Burke, "his face was as it were the face of an angel." He swore that he would not raise a hand against the Americans. But that rank mutiny did not prevent him from being field marshal and commander in chief and after the war a member of the cabinet again. It was he, by the way, who offered the resolution in parliament which compelled Lord North to resign.

The Earl of Effingham, a member of the illustrious house of Howard, openly refused to fight against the Americans and was commended for so doing by the corporations of the cities of London and Dublin in public addresses and testimonials.

Pearl Harbor.

From the Technical World.

When it was seen that Manila was useless as a defense for this country and would be a handicap instead of a help in war Pearl harbor, on one of the Hawaiian islands, nine miles from Honolulu, was selected, and $13,000,000 appropriated by congress for its fortification has been nearly expended. It has a better harbor than either Gibraltar or Heigoland. A concave sweep of land makes the harbor, which is crowned by a long ridge of gigantic trees and rugged and tumbled rock that terminates in an extinct volcano known as Diamond Dead A frowning mountainside hides a beautiful lake that is reached from the sea by an inlet like the neck of a bottle. It covers 11 square miles, with a depth of about 60 feet over nearly all of it The neck that leads to the sea is three miles long and hardly wider than necessary for vessels to pass. Parallel with the coast is a coral reef a mile wide Through this a channel 1,000 feet wide has been cut

It has been equipped with one of the most complete naval stations in the world, a mile square in extent It has a dry dock, which is the largest in the world, $400,000 ammunition plant, and oil tanks for vessels. The fortifications, extending for 15 miles to Honolulu, consist of powerful batteries, with cement emplacements below the ground level The ends are guarded by two forts neither of which can be seen from the ocean. On the land the guns are defended by a series of earthworks that form a crescent from the harbor to Honolulu In the extinct volcano is a mortar battery The four mortars of this battery have an extreme coast range of nine miles, throwing 12-inch shells weighing 700 pounds The seacoast defenses have 14-inch guns and the forts are supplemented with submarine mines controlled by electricity.

Pearl harbor is about 2,000 miles from Unalaska and from Samoa at opposite ends and a little less from San Francisco So with this impregnable base a fleet can guard the whole range of the Pacific for this distance and have this safe retreat for refitting and fresh supplies. It is believed by many that we need two additional bases at Unalaska and at Samoa, which would thus give us a complete defense of friendly waters, except as against Great Britain with her British-American or Canadian ports for retreat

New Meaning of "Classic."

From the Ohio State Journal

Here is a picture in a newspaper showing a girl executing the new classic dance The classic part of it, we suppose, is the legs, which are bare to above the knee, and one of them is bent so that the heel almost touches the backbone The beautiful part of this dance is that it is classic Whatever is nude these days is classic, and whoever denies it is an unlettered boor One can see a great deal of classic art in the theaters, the vaudeville, the picture shows and on the streets. The papers, too, are much devoted to art. Some of them so classic that they won't print the picture of a woman unless there is a delightful display of the nudities The world has gone daft on the classics and the newspapers fill the nudities part with a lavish hand. We saw a picture in a moral newspaper the other day of society women visiting the war vessels in New York, and the whole picture was devised for the sole purpose of showing a charming woman climbing the stairs to the bridge The classic eclipsed the sair, the bridge, the whole battleship. How do we know? Our intellectual concept told us so.

Every soldier in the Japanese army carries with him a "kettle" made of ordinary Japanese paper. When hot water is desired, the "kettle" is filled, then water is poured over it, and it is hung over the fire, which causes the water to boil in about 10 minues. This "kettle" can be used eight or 10 times.

School girls of Berlin must not carry their books in a handbag, but in a knapsack on the back. The minister of education is responsible for this new rule. The rule is directed to teachers, parents and the girls themselves. The minister declares that the habit of carrying books in handbags is likely to lead to curvature of the spine and derangement of internal organs.

WE OWE PART OF JULY 4 TO JOHN BARRY, AN IRISH-AMERICAN

To Commodore John Barry, "father of the American navy," we owe at least a part of our independence. Barry was the senior, the commanding officer of the American navy in the revolution and at one time John Paul Jones served under him. Barry came to America from Ireland when 15 years old and elected to make the sea his profession. He soon took rank as a sailor of rare ability and commanded a number of big merchant ships. At the outbreak of the revolution he was commissioned to command the brig Lexington of 16 guns, and this vessel was the first to fly the continental flag. He captured the first ship ever taken by an American warship. Later he commanded the Effington and the Raleigh.

The greatest battle of Barry's career was the contest between the Alliance and Atlanta and Trespassy, which he compelled to surrender. He served till at the age of 58 he died in Philadelphia in 1803. His remains lie in St. Mary's church yard in Philadelphia.

The Barry tomb is one of the most impressive mementos of him because of the inscription which it bears. It says in part "He fought often and bled in the cause of freedom, but his deeds of valor did not diminish the virtues which adorned his private life. He was eminently gentle, kind, just and charitable, beloved by family, friends and country." There are various monuments to Barry in America. One of them stands in Independence square, Philadelphia.

The memory of Barry is revered by Irish-Americans, and various movements looking to the payment of honor to his memory have been inaugurated by them.

TEACHING OF THE FOURTH

By Rev. Francis E. Clark.

Our nations has been marvelously prosperous in the past because the great heart of the people has been sound and true. We have been, for the most part, true to the traditions of the fathers. We have kept in good degree to the simplicity and God fearing purpose of the pilgrims. We have sought to make America an asylum for the oppressed and to stand for righteousness and liberty and peace among the nations of the world. Because of this great underlying purpose, in spite of many mistakes and wanderings from the highest ideal, God has wonderfully blessed us. We are among the live and living nations of the day, as Lord Salisbury expresses it, and not among the dying nations. Then, in conclusion, let one with seven generations of American and Puritan blood in his veins urge you, patriotic, young, Christian Americans, to be true to your great inheritance to remember all the way in which God has led us in the past, to stand for our country when she is right, but never for "our country right or wrong," to use the victories of the past as not abusing them, and to resolve that because of the great favor of our God we will do our very best to make our beloved land a righteous, God fearing, peace loving nation, ever the refuge and the champion of the oppressed and never a bombastic bully among the nations of the earth.

Let Him Off Easy.

From Everybody's Magazine.

Some men in Georgia, returning from a lynching bee, were driven by a colored teamster, who answered to the name of "Bogy." "Well Bogy" inquired a number of the party, when they had got away from the scene of action "what have you got to say about it?"

Well I'll be fair wif ye, boss," answered the frightened Bogy I thinks we let dat rascal off powerful light"

The Noble Few.

Few are the clear, strong spirits, who can look
To look on Truth in her unclouded blaze,
Few are the high, heroic souls who dare,
Above the low pursuits of gain, to raise
Their firm unending purpose few can gaze
At virtue on her pure and awful throne—
Ah! few can love the ethereal coin she pays—
But they must love it, for the souls alone
Who master self can claim our birthright as their own

DOG VALUABLE IN WARFARE

Intelligent Animal Brings Sorely Needed Aid to Wounded During a Lull in the Fighting.

A war correspondent speaks of a French soldier who, in writing to his family, told how his life was saved by the pet dog of his regiment. Struck by a fragment of shell in the arm and with a saber cut over the head, the wounded man was lying half-covered by the dead bodies of his comrades, when he felt a light touch on his forehead. It was Tom, the regiment's dog.

In spite of his pain the soldier tried to raise himself up a little. He knew that the animal was trained to carry to the camp a wounded man's cap, but he had lost his own. The dog hesitated, and the soldier said to him: "Run quickly, Tom; go and find my comrades Go on—find them!"

Then Tom understood. He dashed away to the camp, ran about among the men, pulling their coats and barking, and at last succeeded in drawing two ambulance men to the spot where the wounded soldier lay He was taken up quickly, cared for by the surgeons, and today he is fast recovering.

Tom goes toward the firing line as soon as the bullets begin to fly. He scratches a hole in the ground and crouches there During the lulls in the firing he does duty with the ambulance men, and helps to save the wounded

His Opinion.

"It's a dreadful thing to sell liquor on Sunday," said the reformer.

"Yes, it is," replied Mr. Jagsby. "People who lack the foresight to lay in a supply on Saturday night that will last them until Monday don't deserve any sympathy, and furthermore, I think bartenders are just as much entitled to spend Sunday with their families and take a little outing in one of the city parks as anybody else."

Profane.

"What do you think of my new auto horn?" asked Mr. Flipper, squeezing the bulb and producing a "Squawk!" that was calculated to scare a pedestrian out of his seven senses.

"I don't like it at all," replied his wife. "It sounds too much like the language you use when you are fixing the car."

Taking No Chances.

"Dearest," he said, "can I get you a nice diamond ring for Christmas?"

"No, darling," whispered the far-seeing young thing. "I will take the ring now. Let Christmas bring its happy surprises, just as usual."

Indian Forced to Succeed.

The white man and the Indian could mix, and the Indian has to succumb. All of us admire the Indian and would like to see him survive all time; but it appears impossible that with advancing civilization he can continue. The Indian simply will not submit to the changed conditions and still dreams of the 'happy hunting ground,' and the forest and streams nothing the government can do him can reconcile him. The automobile and other things have helped along in his reckless career, but tuberculosis has been the most destroying element in the life of the American aborigine.

The Corinth Courier waited. It had everything to lose and nothing to gain. The editor got very drunk—and he hadn't been drunk in 10 years—and sent his impotent lamentations to heaven on more than one street corner He desired all Corinth to know that he couldn't help himself That was the curse of running a newspaper in a small town His hands were tied But he was able to give an excellent demonstration that his tongue was not tied—that is to say, not properly tied

Before nightfall of that memorable day, the population of Corinth, from extreme youth to doddering old age knew that Chetwynd Blagden had robbed the bank and had fled under cover of night, to join a vile temptress in New York—a vampire in the shape of a woman. Mo[illegible]r everyone knew that Horace Bl[illegible] had gone up to the "Giant's C[illegible] (ghastly misnomer!) —at noon and[illegible] not been seen outside its doors since Hundreds of people went out of their way to walk past the house during the afternoon, casting furtive glances at the windows officials of the bank and of other concerns in which he was interested, telephoned to the house, and each in turn was told that Mr Blagden could see no one, nor would he speak with anyone

Mr Presbrey approached the house at 6, confidently expecting to be admitted. He was turned away by the sour faced Martha, much to his surprise A couple of curious witnesses: the gate below hurried away, snickering over the minister's rebuff Mr Presbrey walked very stiffly up the street dimly conscious of a shy, evasive sense of elation, admittedly unbecoming a man of his parts, but singularly insistent just the same At his own dinner table that evening he confided certain beliefs to his wife, chief among them being the opinion that Mr Blagden was narrow He even went so far as to question that gentleman's attitude toward the unfortunate children of Mary Midthorne

"Chickens come home to roost," observed Mr Presbrey, a remark which may appear vague to the reader of these lines, but not so to Mrs Presbrey, on whom the inference was not wasted

Neither of the Midthornes was seen on the streets that day They kept close to the house, and they spoke in undertones. All through the long afternoon, they wandered through the tomb like house, occasionally pausing in the hallway near the closed door of their uncle's room to listen for sounds from within Sometimes they wondered if the two people who confined themselves there were dead or alive Only at rare intervals were signs of life apparent, such as the shifting of a chair, or the tread of slow moving feet, or the sharp tapping of finger nails on the arm of a well known rocker, in which their uncle was wont to sit

Mr Blagden, on his return from the bank at noon had gone directly upstairs, followed by his wife Ten minutes later he emerged alone He ordered the servants to come to the library, and there in the presence of the Midthornes he announced to the astonished household that his son had transgressed the law and was no longer a member of the family He gave no details, knowing full well that they would be supplied by willing tongues before the day was over, more expansively than he could have presented them even if he had been inclined to stoop to the task

"You may go now" he said curtly to a gaping audience composed of cook parlor maid waitress gardener and stable man He had said all that he intended to say 'Bear in mind what I have said about mentioning my son's name in this house, or in the presence of his mother or myself It is possible, even likely, that he may be apprehended and—er, ahem'—brought back to Corinth If such should be the case, I shall not deny him the right to seek counsel and the help of the two persons who are responsible for his coming into this world This is his home when he chooses to come back to it in humility and contriteness. But as long as he elects voluntarily to remain a fugitive, a—an outcast, you might say—just so long shall he be regarded as an enemy to this household I am his father If he comes to me for help, for support—ay, even for love—I shall not fail him You may go now"

Turning to Eric and Mary, as the servants filed out, he said "Your Aunt Rena will not come down to luncheon If you will sit down, I shall try to tell you as clearly as I can just what it is that Chetwynd has done. I do not expect you to say that you are sorry for him. Perhaps I ought not to expect you to be sorry for his mother or me I shall merely ask you to be considerate. If you are to gloat over his fall from the pedestal on which we placed him, kindly restrain yourselves in our presence."

At the end of his careful and rather monotonous recital, he lowered his chin and fumbled for a moment with the tassels on the arm of the chair in which he sat facing them

"My children," he said huskily, "I am a God fearing man, as you have reason to know But I am about to defy Him I shall pray to God that my son may never live to face these charges I would rather have him take his own life today than to continue in the life he has begun to lead"

He arose and, placing a hand on the shoulder of each, looked into their eyes, with a film over his own

"I would give all I have in the world if my son could have looked me fairly and frankly in the eyes as you have always done. If he could have done that, he would not be where he is today."

Eric's gaze wavered for a second but he managed to keep it steady after a mighty effort of the will "He would not be where he is today'" The words seemed to burn themselves into his very soul.

"Adam Carr will not be turned aside" went on Horace, beginning to pace the floor. "He hates me. He will not rest until he has found—him There is no way to keep this dreadful thing from going to the public. Before night the newspapers will have it all It—it will kill your aunt, I fear. To think that her boy may be hounded for years by one so implacable as Adam Carr'" He stopped at the table, from sheer force of habit, arranged the magazines on the corner, restoring the pile to its accustomed symmetry His was a well ordered home. Nothing was ever out of place.

"I—I am sorry, Uncle Horace," murmured the tender hearted Mary, tears streaming down her cheeks.

Eric stood with bowed head, speechless.

"This should be a lesson to you, Eric," said Mr. Blagden monotonously. "Avoid evil companions at college. Keep away from bad women"

The habit was strong in him.

"Your aunt will be down for dinner. Please bear in mind that no reference is to be made to—to all this. I have told her of the drawing, Eric She says she has something to tell me when I go back to her I—I trust it is not something she has felt necessary to hide from me If I were you I would not go out on the streets this afternoon. Wait until after nightfall"

He left them, and they heard him slowly mount the stairs. Then the door to his room was closed gently They did not see him again until dinner time

By that time, scores of people had called up the house on the telephone, and at least four correspondents had been turned away from the door only to take up positions across the street with note books ready Their cameras got views of the "Giant's Castle" from all sides. One daring chap entered the grounds and photographed the rose bush that Chetwynd had planted on his 7th birthday to watch some important was attached because up to that season it had borne white roses, but had been prophetically barren this year

No less than a dozen eminently veracious citizens had seen young Blagden board a freight train late the previous evening, bound for New York An unhappy controversy ensued over that very point No two of them saw him board it at the same place, nor were they all agreed that it was a freight train Some of them said it was the express train leaving at 6 11, while others mentioned the local at 8 32. John Hawes conversed with the young man in front of Coe's drug store at 7 o'clock, and he was impressed at the time with Chetwynd's nervousness Mrs. Sanford, of the Second Congregational church choir, was positive she saw a very blond young woman with him shortly after 8 A strange young woman in Corinth she was quite sure of that

Dinner at the Blagden home that night was a dismal affair Mrs. Blagden, very wan and red eyed, seldom looked up from her plate Mr Blagden rarely looked down from the old fashioned crystal chandelier except to inspect the dishes set before him by the solemn Martha.

But four places had been laid There was no empty chair at the table for the simple reason that it stood back against the wall with others of its kind

Of the four who sat there in perfunctory obedience to custom, Eric Midthorne was the only one who was not wondering what the missing member of the family was doing at the time Two of them were tortured by the belief that he was in the arms of the woman who had dragged him out of the sanctuary they had built around him the third was not so sure that he would not creep back into the house when the night was old and the town asleep

Eric, alone knew where Chetwynd Blagden was spending the night

Shortly after the meal was over, he excused himself and left the house ostensibly to take a short walk about the grounds When he was out of sight around the corner of the house, he broke into a run and was soon flying across the garden in the direction of Jabez Carr's cottage Vaulting the high brick wall at the lower end of the garden he raced across the meadow and up to the barred gates There was a light in the window of the gate keeper's lodge Eric shouted and rattled the gates to attract attention

Old Jabez opened the door and peered forth over his spectacles He was holding a book in his hand

'Get away from there!' he roared 'Dang ye, don't you know it's agin' orders to let Hello! Is that you Eric? What's up my lad?"

He hurried over to the gate forgetting his keys in his excitement Suddenly remembering them he would have hobble back for them but for Eric's impatient cry

"Don't open the gate Where is Mr Adam?"

'He's gone to New York, hot on the trail of that young scalawag' said Jabez, lowering his voice as he came up to the gate 'And he'll get him, too, Eric, sure as you're born They never slip away from Adam when he once gets wind of 'em I don't mind tellin' you, seein' you don't love your cousin any too well, that Adam's never goin' to rest until he lands him where he belongs Say wasn't you plumb laid over on your beam's end by the news? Gee—al-mighty I bet there's wailin' and gnashin' of teeth up there in yonder house'

The old man's laugh was almost a cackle, he was so excited

"He's gone to New York?" cried Eric, blankly

"On the 6 something," said Jabez. "Say, just you wait a minute till I get the keys I've been a dyin' to talk it over with you"

'I can't stop,' said Eric shortly "Did he say when he was coming back?"

"He won't come till he fetches Chetwynd with him, you can bet on that," said Adam's father grimly "You ain't likely to see Adam again, my lad, until you see that fine cousin of yours. They'll come back together one of these days Then, we'll see how Master Horace likes— Hey! What's your hurry? Can't you stay awhile?"

CHAPTER XII.

WHO LAUGHS AT LOVE.

Days passed, and no word came from Adam Carr The Blagdens lived in constant fear of a telegram announcing the capture of their son. They started with every ring of the telephone bell. The rattle of the knocker on the front door always brought a quick chill of apprehension. Then they would look at each other, inevitably with the same question in their eyes, always with an immediate lowering of the lids.

There was not an hour in their days and their nights in which they were free from the feeling that the front door was about to open to admit their son, and that he would slink in as if no other refuge was open to him.

Adam Carr certainly had laid the foundation for a sublime revenge. The most Machiavellian mind could not have developed a scheme for vengeance so complete as the one which chance had put in his way. Barring the defection of Eric, the Blagdens might go to the end of their days without a single instant of immunity from the plague that hung over their heads.

So long as they lived they would be waiting for the some coming of Chetwynd.

Adam's unhappy accomplice appreciated all this, and yet could not break the spell that had fallen upon him. He was not blind to the suffering of his uncle and aunt. In his heart he pitied them. He found it easy to convince himself that he had not committed murder His conscience was clear as to that. Long hours of miserable reflection had brought surcease to his own troubled mind It was not the thought of Chetwynd that brought remorse to him, but the sight of these tense, unsmiling parents, both or whom by some miracle of nature suddenly had grown gentle and considerate toward him and his sister All the time he knew that he was but an instrument in the hands of fate, and fate in this case was Adam Carr

Sometimes he wondered how long he could maintain this dreadful silence, in his heart, Eric was honest. He realized that he was living part of a great lie and that the time was bound to come when he would burst the bonds that held him and lay the truth before the world. There were moments, indeed, when he felt confession rushing up to his lips, but always it was stayed by the stronger sensation of fear—fear of the scaffold: If Adam Carr was implacable, what of Horace Blagden? How could he hope for mercy at the hands of this over tortured, humiliated man? Horace Blagden would not rest until he had crushed the slayer of his son, and with him that inscrutable friend and adviser The law would clamp its jaws on both of them, and that would be an end to it.

Eric was not insensible to the fact that Adam Carr in the beginning, had been actuated by a feeling of friendship He did not question the sincerity of the man's motives on that vital day Nor was there any doubt in his mind that he would prove steadfast and true to the compact made at that time The conception of the plan to harass Horace Blagden came after that kindly initial impulse. It was something that leaped into existence the moment he had time to think of the possibilities afforded by the extraordinary combination of circumstances Adam was a man to think quickly to see far ahead It was his business, his trade his training That he should take advantage of these tragic conditions was distressing even appalling to Eric, but what could he do in the premises That Adam might at any time betray him was a thought that never entered his mind.

As the days went by, he became more and more reconciled to the situation tense and trying as it was. He was not happy The shadow was always present And yet there was never a time when he could not look his uncle or aunt in the eye and say to himself that not he but Chetwynd himself, had put the blight on the hearts of these two. He never thought of Mary without experiencing a thrill of relief, almost gladness, that he had a hand, with fate, in destroying the wretch who would have despoiled her of all that was pure and sweet

After all, Chetwynd had gone down in a fair fight It had been a duel!

The time was drawing near for his departure for Cambridge His uncle had made all of the arrangements for his winter. He was to be pleasantly situated amidst such surroundings as only a Blagden could command. If there remained any of the old bitterness in the heart of Horace Blagden, it was being rather skillfully hidden beneath the cloak of kindness.

And yet Eric was not quite sure of his uncle. There were times when he caught the older man looking at him with a strangely penetrating but far away gaze, from which he usually brought himself up with a start. At such times the young man was troubled by the vague conviction that Mr Blagden was looking past him and into the shadow beyond, as if he was trying to materialize the spirits that lurked there in waiting. It was on these occasions that the young man quailed within himself, for it seemed to him that his uncle was actually projecting his mind into direct communication with the spirit of his absent son.

Needless to say, Mr. Presbrey, not at all discouraged by the rebuff of that first day, called on the second, and thereafter every day, including Sundays for weeks to come. It was somewhat of a shock to him that Mr. and Mrs. Blagden were unwilling to share their troubles with him. In fact, the former so positively declared that his son's name was not to be mentioned in the house he had dishoroned that the minister was for some time at a loss how to proceed.

If he was not to speak of Chetwynd, in the name of heaven what was he to talk about? He had come to discuss the cruel pain they suffered. It was very disconcerting not to be able to do so To be compelled to fall back upon church finances in the face of such an opportunity as this, was not what he had bargained for, and yet that is precisely what he had to do.

Moreover, to his great amazement, the Blagdens plainly resented a humble desire on his part to do a little more good in the world by offering to devote an hour or two to Eric and Mary, who, he supposed, were liable to neglect in this hour of tribulation.

"I think, Presbrey" said Horace evenly, "that we've been a trifle mawkish"

"Mawkish?" gasped Mr Presbrey

"Perhaps that isn't the word," explained the other. "I should have said we've preached at them until there's really nothing left for us to say"

"You mean, that our duty to them has already been fulfilled?"

"I believe they are quite capable of thinking for themselves."

Mr Presbrey stared. "I trust, Mr. Blagden, you do not contemplate—er—I mean you surely do not mean to say that you are now indifferent to their spiritual needs and welfare."

Sheridan Would Ride Cycle Now.

From Scribner's Magazine.

Especially significant of this titanic war is the total disappearance of the galloping orderly, his place has been taken by the motorcyclist. Among British officers, particularly, the motor bicycle has long been popular, and, in addition to what the army could supply in the first instance on its own account, a large number of riders, many of them from the universities, and specially chosen as dispatch bearers for their skill and linguistic abilities, have been recruited from the volunteer element and sent out as required, the first contingent being 1,000 strong, with a second 1,000 in reserve. Theirs has been the most active, daring and dangerous work of any units of the forces, for they have had to carry instructions from point to point, often under fire, and generally under conditions of great risk. As the speed of their machines, however, is five times as great as that of a horse, and their distance capacities virtually without limit, it follows that their sphere of usefulness has been as vast as their services have been priceless.

Again and again have officers paid testimony to the extreme military value of the work of these plucky riders, who have enabled the allied commanders to maintain constant communication along the vast front from Belgium to Alsace Lorraine. Individual acts of the highest bravery have been countless, but I may mention two as typical. A dispatch bearer ran right into a party of 14 Uhlans. He braved them single handed, drew his revolver and shot down an officer and a private. The others turned and fled, and the motorcyclist was able to deliver his dispatch, which informed the corps commander that the Germans were in the vicinity, and thus prevented what might have been a disagreeable surprise. In another case, an intrenched British company observed in the distance a French regiment marching right up to a spot which concealed German artillery. The Frenchmen's fate was sealed unless they could be warned. Out jumped a cyclist, but he was promptly shot down. Another followed, and he, too, fell immediately Then a third dashed out, bending low over his machine and managed to pass through a hail of bullets unharmed and reach the approaching regiment just in time. The commanding officer immediately detached a decoration from his own breast and pinned it to that of the intrepid rider.

WANTED THE REGULAR TOOLS

At Least Colored Man Was Sure of One Thing, He Wouldn't Work With the Pie.

An old negro man was standing by a grassy yard in front of a Chinaman's washhouse when a woman walked to the street corner near by to board a car. The old man approached her and, lifting his hat, politely said: "Lady, can you tell me where I can obtain a job?"

He held in his hand a loosely wrapped package, from which protruded the edge of what was apparently a five-cent pie

The lady replied that he might ask the Chinaman for the job of cutting the grass. So the colored man bargained with the Chinaman to cut the grass, for which he was to receive 25 cents.

Then it turns out that the Chinaman has no tools, and the colored man's lawn mower is a long way off at his home and he is disinclined to go after it, for the way is weary, the flesh tired

The lady finally suggested in a matter of fact way: "Are you going to cut the grass with the pie?" The colored man drew himself up with great dignity and replied, reprovingly.

"Lady, I never cut grass with a pie"

Grass Widow's Grievance.

"That fortune teller got all mixed up on my husbands," said the grass widow as she left the seventh daughter, with an escort holding tight. "She said I had had two; then she wouldn't say I would have three. I thought that mean of her. Instead, she kept on saying what a nice husband I had now, what a fine man he was, and all that idiocy. Why, my husband is the meanest little brute that ever lived. I haven't laid eyes on him for two years. Now, why do you suppose that fortune teller kept on saying he was such a nice husband?" she demanded. "That's easy," said the escort. "She thought I was your husband and she'd get to tell my fortune when she had finished yours."

No Rest for the Weary.

"It was bad enough when every other man you met knew all about the causes leading up to the war in Europe?"

"Yes."

"But now every smart Alec you meet thinks he knows what Japan has up her sleeve."

Sim Heck's notion of the ideal condition is to be too sick to work and well enough to come downtown.

Always pure and delicious.

Fond of Powder.

Crawford—I see the belligerents are calling out the older reservists. Do you think that married men should be compelled to fight?

Crabshaw—Why not? They are used to it.—Life.

Posting Up.

"Is there a war in Europe, hubby?"

"Yes, my dear How did you hear about it?"

"While cleaning house I happened to glance at some old newspaper I was putting on the pantry shelves."

An Appreciated Contrast.

"Are you going to commute this summer?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Crosslots. "There's a great comfort in commuting. The ride makes the office in the city seem so delightfully cool and restful."

Evidence.

"I have reason to believe that picture is a genuine Rembrandt."

"Have you had it examined by an expert?"

"No, but I picked it up in a second-hand store for a dollar and a half, and that's the way most Rembrandts are acquired."

Training Baby.

Yells from the nursery brought the mother, who found the baby gleefully pulling small Billy's curls.

"Never mind, darling," she comforted. "Baby doesn't know how it hurts."

Half an hour later wild shrieks from the baby made her run again to the nursery

"Why, Billy!" she cried. "What is the matter with the baby?"

"Nothing, muzzer," said Billy, calmly, "only now he knows!"— Harper's.

Penn Family Claims Liquidated.

The claims of the Penn family to Pennsylvania were extinguished at the time of the revolution. The commonwealth paid Penn's heirs to relinquish their proprietorship.

There is at least this to say for the women. No woman ever bought hair restorer of a baldheaded barber.

A FEW OF LAST WEEK'S HAPPENINGS

A number from this vicinity are attending German Camp Meetinf at Garner this week.

Miss Ada Anderson of Grinnell arrived last week for a visit with her sister, Mrs. L. A. Parsons

A large crowd attended the Children's Day exercises at the German M. E. church last Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Weiman of Verona North Dakota, left for their home, Monday, after a short visit with her sister, Mrs. T Blank, and her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J Kirkwood and Mr and Mrs. W. M Kirkwood were Mason City visitors, Monday. W. M. departed from Mason for Marshalltown and other points on business.

According to last week's Ringsted Dispatch, the profits of the Farmers' Grain and Product Co., of Ringsted for the fiscal year just finished were $2.988 This is the company W. M. Kirkwood has been managing for the past four years recently resigned and has now accepted a more lucrative position at West Bend to take charge July 1st. Mr. Kirkwood is one of the Klemme boys who has made good in the business world.

W. G. Blanschan has a freak calf at his farm south of Britt that was born recently The animal has no fly switch and some of the other most necessary organs are placed high on the back at an angle of about sixty degrees to the June sun. If it was of the female sex it could easily carry a false switch with dignity, but as it is a male Mr. Blanschan intends grafting on some mule ears so that it can shoo the flies, mosquitoes and turkey buzzards from the front seat. The calf is healthy and growing fine.—Britt News.

Mrs. Mary Upton died last week Wednesdty at the home of Miss Jennie Elder after an illness covering a couple of years or more in the 88th year of her life. Mary Wilson was born in Pennsylvania January 10th, 1830, and came to Hancock county with the early settlers, having lived here ever since that time. All the early settlers knew her well and she has seen Garner grow from its beginning, when the first railroad came here. She was possessed of a strong constitution and a kindly disposition and endured many of the hardships and privations of pioneer life. She has received her reward and is resting from her labors She leaves to mourn many relatives and friends. The funeral services were held Friday afternoon from the residence of Miss Elder and the remains were laid at rest in Concord cemetery. Rev. Packer conducted the services.—Garner Signal.

Enough money has been donated by the shareholders of the Titonka Co-operative Ceramery toward the new building to make the improvement a certainty. One hundred and twenty-six shareholders have signed the agreement and twenty-four more stockholders are to be seen by the committee. Perhaps before this paper comes from the press the entire 150 shareholders will have signed the agreement. The officials and committees will spend a few days visiting other creameries in this section before letting the contract. The building will perhaps cost between four and five thousand dollars. Work is expected to begin in two weeks.—Titonka Topic.

A quiet but very happy wedding occurred in Eagle Bend, Minn last week Wednesday the principles being Geo. Hawes of Wykeham and Miss Minnie Wilson of this city. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a few friends and relatives at 3 o'clock p. m. by Rev. Carter of Clarissa at the residence of the bride. Miss Elsie Kingbay acted as bridesmaid, while the groom was supported by James Wilson, a brother of the bride. The groom is quite well known in this city having made his home here with his brother James Hawes the past year and is an industrious young man. The bride is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Geo. Wilson and is a young lady whose womanly qualities and many graces of both mind and heart have endeared her to a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The young couple at once took up life's duties on the Palmby farm south of town that has been rented by the groom. The News wishes them a long life of health happiness and prosperity.

Support Your County Fair

Thirty or forty years ago there was a great deal of interest taken in the county fairs in various sections of the corn belt. Many of these fair associations had fine grounds purchased when land was cheap, and more or less completely equipped for the purpose of the fair. Farmers regarded it as their annual picnic, and attended with samples of their crops, their live stock and their domestic industries, not so much for the pride of winning as for the purpose of getting together and learning from each other Gradually these fairs began to decline As far as we could observe, the farmers themselves were largely to blame for this. The fair officials were elected, as they naturally would be, in the county seat. The citizens of the county seat were annual election, and just as naturally selected from those present men to conduct the fair Some of them were breeders of fast horses, for horse breeding was greatly in vogue in those times, and frequently the fair degenerated into a horse trot The farmers became disgusted, many of them refusing to attend, with the result that the question of finances became an important one and many of the fairs admitted side shows of a rather questionable character, simply because they so are willing to pay the price. More and more farmers refused to attend, because of the demoralizing influence on their children, and hence the county fair fell largely into disrepute Here and there you will find a county fair which has maintained its usefulness, but so far as we can see it is only where it is conducted according to the best code of morals, disgusting side shows prohibited, and their managers trusted the farmers to furnish to look the attendance and the funds In other shows the law prohibiting gambling was [illegible] and letter and [illegible] sentence of the county fairs that were willing to violate law for the sake of the one hundred dollars which the state gave for the encouragement of agriculture To-day there was another story The state fairs began to grow in magnitude importance and and interest Farmers made up their minds that the thing worth seeing was the state fair where the best the state and the nearby states could afford in the way of live stock would be exhibited, where crowds gathered and they could see not only their friends from their own county, but most people from all over the state. Then came on the great international stock shows, which also took the attention of the farmer from his county fair It is time for the tide to turn and the county fair be restored not only to its old, but far more than its former sphere of influence. To make a success however it must be free from all kinds of gambling the questionable shows and amusements and all kinds of fake enterprises It must be a place where farmers can compete with each other, and the world Nothing will help a county fair quicker than to offer premiums for traveling herds Farmers are not willing to go up against these and should not be asked If we are running a county fair we will not allow anything to compete for prizes that had not been grown in the county or was not owned in it or in the district. If the fair took in a district covering more than one county Manufacturers of all sorts of farm implements or things used about the farm or home should, of course, be admitted freely and their exhibits invited, for they are educational. We will soon need the restoration of local herds of live stock; and there is nothing that will tend more to awaken interest than an exhibit of live stock comprised of but a few breeds; now they comprise many. In former times there was no opportunity for exhibiting the best dairy machinery, such as milking machinery, etc. Now the best that can be had can be exhibited at almost any county fair. The great thing in the county fair, however, is to get the farmers in the county together, to know each other, to compete with each other, to study the working plans and methods of other farmers. These state and international fairs have evidently very nearly reached their limit. The danger of contracting disease among live stock is increasing. All this should favor an improvement in the count yfair. It is probably too late to make any great changes this year; but we hope our readers will bear in mind; and when the next election comes, both the people in town and in the country should see to it that the fair board has the largest representation possible, and that the majority of them are farmers. We don't mean to say that farmers should have the exclusive management of the county fair. They need help which the city and county seat can give. It is to the interest of every banker, every merchant as well as every farmer, to see that the very best display possible is made at every county fair, and thus develop the local interest and pride on which at the last the interest and pride of the state depend.—Wallace's Farmer.

Armstrong Council Complies With Law

The last legislature passed an amendment to the law which makes provision that all village or town councils must publish the minutes of their meeting, giving the amount of each bill allowed and from what fund, and a concise statement of all other transactions This has been done in most towns over the state all the time, but has not been done here lately The city dads have appointed the Journal to publish these items and it will, we are certain, meet with the approval of everybody This makes it so that we can read in the paper just what is being done by the council. No person has any reason to insinuate that there has been any transactions in this council that were not fair, but all boards are not alike And anyway, the people should have a right to read for themselves what is being done in municipal affairs without having to go down to the clerk's office and examine his books.—Armstrong Journal

Cream Checks Will Average Over $500.

In High Lake township Emmet county lives Emmet Moore For years Mr. Moore has been devoting his energies toward the promulgation of the industry of dairying He now has realized his ambition to an astonishing extent, and is demonstrating what can be done with a well equipped stock of dairy cattle and the land to go with them This summer his milk checks run from $500 to $600 a month. Some of his best cows are giving sixty pounds of milk per day. Nine of Mr. Moore's cows are pure bred and the balance are about seven-eights pure. His total herd consists of 214 Holsteins He had 40 last fall but sold seven 2-year-old heifers to Mr. Daniels of Mason City, receiving $80 per head for them. He recently disposed of his sire to a party at Hampton for $500. The animal weighed 2,200 pounds.

Garner Business Houses Will Close

Garner business men are not so slow as you will notice after reading the following article.

A committee composed of a few of the prominent and leading business men of our city took it upon themselves to start what the business men of all the other towns are doing and have been doing for some time. They called upon all the merchants and asked them what they thought about closing their respective places of business three nights out of the week. Well what do you think happened? They all fell for it and made a grab for the pencil to sign up the agreement to close. They have decided to close every Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 6:00 P. M. This will give those wishing to do shopping every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings. In most all of the surrounding towns the merchants close their stores four nights out of the week and they find it a very good thing for every body. The farmers who wish to do their trading can arrange to come to town on these nights and also the people in the city can do the same without any inconvenience. During the hot summer months this gives the clerks a little fresh air in the evening and to be perfectly candid with you it is a very good move the business men of our town have taken and which should have been done long ago.—Democrat.

CODE WORK HAD COST STATE $50,000, AND FAR FROM COMPLETED

Out of Proportion to Previous Ventures—U. G. Whitney to Prepare Index.

Des Moines, Ia., July 17.—With the discharge of Attorney Charles S. Wilcox as editor of the supplement to the code, 1913, state officials yesterday became interested in the financial side of the proposition. They were astonished to learn from the auditor of state's books that the cost to date of the supplement has been about $50,000, with an estimated cost of about $15,000 more to complete the work.

The state has expended so far $44,689.39 in labor and expenses in preparation of the code supplement. There is about $6,000 of indebtedness charged to this account for which warrants have not been issued, bringing the total to $50,000.

Needs $15,000 Additional.

U. G. Whitney, reporter for the supreme court, is to prepare an index to the supplement in place of the index on which Wilcox worked for more than a year and did not complete. It is estimated that the state will pay out at least $15,000 more for labor and printing. This will make a total of $65,000 for the supplement, officials says. Some of the officials say this is figuring it low, as the index will make a volume almost as large as the supplement. They place the estimate of total cost at $70,000 or $75,000.

As the supplement to the code of 1907 cost the state about $22,000 complete, according to figures at the state house, state officials say that the cost of the 1913 supplement is out of all proportion.

The 1915 legislative session made a special allowance to Wilcox of $200 a month, without time limit, in addition to the previous appropriation.

IOWA EMPLOYMENT BUREAU SIMILAR TO DAKOTA DISCARD

Des Moines, Ia., July 17.—The free employment bureau provided by the Thirty-sixth assembly is organized and ready for business, according to announcement made yesterday. All employers over the state desiring to use the bureau are requested to furnish infromation as to the nature of the employment, hours, wages and the number of employes desired. Those seeking jobs are requested to leave addresses at which they may be reached. It is the purpose of the bureau to bring together the manufacturer, mercantile proprietors, farmers and those in need of office help or domestics with the unemployed.

The arrangement is similar to the one tried out for two years in South Dakota and then discarded because no use was made of the system.

COURT LIBERAL ON IOWA'S "HOMESTEAD" EXEMPTION

Sheldon, Ia., July 17.—An important ruling has just been returned by Federal Judge Reed, in bankruptcy court at Dubuque. The case is that of Mrs. Coles, of Sheldon, who sought to have the trustee set aside a homestead exemption in the bankruptcy proceedings against her. The judge in his decision sets aside the report of the trustee and order of approval by referee and gives to Mrs. Coles an entire brick business building in Sheldon as her homestead and for her exclusive use, instead of a portion of the building, as ruled by the referee.

It is an important ruling in the homestead law, as it briefs and digests the homestead law in Iowa, as viewed by the federal authorities. The case began in the spring of 1913 and has just been concluded. Its prosecution has occupied fully three months of solid work in the various courts.

An equity action pending in the same court to transfer and subject the property to sale is dismissed at trustee's cost.

NEW OFFICERS ELECTED FOR IOWA TEMPLAR COMMANDERY

Templar Park, Spirit Lake, Ia., July 17.—Grand commandery, Knights Templars of Iowa, elected the following officers yesterday.

Eminent Grand Commander—L. H. Moore, Des Moines.

Eminent Deputy Grand Commander—James E. Bromwell, Marion.

Eminent Generalissimo—Charles E. Schlicht, Burlington.

Eminent Grand Captain General—W. W. McConnel, Council Bluffs.

Eminent Grand Senior Warden—Taylor Carpenter, Cedar Rapids.

Eminent Grand Junior Warden—Brown McCarroll, Ottumwa.

Eminent Grand Treasurer—Thomas W. Whitney, Atlantic.

Eminent Grand Recorder—D. M. Brownlee, Sioux City.

Trustee—Asa Webster, Waucoma.

Attendance at the conclave was the largest in the history of the organization, 222 sir knights having registered.

IOWA'S WOMAN BANKER, MRS. C. B. DRAKE, IS DEAD

Albia, Ia., July 17.—Mrs. Caroline B. Drake, formerly president of the First National bank of Albia, died at her home here last night at the age of 83 years. She is believed to have been the first woman bank president in the United States. Her husband, the late J. H. Drake, was a brother to former Governor Drake of Iowa.

She had been a resident of Albia for over 50 years and was a second cousin of Abraham Lincoln.

The funeral will be held at her late home next Sunday afternoon. Her niece, Mrs. J. C. Mabry, was in Oregon on a western trip and will arrive home tomorrow noon.

WILL PUSH WHEELBARROW IOWA TO SAN FRANCISCO

Iowa City, Ia., July 16.—Charles Nigg, of Maquoketa, Ia., will walk the entire distance from his home to the San Francisco exposition, pushing a wheelbarrow all the way. The trip is undertaken in payment of an election bet made two years ago. After resting up in San Francisco he will sail for the Philippine islands, where he formerly spent seven years of his life, part of the time teaching. This is his second walking trip to the Pacific coast.

ROCK RAPIDS—The continued rains have been seriously interfering with the farmers in making hay. The timothy and clover crop is the largest it has ever been here, and with a few days of settled weather will all be cut. Corn, which has shown a tendency to be backward, has during the past week made a wonderful improvement, and the prospects are now good for a crop of corn. The crop of wheat and oats is heavy, and an unusual amount of twine will be required.

ONAWA—The Onawa Chautauqua will begin here Saturday for a seven days' session. Senator J. K. Vardaman, of Mississippi, will be one of the speakers.

COMPLAINT FILED OF RAILROAD VIOLATING LIQUOR RECORD LAW

Ignoring of Measure Probably Intentional, to Secure Court Test.

Des Moines, Ia., July 17.—County Attorney George Wilson late yesterday afternoon filed information in Justice John T. Conroy's court against the Chicago & Northwestern Railway company charging violation of the liquor law enacted by the Thirty-sixth general assembly and which provides that a record book of liquor shipments shall be kept by station agents throughout Iowa.

The information charges three counts and is the first to be filed under the new law, which went into effect July 4. The case in all probability will be carried to the United States supreme court, Des Moines attorneys said.

The county attorney's action was a direct result of a quiet investigation which he has been carrying on for two weeks and which culminated yesterday when he examined the books of R. B. Buckley, Northwestern agent at Saylor station.

Wilson asserts that no record has been kept of freight shipments of liquor at the Saylor station. About 47 barrels of beer have been allowed to go out of the freight room there without the signatures of the consignees since the new law became effective, Wilson declared last night.

"The filing of this information is the beginning of an investigation by the county attorney and sheriff's offices which we hope will determine just how much law violation is going on," Wilson said last night. "We mean to probe to the bottom of the situation and if other roads are guilty of violations in this county we mean to proceed as we have against the Northwestern."

FLOODS HALT TRAIN SERVICE IN SOUTHERN IOWA

Hamburg, Ia., July 17.—Hamburg has been without train service for the past 24 hours because of the recent floods near here. The main line of the Kansas City-Omaha line is out of commission several miles from Corning, Mo., 20 miles below here. The water at the Corning depot is two feet deep, and is even deeper in the business district.

On the main line trains are detouring via Lincoln. Crops are inundated.

The bridge at Percival has been swept away. The branch of the Burlington road has suspended its service above Riverton because of the overflowing of the Nishna river.

A cloudburst occurred in the High Creek community, 10 miles southeast of Hamburg. Five inches of water fell in two hours. The lowland is flooded and the dikes are giving way.

Hamburg, Ia., July 15—Alice O'Brien, 17-year-old Riverton girl, was drowned in the Nishna river there yesterday morning before the eyes of a crowd of young people with whom she had gone to watch the rising waters. She claimed to be an expert swimmer and had donned a bathing suit to venture out.

Sidney Clark rushed to her rescue, but couldn't reach her and came near drowning. He was rescued by Bird Rice.

DROPS HEART BALM SUIT; DEFENDANT IS BANKRUPT

Marshalltown, Ia., July 17.—What gave promise to be a case of more than ordinary interest in the district court became nil yesterday when attorneys for Miss Ione Stoneman, of Hartford, Wis., directed the clerk of courts here to dismiss the $10,000 breach of promise action brought last December by Miss Stoneman against Hardy A. Friend, of this city.

Miss Stoneman claimed that in 1913 Friend promised to marry her. On October 3, 1914, Friend took as his bride in Toledo, Miss Hazel White, of this city.

Following Miss Stoneman's action Friend went into bankruptcy in the federal court at Des Moines, scheduling his assets as one automobile and some household furniture, worth $1,200 and liabilities of $13,730, including the Stoneman claim of $10,000. Friend's attorney believes that the fact that Friend was adjudicated a bankrupt is responsible for the failure to prosecute the breach of promise suit.

"CORN LOUSE" DAMAGING SOME IDA COUNTY FIELDS

Ida Grove, Ia., July 17.—Many Ida county farmers are complaining about damage being done to the corn crop by the "corn louse." This insect is but a very little larger than the human pest, is green in color and works at the base of the corn stalk in great numbers. One farmer residing near Ida Grove brought in five stalks from his field on which the louse had been working. From a neighbor's field, just across the road, which had been planted at the same time, he also had a similar number of stalks, and there was almost a foot difference in the length. The corn attacked by the insects is on corn stalk ground of 1914 and that of the neighbor from ground that had been rotated. On the latter the latter the bug had not made its appearance and the stalks had excellent color and growth. Farmers assert that the corn crop on stalk ground has been injured 30 per cent, while the continued wet weather has put the fields back at least 10 days later than usual.

The oat harvest will commence about the first of next week and the crop promises to be good. Barley has suffered from the rains and many fields are badly lodged.

FREIGHT CASHIER MISSING AND SHORT IN ACCOUNTS

Dubuque, Ia., July 17.—Investigation of the books by the company's auditor revealed a shortage of $5,000 in the accounts of Fred Somers, aged 20, freight cashier of the Illinois Central office here. Somers left July 3, saying he and his mother would spend the Fourth with relatives in St. Louis. He has not since been seen. The company is protected by a bonding company. The weakness for a gay life is assigned as the cause.

IOWA BANKERS URGING SEED FROM OLD CORN

Des Moines, Ia., July 15.—The Iowa Bankers' association has sent out a notice to all of its members to call the attention of their patrons to the necessity of selecting seed corn at once should they have any of last year's crop still on hand.

It requires 1,500,000 bushels of seed corn to plant the Iowa crop and there is now a danger of a lack of seed corn for next year owing to crop conditions.

BIG GAIN IN VALUES OF CATTLE AND HOGS OVER 1914 SCHEDULE

This Showing Comes In Face of Fact That Many Counties Cut Assessments.

Des Moines, Ia., July 16.—Iowa had a big increase in the number of hogs and cattle on farms, in spite of the hoof and mouth disease, and the strained financial conditions last fall, according to the 1915 assessment reports sents to the auditor of state.

The report, prepared by W. H. Williams, revenue clerk of the auditor's department, shows that hogs increased from 3,780,368 in 1914 to 4,631,751 in 1915. The 1914 report valued hogs then on the farms at $33,865,428. The 1915 report places the value of hogs at $36,094,178. These are the assessors' reports and it is believed all hogs are accounted for.

Cattle increased in numbers also. In 1914 there were 2,904,895 head of cattle in the state, valued at $91,439,918. The 1915 report shows 3,083,821 head of cattle valued at $95,610,970. These values are for taxation purposes only and do not represent the true value. Owing to the fact that many counties have reduced values of live stock, the executive council will have the task of equalizing assessments between the counties to do all over again.

The value of all live stock in Iowa is reported by the assessors at $228,458,057. The United States census bureau recently published figures on Iowa live stock showing the values at three times the figures reported by the assessors.

HOMESTEADERS SELECT NEW LIST OF OFFICERS

Des Moines, Ia., July 16.—Election of officers consumed the entire first session of the fourth supreme convention of the Homesteaders at the Savery hotel yesterday afternoon, all of the more important officers being re-elected and the entire election going through without contest except that of the supreme lady of entertainment.

The officers elected are. Harry J. Green, of Des Moines, supreme president; L. D. Jones, of Kansas City, Mo., supreme vice president; A. H. Corey, of Des Moines, supreme secretary; Carrie C. Copeland, of Chariton, Ia., supreme treasurer; Dr. Charles M. Whicher, of Des Moines, supreme medical director; Mrs. Bertha Dockson, of Kansas City, Mo., supreme lady of entertainment; Mrs. W. E. Alexander, of Memphis, Mo., supreme lady of charity, Rev. C. W. Hempstead, of Riceville, Ia., supreme chaplain, E. W. Smith, of Seymour, Ia., supreme marshal; H. B. Bobenhouse, of Eagle Grove, Ia., supreme man at arms, and F. R. Moyer, of Des Moines, supreme herald.

WATERLOO COUPLE HELD FOR KIDNAPING GIRL

Denison, Ia., July 16.—W. K. Jones and wife, of Waterloo, are in custody here on the charge of kidnaping a 10-year-old girl from her adopted parents. The affair took place Monday afternoon, when Jones and wife came to town, hired an auto and went to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ely, near the Northwestern depot, and grasped the child, who was playing about the place. Mrs. Ely made what resistence she could, but Jones shook her off. With the auto they made out of town, evidently taking the Illinois Central at a point north of here for their Waterloo home. The sheriff of Calhoun county arrested the couple at Rockwell City and brought them back to Denison. Mr. and Mrs. Jones refused to discuss the affair, except to state that the child is Mrs. Jones' niece.

FORMER LEMARS HORSE DOING CIRCUS STUNTS

LeMars, Ia., July 16.—Carson Herron and Elmer Herron are lovers of good horse flesh and have raised and owned many fine animals. The other day when the Hagenbeck-Wallace shows were in town the Herrons visited the stables of the circus to look over the string. Five years ago Carson Herron sold a fine bay colt to the Wallace outfit, which was not then amalgamated into the present big show. The horse was bred from the celebrated Austin sire and came of a family with records. Mr. Herron saw and recognized the horse and gleaned in conversation with the head groom that the animal was one of the best in the string and is used daily in the parade and twice a day in the chariot races.

NEW ORDER TO RELEASE MUCH MONEY IN IOWA

Des Moines, Ia., July 16.—Between $10,000,000 and $20,000,000 of money formerly held in Iowa banks as part of the reserve will be released for investment, by action of the new Iowa law reducing the reserve required on time deposits, according to an estimate made by the state banking department.

Statements of condition of state and savings banks are being received by the department at the present time. An accurate statement of the amount of reserve which will be released will be made within the next few weeks.

The new law reduces the amount of reserve required to be held in savings banks on time deposits from 15 to 8 per cent in cities under 3,000 population and from 20 to 8 per cent in cities over 3,000 population.

JERRY SULLIVAN SAYS JINGOES WOULDN'T FIGHT

Des Moines, Ia., July 16.—Judge Jerry B. Sullivan, of the federal board of appraisers, "came home" yesterday. He is here attending the Homesteaders' convention. He will spend a week here and about Creston and Afton, his old home.

New York is a hotbed of war talk, Mr Sullivan said in an interview. "The New York jingo press is clamoring for war," he declared, "but if war should come, New York will not furnish the United States troops. The New Yorkers will want Iowa and these other western states to do that."

LEMARS—Land prices in Plymouth county are still booming. H. V. Seppings, residing two miles west of this city, sold his farm of 309 acres to Jack Tendall for $200 per acre. In the deal Mr. Seppings bought a 240-acre farm from Tendall, 12 miles west of town, for $150 per acre.

MERRILL—Dr. Percy Lester Ellis and Miss Marguerite Frances Huntley were united in marriage Tuesday afternoon at the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Cody by the Rev. A. J. Barkley, of the Methodist Episcopal church. Dr. Ellis is a veterinary surgeon and has a large practice here. His bride came here from Sioux City last fall and taught the primary department of the Merrill public schools last year.

LEMARS—The Farmers' Elevator company, of LeMars, has reorganized under the new state law governing co-operative companies. W. R. Null is president, William Utech, secretary, and Ed Luken manager.

EDWIN HAWLEY ESTATE PAYS TAX IN IOWA ON M. & ST. L. SHARES

Inheritance Tax and Interest Is $13,394.40 on Stocks of $646,277.

Des Moines, Ia., July 15.—The estate of Edwin Hawley, late president of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad, today paid $13,394.40 to the state of Iowa as collateral inheritance tax.

Mr. Hawley died recently in New York, leaving all of his property to collateral heirs. The estate was valued at $9,429,449, against which were $4,426,774 in debts. The part of the estate on which the tax was paid in Iowa was on the property of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad in this state. The late president owned 19,896 shares of the common stock and 6,706 shares of the preferred stock. The total value of the stock was placed at $646,277. After deducting the value of the trackage outside of the state and the proportionate share of the debts, there remained $231,915 on which to levy the collateral tax.

The tax proper amounted to $11,595.76 and interest accumulated to the etent of $1,798.64, making a total of $13,394.40. The entire estate was left by Mr. Hawley to two brothers, two sisters, a niece and two nephews.

MURRAY FOR SENATOR IF ALLEN FILES REIGNATION

Storm Lake, Ia., July 15.—If Senator Joseph Allen of Pocahontas resigns from his present office to pursue the governorship, it appears probable that Roy W. Murray of Storm Lake, representative from Buena Vista county, will campaign for the place in the senate.

Both the Storm Lake papers are boosting Murray for the senatorship. In its latest issue the Pilot-Tribune predicted the resignation of Senator Allen and declared Murray would be a hard man to beat. The Vidette, democratic, devoted nearly a half column to commending Murray's record in the last general assembly and suggested that the republicans concentrate upon him as their candidate.

FORMER IOWAN FINDS SISTER AFTER 50 YEARS

Yorktown, Ia., July 15.—There was an impressive scene at Atlantic Monday when Samuel Musser, of Northwood, Ia., and Mrs. Julia Beech, brother and sister, who passed their earlier years on a farm near this place, and who had not met since the war, were reunited. Mr. Musser has been prosperous in the west and came here to find his sister and care for her, if necessary, in her declining years. He wept when he found the old home gone and not a familiar face to be found in town or country. Several citizens became interested in his story and, after much inquiry, learned that Mrs. Beach is living in Atlantic, where Mr. Musser hastened in an automobile, and where the brother and sister were reunited.

CORPORATIONS MILD IN PROTESTS ON VALUATIONS

Des Moines, Ia., July 15.—Only two express companies appeared before the executive council today to ask lower assessments, the American and Wells-Fargo, and neither made any violent protest. The hearing on sleeping car assessments is up this afternoon, and it is thought some reference may be made to the new anti-tipping law and its effect upon Pullman traffic.

The hearing of arguments relative to the fixing of assessments of railroad properties in Iowa, was concluded last evening by the state executive council. The railroad representatives were brief in their statements. This enabled the council to finish its work on railroad properties in one day.

Some of the roads asked for reductions in assessments as made in 1914, claiming that they are overtaxed in proportion to other lines. A number of the railroads took the position that the 1914 assessment of railroad properties was about correct, except that a few adjustments should be made.

All of the larger roads operating in Iowa were represented. The Wabash was perhaps the most friendly in its attitude to the council. It said that the 1914 assessment is about fair and that it will be satisfied if it is continued. It asked, however, that 10 miles of coal track in Marion county be taxed as coal trackage instead of main line. The Dubuque & Sioux City road made the biggest request for a reduction in assessment, W. L. Tarbett, a tax commissioner, said that the tax of this road should be reduced 50 per cent.

CORONER'S VERDICT KEPT SECRET IN PERCIVAL CASE

Percival, Ia. July 15.—Mrs. E. S. Bailey, widow of the retired merchant, who was shot and killed in their home here recently, who was at the same time shot in the arm and side, has had the injured arm amputated and she is now recovering in a hospital at Nebraska City, where she was taken after the shooting. The local officers have not yet stated what move they have made in the murder, and the verdict of the coroner's jury is still being suppressed.

THOUGHT HE WAS PINCHED; MARCHED SELF TO STATION

Ottumwa, Ia., July 15.—Fred Donaldson ambled into the station having one of his arms crooked in a position indicating that someone was leading him. He sidled over to the wall of the room and bracing himself against the wall, raised his arms for the customary search. The desk sergeant after a moment awoke from his surprise, searched Donaldson and placed him in a rear cell.

In police court Donaldson testified that he was arrested by an officer and brought to jail, but Judge Ramsell concluded that Officer Barleycorn was the only policeman that had had custody of Donaldson. The judge meted out 10 days.

ORANGE CITY—B. Van der Ziel was knocked down and trampled by his team of mules Monday afternoon, receiving injuries which may prove fatal. Besides internal injuries, his collar bone and a rib were broken. His back also was severely injured, and he was bleeding profusely when picked up. He was holding the mules by the bridle when B. Van Roekel passed him with his car. The mules broke away, knocking him down and trampling over him.

MARSHALLTOWN — Word received here from Austin, Minn., told of an accident that befell M. G. Shove, a traveling man of this city, at LeRoy, Minn., Sunday afternoon. Shove was driving in his automobile over a grade crossing near LeRoy, when he was struck by a Milwaukee train. The automobile was completely demolished, and its driver was dragged 30 feet and badly bruised.

COUNCIL BLUFFS—A very damaging storm visited southwestern Iowa Sunday night, this city apparently being the center. Over 1,000 telephones were put out of commission here, and there is scarcely a long distance line that is working. A deluge of water fell. Reports of damage in the country are coming in slowly and indicate that while covering large territory it is not very heavy in any locality.

Kansas City, Mo., July 1[illegible] packing concerns and other [illegible] interests in the west bottoms [illegible] warned by the government [illegible] bureau today to prepare for a [illegible] stage in the Kansas river at K[illegible] City by Sunday night. Residents [illegible] the lowlands east of Kansas C[illegible] so were warned to expect a [illegible] mark in the Missouri river. [illegible] the rivers go as high as predicted serious damage is feared.

The Kansas river here this [illegible] reached 23.5 feet, a rise of two [illegible] of a foot over night. The Missouri [illegible] 27.5 feet, a rise of two-tenths of a foot since yesterday afternoon.

Scattering rains fell in the Kansas river watershed last night.

The first death in the swollen [illegible] occurred at Seneca, Kan., early today. An infant son of Benjamin [illegible] was drowned when a buggy in which Wichim, his wife and the child were riding was overturned, while crossing a small stream.

Conditions in northwest Kansas were improved today.

TO REVOLUTIONIZE THEORIES OF W[illegible]

Gathmann and De Forest Their Inventions Will Frustrate Aerial and Submarine Attacks.

Chicago, July 19 - The question of the national defense likely will be one of the most important problems come before the next sessions of congress. The present European war centered the attention of the American public on the state of its military forces and equipment. Wide interest has been created in the board of naval advisors composed of great American inventors now being created by Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels.

The contrary is also believed will be produced by this board of experts. The Chicago Herald has learned several of the inventors who will compose this board what contributions they hope to make to the American defense preparations with the following results:

Hudson Maxim, scientist and ordnance inventor, said that he recently has offered the government an important invention for employment in submarine torpedo boats. He added that he has several new inventions under for the government.

De Forest Has Plan.

Lee De Forest, wireless expert, says that he was working secretly on a unique invention which, when perfected, will minimize danger from all sources and with an adequate congressional appropriation should make all danger of aerial and particularly undersea warfare. He added that he will offer the invention to the government with the distinct understanding that it will be used only by the army and navy of the United States and that working plans kept secret from all other powers forever. Mr. De Forest stated he also is working on another invention which scientists consider will be one of the marvels of the age. This also would be valuable in the general scheme of defense, he said.

Glenn H. Curtiss, the aeroplane designer and builder says the submarine or flying boat can be developed into a very valuable adjunct in repelling naval invasion and preventing the bombardment of coast cities. It is a question of development, rather than invention, he says. Orville Wright coincides in the views of Mr Curtiss and expresses the belief that this country should be equipped with from 1,000 to 1,500 air craft of all sorts.

Gathmann's Invention.

Louis Gathmann, ordnance expert, announced that he has a new method of protecting vessels against torpedoes, both marine, high explosive and armor piercing attacks. He things the coast defenses should be equipped with 18-inch guns (18-inch) and high explosive shells.

Mr. Edison, the wizard of modern science, has not yet announced whether he has anything to contribute immediately to the development of the national defense. Mr. Edison is quoted as having said that, if he turned his attention to the invention of war implements, he could make war so horrible that the world would never part[illegible] in armed strife again.

John Hays Hammond, jr., an expert in wireless research, is developing a wireless controlled torpedo. It is understood that experiments will be conducted to increase the range of the new torpedoes by means of signals from aeroplanes to the control station on shore. Secretary of War Garrison has announced that he will ask congress to purchase the patents covering this invention.

Secretary Daniels today announced that he would issue a statement [illegible] developing his plan for a civilian board of which Thomas A. Edison will be the head.

ORDER IN COUNCIL IS NOT RECOGNIZED

United States Denies British Assumptions In Trial of Prize Court Cases.

Washington, July 19.—Secretary Lansing made public today a paraphrase of the note presented by Ambassador Page on July 14 to the British government to conserve the rights of American citizens in cases being tried by British prize courts. It has no relation, he said, to the general note on contraband soon in course of preparation. The paraphrase issued by the state department follows:

"In view of certain rules which are understood to exist between the two governments as to the principles of law applicable in prize court proceedings in cases involving American interest and in order to avoid misunderstanding as to the attitude of the United States in regard to such proceedings, the government of the United States deems it proper to point out that it cannot recognize as [illegible] American citizens upon their rights under the principles and rules of international law as hitherto established governing neutral trade in time [illegible] or in particular [illegible] other municipal [illegible] British government [illegible] the validity [illegible] proceedings taken under [illegible] British municipal [illegible] the rights [illegible] international [illegible]

STRIKING MINERS DEFY GOVERNMENT

Britain Making No Effort to Impose Fines Upon Welsh Workmen Who Want Act Repealed.

London, July 19.—The executive council of the South Wales miners having failed at a meeting held in London today to reach an agreement on the means of settling the coal dispute left for Cardiff where it will meet again on Monday.

The [illegible] the Welsh miners [illegible] apprehension. The miners now have increased their demands by asking the government to withdraw the royal proclamation making the coal mines subject to the munitions act.

President Runciman of the board of trade rejected this proposal at a conference held last night and a meeting held in London failed to secure any ground for an adjustment.

The extremist leaders declare however, that it is a question now [illegible] of a 5 per cent increase in wages [illegible] the abrogation of the royal proclamation, which subjects the miners to a fine of $25 daily for striking. No effort has yet been made to enforce the fines against the 150,000 strikers while the leaders construe as an evidence of the virtual impossibility of carrying out the plans.

Reports received this morning from all the Welsh centers show that the strike continues to cause much agitation, but no disorder.

Typewriter and Adding Machine Concerns Land Contract From Allies

New York, July 19.—Most [illegible] leading typewriter and [illegible] machine companies in the east and middle west, it was stated today, have formed a new corporation [illegible] title of the American Ammunition company to take up contracts for the manufacture of fuses for high explosive and shrapnel shells for the British, French and Russian governments.

The shell commission [illegible] department of Canada's government acting for the British war office, is said to have awarded the American Ammunition company [illegible] week a contract for the [illegible] of fuses amounting to $[illegible]

An additional contract [illegible] ing to $10,000,000 it is [illegible] given by the Canadian [illegible] sion to the same group [illegible] during concerns.

The Canadian militia department is reported to have given another $70,000,000 contract for shells, high explosive shells to the same group, which will [illegible] the business among a number of industrial concerns.

Detroit, Mich., July 17.—C. W. Gooch, vice president of the Burroughs Adding Machine company of this city, does not believe that any of the leading typewriter and adding machine companies in the east and middle west have formed a corporation for the manufacture of war munitions, as reported in New York today.

"The Burroughs company does not know of any such combination. We have not been approached on it and do not believe any such corporation has been formed," said Mr. Gooch. "As for ourselves, we would not handle that kind of business. Since February of this year we have refused large quantities of business of that nature and will continue to do so."

WAR DECLARED ON BRYAN BY BODY OF SUFFRAGISTS

Washington, D. C., July 17.—The suffragists have declared war on William Jennings Bryan. An official statement declares that Bryan upbraided a party of Congressional Union suffragists because they opposed democratic candidates in equal suffrage states in 1914.

Mr. Bryan declared before the National Council of Women Voters that world suffrage would finally bring world peace, but when Mrs. Sara Bard Field invited him to speak for the Congressional Union organization of Oregon the peace advocate became ruffled.

GREAT OFFENSIVE AGAINST RUSSIANS

Slav Forces Withdraw Before Battering Assaults By Teutons—Active on 800-Mile Front.

London, July 19.—A new German offensive of huge proportions, with Riga, a great Russian seaport and the seat of the governor general of the Baltic provinces as its objective, is revealed in the latest official statements issued at Petrograd and Berlin.

Military experts here construe the offensive to be a vast envelopment movement, in which the Germans are making a great effort to destroy the Russian army.

Both the German and Russian communications agree that the German forces are at the Windau river near Goldingen, which is only 80 miles from Riga, the great strategic commercial metropolis in the Gulf of Riga, and on the upper Baltic.

An official statement received this morning from Petrograd added details of sanguinary fighting all along the new line in efforts to hold back the German advance which now is being concentrated on Riga and on Warsaw while the Austro-Hungarians are moving northward from the Dniester river.

Advices reaching London today say that the Germans left a trail of destruction along the Baltic sea from Memel to Libau where the villas, hotels and casinos are said to have been destroyed about the only exception, it is said being the palace of a Polish nobleman whose cousin married an American woman. The palace now is being used as a military headquarters in which Prince Henry of Prussia and Field Marshal Von Hindenburg recently conferred on the new offensive toward Riga.

A withdrawal of the Russian forces between the Pissa and Orzyc rivers to new lines along the Narew in the face of General Von Hindenburg's attacks, is admitted by Petrograd. Continuation of the German advance in Courland also is conceded. Increasing importance is attached, by military observers abroad to this move in the Baltic provinces.

Field Marshal Von Mackensen's army that swept through Galicia is giving signs of renewed activity in pursuance of the assumed plan of the Teutonic forces to attack simultaneously all along the 800-mile front from the Baltic to Bessarabia. Unofficial reports through Geneva declare that at the lower end of this line Austrian troops who crossed the Dniester have been driven back to the other bank, where their retreat is being turned into a rout.

The Crown Prince Frederick William's drive in the Argonne forest now is accepted as a small success in gaining a few hundred yards of terrain, but as a failure in attaining its real object—a decisive penetration of the French line.

CLAIM RUSSIANS ROUTED AUSTRIANS WITH BAYONET

Geneva, Switzerland, (via Paris), July 17.—The Tribune prints the following dispatch from its correspondent at the front:

"The Austro-Hungarian forces which attempted to dislodge the Russians from positions along the Vistula river have been repulsed with heavy losses. The Russians attacking in turn, occupied a mile of the Austrian trenches.

"Fresh Russian batteries, which have arrived and which have been posted on the Sereth river, have begun to bombard the passage across the Dniester river south of Zaleszczsky, obliging the Austrians to recross the river. Their retreat is being converted into a rout by Russian bayonet attacks.

"East of Horodenka the Austrians, occupying the left bank of the Dniester, have been dislodged after a fierce hand to hand struggle.

"On the Stripa river, the Russians have succeeded in temporarily arresting the Austrian offensive."

GIRL VICTIMIZED BY BOGUS WEDDING VOWS

Gives Gay Deceiver All of Her Money—Found By Father and Policewoman.

Des Moines, Ia., July 19.—Rena Hill, a pretty girl of 18, daughter of a farmer near Indianola, was deceived into a mock marriage, robbed of all her money and deserted by a young man who gave his name as Bertie Johnson, so she told Policewoman Ethyl Fisher here this morning, when the woman officer and the girl's father discovered her registered at the Iowa hotel as Mrs. Bertie Johnson.

She was on her way to De Sota to teach a music class when she first saw Johnson, who took her to Riverview park and professed love at first sight. The girl was dazzled and consented to the marriage, which she says was performed by a bald-headed man in East Des Moines. The police are unable to locate the groom.

NEW PLUNGER CAN MAKE 6,000 MILES

New U. S. Submarine Shows By Test She Can Cross Ocean and Return Without Taking on Fuel.

Bridgeport, Conn., July 19.—Simon Lake, the inventor and builder of submarines for the United States government was gratified today by the success of the experiments testing the new submarine, G-3, which demonstrated that the new boat can cross the Atlantic ocean and return without stopping, having a cruising radius of 6,000 miles.

"It is perfectly practicable for the G-3, with its new engines to cross the ocean, do what she went to do, and come back without dependence on any base of supplies," said Mr. Lake. "It is merely a question of the economy of fuel."

The G-3 was built by the Lake Torpedo Boat company of this city. Her extensive cruising radius is due to the efficiency of a new Swiss engine which drives the boat both on the surface and under water, replacing both the gasoline engines heretofore used to drive submarine craft on the surface and the electric motor used for undersea travel.

In a series of tests consisting of trips up and down the length of Long Island sound the new boat showed a speed of 14.7 knots on the surface and 10.7 knots submerged. She cost $450,000.

The G-3 is only 160 feet long, but seven new lake submarines which are being constructed for the United States navy will be 350 feet long and possess a much greater radius of activity than the G-S. They will use the new engine and Mr. Lake said today that they would be the equal of any in the German navy.

HAD GUN FIGHT WITH NORTH LIBERTY GANG

Night Watchman at Brandon Gets Into Mix With Mysterious Auto Tourists.

Brandon, Ia., July 19.—A revolver battle took place on Main street in Brandon this morning during which six shots were exchanged between Nightwatchman C. W. Hines and two alleged bandits. The watchman stopped the men and asked their business. They drew revolvers and fired five shots and the watchman fired once as they ran. At daylight tracks were found where the men had driven an automobile to within a quarter of a mile of town. Following the shooting the men escaped in the machine. Apparently none of the bullets took effect. It is believed here that the men were the bandits who robbed the bank at North Liberty yesterday.

FRENCH LOSS AT ARRAS 74,800

German Statement Says Foes Have Paid Dearly For Gains —Paris Says Germans Lost 100,000.

Berlin, July 19, (by wireless to Sayville).—The Overseas news agency announced today that the German authorities have succeeded by various means, especially by questioning the numerous prisoners taken, in securing accurate figures of the French losses in the great Arras battle.

"These," the agency announcement says, "reached the grand total of 74,800 in killed, wounded and captured, distributed as follows:

"Third army corps, 15,000; Ninth army corps, 60,000; Tenth army corps, 10,000; Seventeenth army corps, 4,800; Twentieth army corps, 10,500; Twenty-first army corps, 8,000; Twenty-third army corps, 11,000; Forthy-eighth, division, 6,000; Fifty-fifth division, 3,500."

A recent statement from Paris said the German losses in this campaign were 100,000 in 120 days of fighting.

THAW IS SILENT ON SUBJECT OF EVELYN

Refuses to Answer Questions Concerning Future Attitude Toward Her.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 19.—Harry K. Thaw's first night of real freedom in years was spent in restful sleep at a beach front hotel here. After yesterday's weary ride down the state from New York, where he was released on bail, Thaw was much refreshed and prepared to spend the day quietly. He remained out of sight early in the day and took breakfast in his room. The dining room of the hotel was crowded with guests, many of whom prolonged their meal, hoping to see him.

What Thaw's attitude would be toward Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was a matter of considerable speculation. To no question, however, bearing on this point would Thaw return a direct answer. One interviewer asked him if he expected to see her soon. Thaw's answer was to look at his questioner steadily for a few moments and turn away without a word.

So far as could be learned, Thaw has formed no definite plans for the immediate future, except to get as much rest as he can. The length of his stay here is not known, but it is believed he will go to his home in Pittsburgh in a few days.

BELIEVE OHIO FLOOD DANGER HAS PASSED

Rivers Are Receding, Though Thousands of Acres of Land Are Still Inundated.

Columbus, O., July 19.—The passage of last night without any considerable rainfall resulted in improved conditions early today throughout the Ohio flood district. While many thousand acres of land remained under water today practically all rivers were either stationary or falling.

The Scioto and Olentangy rivers began receding here early today. Levees along the Scioto river in this city, which began leaking yesterday afternoon were repaired during the night, and this morning were reported to be holding fast against the strain upon them.

PASSENGER LINER ORDUNA ATTACKED, ESCAPES U-BOATS

British Passenger Vessel With 21 Americans on Board Escapes Torpedo By Barely Ten Yards.

SEVEN SHELLS ARE FIRED

Shots From Submarine Barely Miss Steamer—Claim No Warning of Attack Was Given By Assailants.

New York, July 19.—The British passenger liner, Orduna, with 227 passengers aboard, 21 of whom were Americans, was attacked without warning by a German submarine at 6 o'clock in the morning of July 9, 16 hours out of Liverpool, on her way to New York. Announcement of the attack was made by the ship's captain, Thomas McComb Taylor and passengers, when the Orduna reached here today.

A torpedo was fired at the steamer and missed it by 10 yards. Twenty minutes later, a submarine rose to the surface, possibly a different submarine from the one that launched the torpedo, and, for half an hour thereafter, pursued the steamer, firing shells which whistled over the decks, above the heads of passengers standing there with their life belts on. Ten minutes before the attack a sailing ship, with two American flags painted on her sides, was seen ahead. Captain Taylor became suspicious of this craft and began maneuvering his ship. Then came the attack, the first warning of which was the streak of a torpedo, which whirled through the water and missed the Orduna's stern by 10 yards or thereabouts.

Passengers Prepared.

Stewards ran below and aroused the passengers. With clothes hurriedly fastened haphazard, they made for the upper deck. There they were assembled near the bridge. Life belts were adjusted and life boats swung out. The crew stood ready to launch the boats. From a submarine off the starboard quarter there came a shell which kicked up a miniature geyser in the Orduna's wake. The submarine had the range.

Captain Taylor turned the stern of the ship toward the assailant and ordered full speed ahead. Within from two to five minutes another shell, this time passing over the heads of the assembled passengers was fired. As it overshot the mark, its landing place was marked by a rising column of water.

Shells Graze Steamer.

A third shell passed overhead and so close that it seemed to clip a life boat. Captain Taylor ordered the passengers to go to a lower deck.

They obeyed and the life boats were adjusted lower still so that the passengers might step into them without delay. The shelling continued, shots falling about the steamer at inervals of from two to five minutes.

For about half an hour the submarine pursued the liner with the span of water between them lengthening each minute. Seven shots were fired in all. Four of them passed over the decks. The other three fell close to the ship. Then the submarine, distanced, gave up the chase.

Passengers say the submarine attack was made without previous warning.

The next day a meeting of the passengers was held in the saloon and the following resolution adopted by 23 of them was handed to Captain Taylor:

"The first cabin passengers of the steamer Orduna desire to express their heartfelt appreciation and admiration of the masterly manner in which you maneuvered and handled your steamer during the sudden and deliberate attack made upon it on the morning of July 9 at 6 o'clock by a German submarine."

The Orduna's passengers included the baron and baroness Rosencrantz, Lawrence Johnson, jr., of Philadelphia; W. O. Smith, of Chicago, and F. M. Morz, of Winnipeg.

William O. Thompson, of Chicago, counsel for the industrial relations commission of the United States, was another of the Orduna's passengers who saw the attack on the vessel. He declared that he would write a protest to Washington, setting forth the details of the attack.

Vessel Had No Warning.

Early risers who had left their berths to enjoy the fine morning were with the captain on the bridge, when the attack began and witnessed the entire episode. Among them was Baron Marcus Rosenkrantz, of Denmark, who married Miss Rebie Loewe, of Atlanta, Ga. The baroness was with him on the trip, but did not witness the attack.

"Ask the passengers what happened," Captain Taylor said, when the Orduna docked here today. "I am attached to the royal naval reserve and therefore cannot discuss the matter. Ask Baron Rozenkrantz. He saw the whole thing."

"But there is one question, Captain Taylor, that you can answer, and you alone. Were you attacked without warning?"

Think Submarine Had Shield.

"We left Liverpool about 2:30 o'clock on the afternoon of Thursday, the 8th," he said. "At 5:55 o'clock by my watch the first missile, a torpedo, was fired. A few minutes before that, however, we saw a small sailing ship just ahead of us. She had two American flags painted on the side that was turned to us. She was broadside to us and seemed to be beating up the wind. We could see her over the bows.

"Captain Taylor apparently became suspicious of this boat. We noticed that the course of the ship was immediately changed so that the little vessel ahead would be given a wide berth. I could see that we would pass far astern of her if we kept to the new course.

"Some of those aboard believed that the sailing ship was hiding a submarine behind her. Of this I can't say."

Thomas H. Graham, of Liverpool, one of the passengers on deck at the time, interrupted Baron Rosenkrantz to express his firm conviction that such was the case.

"We passed the sailing ship at a considerable distance. Having done this, most of us forgot her," Baron Rosenkrantz continued. "A few minutes after we had left her behind I looked through my glasses over the sea and saw a white streak coming toward us through the water. I wasn't sure at first it was a streak such as the wake of a torpedo or the periscope of a submarine, but the question was soon settled.

AND ALONG CAME RUTH

"Hello Ruth," said a voice at the other end of the telephone." I am calling you up because you know what I want to know, and it's just this: I am putting up my grape juice and I find that all of my corks are too large for the bottles. Is there any way to make them smaller without cutting them down? Now come to my aid like a good girl."

"Yes, there is," obliged Ruth. "the simplest possible way. You just put your corks in boiling water and let them stay for five minutes ,and you will see that you will have no trouble what ever in getting them into the necks of your bottles. "No, thank you, but I just want to say that I don't know what this town would do without you, Ruth.

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing," and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simpliest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

COUNTY FARM PAYS OUT

Custodian Salmon of the County Farm visited the Hancock county farm last week. He speaks in glowing terms of that institution and says it is on a paying basis. The supervisors turn the business over the their custodian and he recently purchased a number of blooded cattle. Mr. Salmon says our county farm could be put on a paying basis, also, if proper arrangements were made.—Algona Republican.

What Heaven Means to Me.

When we have traversed the dim leagues, and have seen things wonderful at every turn, and have passed through the bitter flood, we shall find —at least this is my hope—no guarded city of God from which we shall go no more out, but another road passing into wider fields and dimmer uplands, and to things more and more wonderful and strange and unknown.—Arthur C. Benson in Century Magazine.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs, but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

THE GREAT SILO TOWN AT THE STATE FAIR.

If any, discoveries in the world griculture and stock growing been as important and far ing in effect as the perfection e silo. Its influence has been lit- ort of revolutionary in upsetting eliminating ancient methods in ing and handling of stock. The idea is not so essentially new by means. Its advantageous fea- were advocated a good many ago, but the farming world, ently hailed from Missouri, and st deal of "showing" in the way emonstration work was necessary stablish its claims. Not much headway was made in exploiting work in this part of the country prosperity appeared on the in the late nineties, following riod of the most woeful business ession. Land prices began to to unbelievable heights. Land ers sat up and began to use their ils. They were up against new ositions. The man farming land $150 or more an acre realized he would have to run things in erent way to dig out even a rea- ble percentage of profit on his tment. It was altogether differ- rom farming forty dollar land. It the golden opportunity for the enthusiast, and you may believe that gentleman was not slow in grasping it.

The silo has come to stay It is an institution no man on high priced land should think of trying to get along without Probably you are even now thinking and planning for one before the time rolls round for taking care of another crop There are so many different [illegible] choice [illegible] der [illegible] the [illegible] Aug [illegible] the [illegible] object [illegible] metho [illegible] it, or even to be [illegible] day for that matter [illegible] makes, [illegible] ples of [illegible] chinery [illegible] and de [illegible] all [illegible] of recei [illegible] practical kno [illegible] of silo work in one week at the fair than it would be possible to take on in an entire year of reading visiting factories and listening to the windy spiels of agents If you are interested in silos attend the fair and get it all in one big lesson e will be a multitude of fea- and exhibits in the various de- ents of the Iowa State Fair and ition that will appeal to young ica. Iowa's best asset today is boy and girl crop. Just a few years and the conduct of affairs be given into their hands. The of today is the man of affairs of orrow. The state fair affords unexcelled opportunities of educative value that it is a matter of regret that every boy in the state cannot spend a few days absorbing its wonders. Here, in the space of a few days, can be seen samples of the resources of this and adjoining states, and of the mechanical workers' arts of the entire country. To lads of a mechanical bent the machinery department alone is an education in itself, and might have no small part in shaping and influencing their future.

(c) Tax deeds were issued by the Treasurer of Hancock County, Iowa, to Henry Leamer covering part of the above described premises The tax deeds were recorded in Book A page 184 and 185, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa The land was conveyed to said Henry Leamer in trust for Julia Rhodes and children. There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Julia Rhodes or her children and because of which fact the said Julia Rhodes or her unknown spouse or unknown heirs or children would have an interest in and to the said land.

(d) A mortgage was given covering the above described premises by James M. Elder to Henry Leamer, recorded in Book A, page 322. There is no release of the above described mortgage executed by the said Henry Leamer, and he or his unknown heirs might have some interest in and to the said premises by virtue thereof.

(e) Henry Leamer, the grantee in the tax deeds referred to in Paragraph (c), conveyed the land to James M. Elder by deed recorded in Book F, page 222, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but the wife of Henry Leamer did not join therein and because of which she or her unknown heirs might have some interest in the land.

(f) Joel Matteson acquired title to the South Half (S½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book 2, page 270, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Joel Matteson or his spouse or heirs and because of which he or his unknown wife or heirs may have an interest in and to the said land.

(g) Polly Ann Matteson, Harriet Hall, Egbart A. Matteson and George B. Matteson appear from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, to have been the heirs of Joel Matteson who had title to the South Half (S½), of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), but there is no conveyance of record either from the said Joel Matteson or from any of his heirs as above named or from their unknown heirs, and because of which they or their unknown heirs may have some interest, right, or title in and to the said premises.

(h) Thomas L. Walsh acquired title to the premises described in Paragraph (b) above, by conveyance recorded in Book A, page 295, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, and it appears from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, Will Record 2 page 1 that he died leaving Margaret Walsh Patrick Walsh Eugenia Walsh Isabella Walsh Martin Walsh Margaret Thyne Johana Sheehan and Annie Walsh, as his heirs at law and that by virtue of the fact that there are no conveyances of record from them they and their unknown spouses or unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said premises

(i) That among the said defendants [illegible] have been or may be [illegible] minor heirs or [illegible] disability who may [illegible] and to the above [illegible] by or through one of the defendants, known or unknown, the exact character of which [illegible] and the names of said minor [illegible] plaintiffs are unable to state

That plaintiffs have sought diligently to learn the names and residences of all of the said defendants, and unknown claimants, without success

That the claims of said defendants create a cloud on plaintiffs' title, and plaintiffs ask that their title and estate in said premises be established against the adverse claims of all of said defendants. That the cloud created by the apparent claims be removed. That plaintiffs be decreed to be the absolute owners in fee simple of the said land. That the defendants and all persons claiming by, through, or under them, or any of them, be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right, title or interest in and to the said premises. That plaintiffs' title be quieted, and that they be granted such other and further relief as may be equitable and necessary to establish their title in fee simple, and for the costs of this action; and that unless you appear and defend before the second day of said term of Court, being the October Term of said Court, which convenes and will be held at the Court House in Garner, Iowa, beginning the 11th day of October, 1915, default will be entered against you and judgment and decree rendered thereon as provided by law.

An Episode of Travel

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Marriage in Europe has always been brought about in different ways from those prevailing in America. With us the great bulk of the marriages are made for love; in Europe they are largely arranged by the parents. With us the bride is not expected to have a stated dowry; in Europe the amount must not only be fixed, but settled upon the bride before marriage. In America there are no marriage brokers, or, at least, there is no such institution; in Europe there are places, notably Geneva, where most of the marriages are brought about by this craft.

Jim Wilson, a young American, finding himself in a place where such was the prevailing custom, was much interested in it. Jim was one of those fellows who are not content with observing odd ways, but must try them. He went to a marriage broker and gave him an order for a wife. Not that he expected to marry; his purpose was to experience a case of wife negotiation. The broker told him that the man was expected to deposit sufficient money to pay all expenses; that when introduced to a lady, the object being matrimony, he might, after seeing her, withdraw, and she had the same privilege.

All classes availed themselves of the brokerage system, from the highest down to those who could not afford the expense Jim was introduced to the daughter of a colonel in the army He found a very ladylike and a very comely young person who received him, ignoring the purpose of the meeting entirely, but chatting with him frankly and with charming manner

Jim could not understand how a girl of her refinement could depend upon a broker to find her a husband and yet he knew that in the place where she lived such was considered about the only process by which girls could find husbands He felt ashamed of himself for entering upon the matter, since he had done so merely from curiosity.

Thinking that the best way out of the matter was to withdraw at once, he told his broker to say to the lady that he had decided that marriages between different nationalities were not likely to be happy and if he married he would mate with one of his own countrywomen He had been told that it was the privilege of either party to withdraw and felt no compunction at doing so.

One day while walking in a park, where a military band was playing as people promenaded or sat about in groups, he came upon the young lady he had met for the purpose of gratifying his matrimonial curiosity sitting at a table with her father, who was sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. He expected to be recognized, if at all, with reserve, perhaps embarrassment. To his surprise she bowed to him with a smile. He did the proper thing by advancing and expressing himself charmed to meet her again. Her father, the colonel, rose, bowed very low and invited him to take a seat and partake of a liter of wine.

Jim was immensely pleased. After all, the matrimonial brokerage custom was not so bad. At any rate, here was a girl who had the good sense to consider the preliminaries in the light of a business transaction and not feel hurt that he had not proceeded in the affair He chatted with her for some time, when her father took her away, giving him a cordial invitation to call upon them.

Jim was much pleased to make a pleasant acquaintance in this peculiar manner. When he reached home it would be one of the episodes of travel to tell his friends. He determined to accept the invitation for once at least and within a few days made the call. The lady, though as modest as before, seemed to feel a greater freedom that the matrimonial business was no longer between them. Contrary to European customs, he was left alone with her and when he departed felt that he had spent one of the most delightful evenings of his life.

Three weeks from that evening he left the lady again feeling that for him the bottom had dropped out of the universe. He had fallen desperately in love with the lady he had declined to marry and proposed to her. She had refused him, giving him to understand that she would not marry a foreigner and on no account an American.

If Mr. Wilson had any curiosity it was to know why she had received him cordially at first as a suitor and now that he was ready to complete what the broker had begun would not accept him. He knew that her father had nothing but his pay in the army and had felt certain that the marriage on that account alone might have been arranged. He concluded to go to the broker who had introduced him with a view to learning what had brought about the change. That person said to him:

"Monsieur, the lady could not be expected to meet with a refusal on your part to marry her. She has punished you for that."

"But," said Jim, "I thought you said that after one of your introductions either party is at liberty to withdraw"

"So I did, but this is the business part of it—a woman is privileged to take another view of it, and in this case mademoiselle was evidently offended."

Jim went back to America with a broken heart. He does not tell of his adventure as one of the episodes of his tour abroad.

IOWA MUSICIANS WILL BE IN EVIDENCE AT THE STATE FAIR

T. Fred Henry, Iowa Band Master.

Iowa musicians will be very much in evidence at the State Fair and Exposition August 25-September 3, and incidentally will demonstrate the musical talent of the state. The Ballmann Symphony band will come out from Chicago to assist in the work of entertainment, but aside from that organization the music at the State Fair will be typically Iowan. The Henry band, a Des Moines organization of forty pieces, has been engaged to give daily concerts, forenoon, afternoon and evening, also the Fischer band, twenty-five pieces, of Burlington. Three orchestras have been engaged, Graham's of Des Moines; Quist's of Fort Dodge and the Myer's orchestra of Waterloo, all of more than state wide renown and reputation It will be Iowa music for Iowa people.

SAVED BY AN UMBRELLA.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Ura was a little girl who lived in far-off Australia. Her home was with an English family named Winston, but her real people were dark-skinned natives, who lived in the plains and were known as bushmen. When a baby Ura had been very ill and her mother called in the white lady to see what the strange people's medicine would do.

Mrs. Winston gave the infant some simply remedy and it got well, but when the mother died a few weeks later on the bushman father brought it to the big house on the plantation, where the Winstons lived, and the white lady kept the tiny brown baby till now she was a bright child of 11.

One day the bushman father came to get his child back, but Ura did not want to go into the plains and live a wild life in grass huts But the father insisted so that Mrs Winston, knowing she had no claim to hold the child, sadly told Ura that she would have to return to her father

May, the baby of the Winston family, was but 3 years old, and Ura seemed devoted to the child

One bright afternoon Ura, feeling sad about her having to return to the bushmen, went with May on a tramp near the sheep fields. They had a little basket of lunch, and Ura picked up a big red umbrella as she walked through the hall

"That umbrella will only be in your way child" said Mrs Winston, as she put a few more apples and cakes into the basket and tucked May into the little wagon 'You had best leave it home

It will keep off the sun and we can play it is a tent, replied Ura. "So I would like to have it." With a bit of wire she fixed it over the wagon, and, taking the pole, started on the trip. For an hour she walked, drawing the wagon at her heels, and Mrs Winston, standing on her porch, could see the red umbrella shining brightly far away against the soft green of the rolling fields

Under a big tree the two children camped and ate their lunch, then Ura swung May in a grapevine till the sky began to darken

"A storm is coming up, May," cried Ura, beginning to pack up the plates "We must start home at once."

So she put the baby in the wagon, and throwing the umbrella across her arm walked rapidly toward the house, which stood on a hill at least a mile off The sky was fast growing darker Black clouds stormed up in the west, and out of their inky depths flashed the lightning Ura began to run, but the wagon was heavy Then the wind rose and blew so strong that it was hard for her to fight her way.

As she prodded on against the storm she heard strange sounds behind her, and looking back saw a sight that made her stand still with horror—for far away she could see a thin, dark line coming across the plains, like the waves breaking on the shore. It was a large herd of sheep that had become frightened in their distant grazing ground and were racing, mad with terror before the storm

Of course sheep are not very large animals but when they come by the thousands and rush over one, it would mean death

Ura knew this If the mass of wildly racing animals reached them they would be trampled to death And just then to make matters worse, May began to cry The girl dropped the umbrella and took the weeping baby in her arms She would save the little one, even at the risk of her own life. As she looked at the red umbrella lying on the ground an idea came into her frightened brain perhaps it was the very thing that would save them

So she placed May on the ground and told her to walk rapidly toward home. Then she kept about four yards behind the baby walking backward herself. When the rushing herd of sheep was a short distance off she opened the umbrella and shut it quickly The flapping of the big red thing in their faces surprised and frightened the leaders, but they could not stop—behind were hundreds of other animals coming on at full speed If they swerved aside, parting to right and left As you know, sheep always follow the leaders, so as fast as they came up they caught sight of the red umbrella which Ura kept shutting and opening, and they, too, ran to one side leaving a clear path At last the herd swept by and vanished over the hill

Just then the storm broke. But out of the roar of the rain Ura heard a shout and saw the men of the farm hurrying to their rescue So a happy party it was that dashed to the house to a hot supper and a dry bed And when the child settled to sleep that night she felt a warm hand on her head

"Ura" said Mrs Winston, while her voice trembled with unshed tears, "you saved our baby today I can never part with you As long as we live this is your home here with us

Mr. Bryan's Man of Straw.

From the Houston Post

Mr Bryan's Madison Square peace speech was interesting. It was delivered with all the oldtime Bryanic fire and it was Bryanic in the further sense that it was irrelevant and untimely

"Tonight I plead against war with Germany," he exclaimed "Should similar circumstances arise with France, England or Russia I would plead just as ardently against war with any of those countries"

True enough, but who is demanding war with Germany? Certainly the president is not demanding such a war The press is not demanding war and so far as we have been able to ascertain, no portion of the people have been demanding war

Pleading with whom, Mr Bryan? Wherefore the necessity of pleading when there is nowhere in the country the slightest desire for war with any country?

Mr Bryan is merely campaigning against nobody and pleading against a sentiment that has no existence.

Disgusted.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger

One day, while her grandfather was paying a visit to Florence's home, the little girl said to him:

"Gran'pa, your talk about perseverance winning is all nonsense."

"Well well, child!" cried the grandfather "why do you say that?"

"Why said the little girl "I've worked all the afternoon blowing soap bubbles and trying to pin them on mother's hat"

CHARGED WITH BEING A FORTUNE TELLER, WINS FREEDOM BY READING JUDGE'S MIND

What is believed to be the most remarkable exhibition of clairvoyant powers ever demonstrated was witnessed recently in a New York court, presided over by Judge Rosalsky. Professor Bert Reese was brought before the judge, charged with being a fortune teller. The professor was willing to have his powers tested. The judge wrote three difficult questions on a slip of paper. Without seeing the paper Reese repeated the questions and answered them correctly. Reese was immediately released.

Raise Own Foodstuffs or Maintain Control of Seas

From the New York Annalist.

Afterward the world will be food-conscious as it never was before. A country that imports its food, as Great Britain does, and as any industrial nation tends to do, will have a new sense of its vulnerability on that account. It is clear that in modern war, as in war of primitive times, a tremendous advantage lies with a people who are self-sustaining, so that those who fight may be fed for an indeterminate time by those who remain at work Indeed, conditions are imaginable under which such a state of self-sustainment would weigh very heavily, if not conclusively, against the gold of a country that had to buy food for itself and its army, too. Gold is an asset in war only so long as it can be exchanged for the goods required to be consumed in war If the world were so upset, or if labor in such masses had been diverted from pursuits of production to the field of war as greatly to diminish the output of essential goods, so that no people produced a surplus of food to sell, then the belligerent country unable to feed itself would be at a tremendous disadvantage, though it had all the gold in the world. Or if a food-importing country lost control of the ocean highways, or the right of free access thereto, no clairvoyant faculty would be required to forecast its fate.

England Must Control Seas.

If the naval positions of Germany and Great Britain were reversed the British, who buy their food could not persist in war Germany on the contrary, out of her own resources or with those of Austria-Hungary combined, is self-sustaining She can subsist within an iron ring of enemies. She cannot be starved And this is all the more interesting in view of the fact that Germany was traveling fast a road which leads to food dependence. There, as in other modern countries, there was a drift of population from country to city life, from agriculture to industry The war catches Germany, by chance, at just the point of equilibrium She can feed herself, do it perhaps for years consecutively, but it requires an intense conservation of all food producing means. At the end of another generation it might have been impossible Germany in another 25 years would, in the way she was tending, almost certainly have become a food-importing country, notwithstanding the fact that German agriculture is better financed and organized than agriculture anywhere else in the world Thanks to the rural credit system imposed upon the people against their understanding a century and a half ago, capital has been very cheap and very accessible to the German agriculturist.

This country had so long produced an excess of foodstuffs for sale to Europe that the possibility of its ceasing to produce a surplus did not suggest itself at all to any but statistical intelligence until a few years ago. It was at first hard to imagine. But once people began to think about it seriously it was obvious that in a comparatively short time the United States would not only cease to sell food, but would have to produce it more efficiently in order to supply its own needs. Then imaginative economists proved, by projecting the rate of the population's increase in contrast with a diminishing rate of food-producing potentiality in reserve, that in a few years the United States not only would cease to be a seller of food, but would in spite of anything it might do to postpone the inevitable, become in time an importer. "And this," they were wont to say, "will not be the calamity it sounds It will mean only that we shall be exporting things of greater value than food As our agricultural exports fall our exports of manufactures will rise. We shall have to buy our food, but a nation that can afford to buy its food is a prosperous nation, indeed Consider Great Britain. She exports skilled labor in the form of highly fabricated goods and imports raw food It is a profitable exchange." And with that consolation the uneasiness produced in many minds by the rapid drift of population away from the farms and to the cities was somewhat relieved.

England's Fate a Warning

But while it is possible to contemplate with economic complacency a condition of food dependency even for a country like this, it is not possible from any political point of view to see it in a comfortable light The vital importance to Germany of the power of self-sustenance and the latent peril to Great Britain in her food dependence, will not be easily forgotten Great Britain, of course is long past the point of choice. Her land is unable to sustain her population She could never be self-sustaining Her future existence depends upon her ability to command access to the world's surplus of foodstuffs, and it is a commodity that is continually shifting But Germany may yet choose, and who can doubt that a country in her position, that any country, indeed, would, on taking thought, choose to produce its own food"

To hold its own with industry in the world, agriculture will have to be better financed and more esteemed. That is to say, just to keep pace from now on with the rate at which the non-food-producing population increases, agriculture must find new standards. The countries that have produced the cheap food of the last century have practiced not agriculture so much as soil mining The old soil of Europe could not have sustained the great increase in population without the grain mined out of the virgin soil of North and South America. Now that is at an end in this country It will soon be at an end in Canada The great era of cheap food is forever gone So, if the world's population goes on increasing the food supply in the next generation and beyond will be a problem to reflect upon And the lessons of this war will quicken thought in that direction.

First—Get the Right Wife.

The American Magazine has a department entitled "The Family's Money" It seeks to tell how to make it go and grow A discerning correspondent offers this suggestion.

We have noticed your new department My wife, who comes from the middle west and is intensely practical, says this is the time to tell you something she is sure of, after long observation She says

"Let the married folks go, it is too late to help them But do tell the young unmarried men to pick out wives who come of families of some means—people who know the value of money This idea that poor girls make thrifty wives is not sound The worst spendthrift wives I know came from poor families. Not knowing the value of money—never having seen much before—they are absolutely reckless with their husband's coin. They don't know where the money came from, how hard it came, and they have no idea of using it judiciously The young wife who has seen something of money all her life, having lived in a family partly composed of successful men folks, is more likely to have business sense. When she marries a poor man she will investigate his affairs, understand them, and be of some business use in the household. Two can squeeze pennies tighter than one."

Those Conceited Americans.

From the Frankfurter Zeitung

The psychologist finds no difficulty in explaining why the American holds such a distorted view of the significance and power of his flag The Americans are told every morning what clever fellows they are, that America as a nation is without a compeer, that America has reached the highest stage of civilization that the American men are smarter, more honorable and more industrious than the men of any other nation, and that American women are more beautiful, more virtuous, and more ladylike than their sisters throughout the world At every national festival the people become inebriated on "spread-eagle speeches," which is an American expression for somewhat specifically American, namely, for a hyper-patriotism which looks down on every other nation with a compassionate smile and which puts those who are seized by it into a state not unlike megalomania

There are of course exceptions, there are Americans who are able to appreciate the progress and achievements of foreign nations, but the mass of the people have an overweening opinion of themselves, a fact that has been brought fully to light by the war One must, it is true, not forget that Europe has strengthened the Americans' belief in their likeness to God The nations of the old world have been wooing Uncle Sam for the past 10 to 15 years. After the war however, things will probably be very different, for even England will then undoubtedly adopt the standpoint indicated recently by a Canadian newspaper in the following words. "Our friends in the United States take great credit to themselves for having helped us. That they certainly have done, with arms and ammunition We have paid for this however and have paid a price double and treble what it ought to have been Moreover the material was, for the most part, very inferior A very severe blow has been dealt Uncle Sam in his self-respect by the attitude of the German military authorities who have not been seduced by the worship of the Star Spangled Banner When Uncle Sam begins to settle accounts with Japan he will find that his pupil has in the eyes of the rest of the world outstripped his master

SHUNNED BY THE MEXICANS

Caves Supposed to Be "Possessed by the Devil," Into Which None Willingly Enter.

"Ancient caves in different parts of Mexico often contain the skulls and bones of former inhabitants, whether prehistoric or of later times, sometimes containing fine fashioned flint implements.

"The natives, as a rule, fear to go into these places. 'Do not enter, senor,' they will say, as, with Anglo-Saxon lack of superstition you determine to explore them; 'some evil befalls those who meddle with the remains of the dead.'

"And if they are prevailed upon to assist they cross themselves devoutly before descending or entering. Weird tales they unfold afterward of men who have gone into such places and found their exit barred by some evil spirit, they themselves having been encountered dead and cold upon the cavern floor when discovered by their relatives, who had searched for the missing one!

"According to the peons, the scenes of murder or wickedness which may have taken place in such situations are enacted again to the terrified vision of the unhappy witness who had the temerity to venture into those places possessed of the devil, for the king of darkness is an ever-present and active element of the poor Mexican's superstitious world"

The Last Straw.

Mary Jane's master is a slightly eccentric bachelor He has one most irritating habit. Instead of telling her what he wants done by word of mouth he leaves on his desk, or on the kitchen table, or anywhere else where she is likely to see it, a note curtly directing her to "Dust the dining room" or "Turn out my cupboard," and so on.

The other day he bought some notepaper, with the usual die-sunk address imprinted upon it, from the stationer, and ordered it to be sent home.

Mary Jane took it in, and the first thing that caught her eye was a note attached to the package. She read it open-eyed.

"Well," she said, "he's asked me to do a few things in his blessed notes, but this is the limit I won't stand it no longer'"

Some Refreshment.

An admiral, during the maneuvers at Newport, told a story at a garden party.

"The navy is as abstemious from ethical reasons," he began, "as old Stingee was from miserliness.

"Old Stingee was entertaining a boyhood friend one evening at his shore cottage. After a couple of hours of dry talk the old fellow said, genially:

"'Would you like some refreshment—a cooling draft, say—George?'

"'Why, yes, I don't care if I do,' said George, and he passed his hand across his mouth and brightened up wonderfully.

"'Good" said Old Stingee. 'I'll just open this window. There's a fine sea breeze blowing.'"

Regular letters came to Eric from his sister and from Joan—airy, newsy one from Mary, loving ones with no news in them from Joan. The greatest piece of news that came from Mary, who dealt with it by the page, and which was briefly treated by Joan, was the staggering information that the congregation had asked for Mr Presbrey's resignation. This news came while Eric was in Munich, completing a brief course of study in that city, some little time before he was to return to America. He had gone first to Vienna and then to Munich, after finishing the course at the Beaux Arts.

From all that he could make out of the disconnected, almost exuberant letter, Mr. Presbrey had undertaken to put himself and God over and above Horace Blagden in the management of the church, with dire consequences to at least one of the allies (I am quoting Mary almost literally) It seemed that Mr. Presbrey misconstructed a certain listlessness on the part of the great man of Corinth, he took it that Mr Blagden was losing his force as a dominant leader, that he no longer held the reins in a rigid grip, so to speak The worthy pastor took heart He assumed an independence that, through cultivation, grew rapidly into arrogance. He openly defield Horace at a time when it seemed most unlikely that that gentleman would rise from the ashes of his hopes to take issue with him

The controversy had a trivial beginning. Mr Presbrey "took sides" in a choir squabble The soprano and the tenor, it appears, quarreled over the proper way to interpret a duet in one of the Easter anthems. The fact that it was a contralto and bass duet doesn't seem to have mattered, although you'd think it would. The bass and the contralto were not consulted They were ignored Fortunately for the congregation, they sung it in their own sweet way and no one was aware of the fact that the anthem was ruthlessly spoiled until it became known that the soprano and tenor were not on speaking terms with each other.

Then the pews began to take notice of the dissension in the loft Inside of a fortnight, the entire congregation was involved. Mr Presbrey came out flat-footed for the tenor, who, on week days, gave vocal lessons in respectable support of a teacher in the Sunday school—his wife, by the way —and did not smoke nor drink Moreover, he advised his pupils to abstain from smoking and drinking Neither habits was good for the voice, he explained. The soprano, on the other hand, was a good looking young woman, who went to Boston twice a week to take lessons, and who spent all she earned on hats and things to bedeck herself with, so that the men in the pews would think she could sing, though their wives told them she couldn't. Also she was given to singing secular songs of a rather buoyant character at public entertainments in the opera house, and she had spent an entire season in the chorus of the English Opera company in Boston, ostensibly for the training it was said but, according to certain ladies in the congregation, in the hope that she might some day be requested to appear in tights The soprano was conscious of a very good figure

Well, to get back to Mary's letter Mr. Blagden suddenly threw off his lethargy. The soprano, it so happened, had been elevated to the choir on his recommendation, and as he paid the weekly salaries of the quartet out of his own purse, no one had the right to object to his selection, although nearly every woman in the church knew of someone better qualified than Miss Smith. And so, in the midst of petty strife, Horace, like the big man that he was, snapped his fingers smartly and the whole congregation scurried back to the fold in a most amiable way. The surprised Mr Prebrey was left alone, a shorn, stark figure to face the result of his convictions

He resolved to stand his ground The soprano must go. Likewise the fiddler who came in occasionally to play obligatos to her solos. The First Congregational church was not a dance house

To the intense amazement of everyone, he bluntly announced in open meeting that a new soprano would be engaged for the ensuing quarter Horace could hardly believe his ears.

"Miss Smith is hired by the year, Mr Presbrey," he said stiffly, arising from his seat in Congregational meeting

"I trust you will pardon the liberty I take in reminding you, Mr Blagden, that she is no hired by the congregation," remarked the minister, mildly

Horace responded with his wintry smile. "By the same token, she should be dismissed by the person who hired her."

"A change is absolutely necessary, sir."

Horace was thoughtful for a moment. "I understand they need a soprano in the Second church If you insist on her leaving this church, I shall be very glad to recommend her for the position there."

The threat in these words was too thinly veiled to escape the attention of the members who filled the chapel No matter how gravely they had divided against each other in the choir squabble, they became a unit of apprehension in view of the catastrophe that suddenly loomed up before them

If Miss Smith went to the Second church, there also would go the mighty Blagdens. And then, what would become of the mortgage on the church?

Someone sprang to his feet and suggested that the matter be deferred for a fortnight or so. Mr. Presbrey had the temerity to say the Second church could have Miss Smith and be welcome to all she could bring with her

That was the beginning. It went from bad to worse, Mr Presbrey finally resorting to personalities. He said that it was time to throw off the yoke. Mr. Blagden, he explained, was scarcely the one to regulate the policies of a great church when one stopped to consider the unhappy results of his efforts to bring up his own son in Christ. Moreover, had it not been for the intervention of himself and Mrs. Presbrey, those two excellent young persons, the Midthornes, might have been hectored into a natural defiance of all the laws of God and man, simply because the home influences that surrounded them were not calculated to inspire gentleness of spirit or contriteness of heart. With an equal chance, Chetwynd could have been saved, but no! The parents of that young man stood between him and the true agents of God. They set themselves over against their closed gates and said to God's minister: "Hands off This is ours."

At this juncture, Horace pallid as a ghost, arose from his chair and, without looking to right or left, stalked from the chapel, followed by his wife, whose whitened head was bent and whose limbs tottered.

The next day, bright and early, Horace Blagden sent out a command to the officers and chief men of the First church. They obeyed, and 3 o'clock found all of them gathered in the private offices of the banker. They came away from that meeting with grave faces and troubled hearts, but just the same, they affected no sign of hesitancy in asking Mr Presbrey for his resignation

The minister was dumbfounded He had known all along that he was kicking against the pricks but, to quote Uncle Jabez Carr, "he didn't know there was a mule watin' to kick back when he was a-lookin' t'other way"

Mr Presbrey refused to resign A great hullabaloo ensued Corinth had never known the like of it. Todville chuckled and, to a man came out for Mr Presbrey The same spirit inflated the narrow by-ways along the water front until they were ready to burst with acclaim Notwithstanding Mr Presbrey's rigorous efforts to reform that section of town or to obliterate it entirely the saloon keepers, the brothel house owners and the human dregs of Corinth joyfully took sides with him in the fight against Horace Blagden, a rather anomalous condition, you may say, but perfectly natural if you pause to consider the relative influence of the two contenders. Lower Corinth had no fear of God, but it slunk away from Horace Blagden. Therefore, if it could destroy Horace, there would be nothing to fear

A subsequent letter from Mary informed Eric that Mr Presbrey was to open a school for boys on the old Dexter farm, just above Corinth A youngish man from Boston was likely to be called to the First church He had preached for two Sundays on trial and Uncle Horace was quite enthusiastic over him

Few and far between were the letters the young man received from his uncle They were always of a business nature absolutely undeviating in that respect. Drafts from dividends, reports on properies, and matters of that sort There never was a letter from Aunt Rena She made no effort to be friendly

But one day, a month before he was to sail for home Eric received from his uncle a letter that sorely disturbed his peace of mind It revived the old dread that grew up with him from childhood and which had lain dormant for the past few years—the dread of the prophecy concerning himself and Mary He had killed his man That much of it was fulfilled Now, what of Mary? Was she to fulfill her part of the ugly prophecy?

His uncle, after apologising for calling his attention to the unpleasant matter to follow, wrote

"I am very glad to hear that you are coming home It is not, as I have stated before in this letter, my custom to interfere in the affairs of others. Since you and Mary reached an age that warranted the belief that you would be capable of thinking soundly for yourselves, I have not undertaken to obtrude my opinions, much less to offer criticism of any act or impulse. You, Eric, I knew to be level headed and steady I have had no fears for you Regarding Mary, I cannot speak so confidently She is wayward and she is extremely pretty The combination is not as desirable as it may seem, as viewed from the vantage point of an older head. We have tried to keep the path she traverses clean and free from contaminating influences. But she sees fit to resent our thoughtful consideration I am not pretending to you, even delusively, that she has overstepped the bounds of propriety in any sense of the term I believe Mary to be a good girl and pure minded.

"You recall young Payson. He is now, as you doubtless know, living in New York, where he has a position with a large bond house—a responsible position, I hear He belongs to several clubs and is what is termed a man amout town. The influences of Corinth seem to have deserted him. I am not questioning his integrity That privilege was denied me long ago. I was mistaken about him once, I shall not fall into error again I did him a grievous wrong Had it not been for the arrogant demands of Adam Carr, I should have been inclined to restore him to his position in the bank. But that was not to be considered. I owe nothing to the generosity of Adam Carr He is my enemy.

"Now to come to the point, Mary, who will soon be 21, has taken a great fancy to this young man. He visits his mother here regularly and, while I cannot ask him to come to my home, Mary sees him frequently and in a clandestine manner Your aunt and I have remonstrated, but to no avail She goes about with him when the occasion presents itself She rides in his automobile with strange men and women from New York—flashy women who drink and smoke I am sorry to say that she seems to be estranged from her friend and old time companion, Joan Bright. The inference is plain. Joan does not approve of John Payson and his friends. We see but little of her in these days. A few nights ago Mary came home from an all day trip—on a Sabbath — and your aunt distinctly smelt the odor of wine on her breath.

"Last week I met Payson in Corinth. Realizing that it was better for everyone concerned, I politely asked him to come to my house to see Mary We would be glad to welcome him there. He calmly informed me that he would not put foot inside my gates, not in 1,000,000 years, or something to that effect. Whereupon I notified him that he could not continue his attentions to my niece unless he were manly enough to visit her in the home of her protectors. I will not repeat what he said in response to this. Suffice to say, he insulted me. He did not hesitate to say that he would see Mary when he pleased and as he pleased.

"I do not like this young man. He is not all that he should be. Judge Bright, once his friend, now says that he belongs to a fast set in New York, and has been spoiled by prosperity and adulation. I am quite sure that he means to marry your sister if she will have him. He knows that she will come into a fortune soon. He is a reckless speculator, I am told. I fear for her interests more than I can tell you.

"You know him. I leave it to you as to whether he is altogether the man you would choose to be the husband, or even the lover of your sister.

"In bringing this matter to your attention, I will go a bit beyond the bounds of reticence. Do you know his history? Do you know why Adam Carr takes such a deep interest in him? Do you know whose son he is? These are questions that will confront you. I could answer all of them, but will not.

"I will simply say that he is not to be thought of as a husband for Mary, and in saying so to the son of Philip Midthorne, who was a gentleman born, I feel that my convictions are not without weight in your estimation.

"As I said before, I rejoice that you are coming home. You, and you alone, can influence Mary. She must not be permitted to go on in this affair. Do not write to her of what I am telling you. Her resentment might lead her to do the very thing we are seeking to prevent by diplomacy and tact. She is lovable and she adores you. You can save her, Eric.

"Jack Payson will do all that he can to hurt me. He has never forgiven me. He would take her, honorably or otherwise, merely to have the chance to gloat over me.

"Your devoted uncle,

"Horace Blagden."

CHAPTER XIV

LET THERE BE LIGHT.

When Eric came down the gang plank at the pier in New York city, the one familiar face that met his gaze belonged to Adam Carr. The square, stubborn figure of the detective was at the bottom of the slip, and no amount of jostling disturbed it.

"I've got news for you," was his greeting, as Eric extended his hand.

"And I have a question or two to put to you, Mr Adam," said the young man promptly.

"I suppose you want to ask me about Jack Payson," observed Adam as they moved off toward the "M" section "I thought you'd be wanting to get at the facts. First, let's hustle your stuff through these fellows here. I've got it fixed so that you won't be delayed. Little pull"

"Thanks. What is your news?"

"Your sister is in New York."

"In New York? How—what do you mean? Is she here to meet me?"

"Not exactly that. I think she's here to avoid meeting you."

Eric turned icy cold People stared at him as he reached blindly for the support of one of the posts.

"For God's sake—" he began hoarsely, and could go no farther. His eyes asked all the questions that were necessary

"I've got a cab outside We'll talk about it as we drive up. Be calm Everything's all right with her, I'm sure She's staying with friends. Old Horace didn't know how to handle her, that's all. She's like a spirited, thoroughbred horse He went a step too far into her private affairs."

"She had to. Any girl of spirit would have done the same"

"But why did you say she was here to avoid meeting me? What is wrong? What has she done?"

"Destiny! Foreordination! The promises of their childhood! All of these rushed across his mind in horrid review His heart was like lead.

"Oh it was wrong to leave her," he groaned, before the other could reply. "I am to blame if anything has happened—"

"People are staring at you, Eric. Pull yourself together. I guess I was too sudden It's a fault I have. You've got a wrong impression, I see She's all right Don't worry I should have said she wanted to avoid meeting you in Corinth She's done with Corinth forever Here's the inspector"

Half an hour later, they were on their way up town in a hansom. A fine drizzle was blowing in their faces as they leaned back in the seat, neither of them caring to have the glass lowered

"Now I'll answer your questions about Jack Payson," said Adam quietly.

"I want to know about Mary. What's happened?"

"Well, she eloped a week or 10 days ago She's of age now and can do as she pleases."

"In heaven's name, why did she leave Corinth? What is she doing in New York? Where is she—"

"Give me time, my lad Horace objects to Jack Payson, that's the sum and substance of it. He's never got over the fact that he did the boy a wrong. You know and he knows that Jack was not guilty of robbing the bank, but Horace hates him simply because he didn't do it. Jack's all right. He has done well in New York. Godsend to him to get out of Corinth. He wants to marry your sister. Hold on! Don't fly off the handle now. He may not have as much blue blood in him as you have, but he's got plenty of honest red blood, and he's a man, in spite of Horace He's square and he's good enough for any woman, if you can say that of any man. He—"

"I don't know anything about him. Who was his father? Does anyone know? Do you know?"

Adam's eyes narrowed ever so slightly, and he was slow in replying.

"Be blunt about it. You want to know if he was born—straight. That's it, isn't it?"

"That's it."

"If his mother was straight?"

"Yes. And why you have always been so deeply interested in him," blurted out Eric.

"That's something I cannot answer," said Adam, looking straight ahead.

"You mean you won't," cried Eric.

Which Room?

From Judge.

In a western town there was once a hotel that all traveling salesmen avoided except when they couldn't. There was no heating system, the only warmth in the house being supplied by a small stove in the office.

One howling night, when the wind was making about 30 knots per hour and the mercury was 20 below zero, a traveling man shivered beneath the insufficient bedclothes in his drafty room until about 3 a. m. Unable to stand it any longer, though he dreaded to leave the bed, he leaped out, seized his clothes and ran to the office. There he shuddered into his garments, and then began building up the fire.

The fire poking roused the landlord, who came out and said: "What are you gettin' up this time o' night fer? You left a call for 6:30."

"What did I get up for?" shouted the traveling man. "I couldn't stay in bed any longer in that room of mine! I was freezing!"

The landlord defended his hostelry, and the traveling man assailed it, in a regular quarrel.

During the disagreement an old doctor of the town, who had been out in the inclement night and was almost frozen, saw the light in the hotel office and came in. The old man's long whiskers were covered with frost and festooned with enormous icicles.

As the traveling man turned from his quarrel and saw the old man's condition and the pendant ice, he exclaimed: "My God, man! Which room did you have?"

A Deserving Pensioner.

In the American Magazine a United States senator writes a very interesting article entitled "A Senator's Mail." Among the curious letters he has received is the following from an indignant pension claimant:

"Why hasn't my pension been allowed? I spent three of the best years of my life shooting democrats, and it is time something was being done for me. See the president about this without fail."

THOUGHT SHE COULD NOT LIVE!

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Unionville, Mo —"I suffered from a female trouble and I got so weak that I could hardly walk across the floor without holding on to something. I had nervous spells and my fingers would cramp and my face would draw, and I could not speak, nor sleep to do any good, had no appetite, and everyone thought I would not live. Some one advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had taken so much medicine and my doctor said he could do me no good so I told my husband he might get me a bottle and I would try it. By the time I had taken it I felt better. I continued its use, and now I am well and strong.

"I have always recommended your medicine ever since I was so wonderfully benefitted by it and I hope this letter will be the means of saving some other poor woman from suffering."—Mrs. Martha Seavey, Box 1144, Unionville, Missouri.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as that above — they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger — it has stood the test for years.

If there are any complications you do not understand write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Miss Donna Baumgartner was very ill all last week with an attack of appendicitis and on Sunday afternoon was operated upon by Dr. Kenefick of Algona and Dr. Missman of this place She is now getting along nicely and her many friends hope that she will enjoy a very speedy and permanent recovery.

Mrs. Herman Krueger and daughter, Miss Edna, and son, Edward, autoed over from Caledonia, Minnesota, Friday, and remained over Sunday for a visit at the Mrs. George Schroeder home. Mrs, Henry Schroeder and son, Albert, of Chicago, who have been visiting here the past two weeks accompanied them home for a short visit before returning to the city.

Arthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Braga, northeast of town, had a near accident Sunday evening. Mr. Braga was taking the auto out of the garage when the boy ran around the corner of the building, slipped and fell between the front and back wheel of the car. Fortunately the car was stopped in time to save the boy from serious injury..—Meservy Register.

Dr. Schneider who had been here during the absence of Dr. Zinn, left Saturday morning for his home in Milwaukee for a short visit with his parents before returning here to again take charge of Dr Zinn's practice while he goes to the coast to take in the exposition. Dr Schneider has made many friends during his short stay here who will be glad to welcome him back.

The Sweet shows were here Friday and Saturday playing to good crowds both nights. They gave as their opening bill "Or New Minister" and it was well received. The second evening they gave the "Cowboy Girl" and that bill was also enjoyed They carry a good company of actors and a good band and orchestra. They were well satisfied with their Klemme business and expect to return again next year.

A special foot race between Mikish of Belmond and Magner of this place on Klemme's main street Saturday afternoon caused a great deal of excitement for a little while and some satisfaction when Magner proved to be the winner The race was the culmination of a Fourth of July argument. Mr. Mikish took his defeat in a graceful manner and was well satisfied with the treatment he received.

Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Josten, Jr, celebrated their twenty-fifth or Silver Wedding anniversary, Sunday, and it was an occasion that will long be remembered by them. Only the near relatives and his mother were present, besides Rev. Thiel and family. Rev. Thiel complimented Mr. and Mrs. Josten on their nappy and prosperous wedded life and hoped that they would live to enjoy many many more wedding anniversaries. Mr. and Mrs Josten are among our most highly respected people and we wish to join with their many friends in extending congratulations

Oscar Carlson returned Wednesday from Pilot Mound, where he had been at the bedside of his father who was very ill Upon his return he received a message that his father had passed away, so he returned again Thursday so as to be in attendance at the funeral which was to be held Friday. His father was 85 years old and had been enjoying good health up to a few days ago when an old injury to one of his legs commence to give him trouble, gangrene setting in a few days ago and this hastened his departure from this world. Oscar's many friends sympathize with him in his bereavement.

The ball game last Thursday between Rockwell and Klemme on the local diamond was called at the end of the 4th inning with a score of 3 to 2 in favor of Klemme. A storm broke loose at that time and further playing was impossible. The Klemme boys had the best of the argument all of the way through and if it was not for a couple of costly errors would have shut out the leaguers while the locals earned all of their scores by hard hitting. Rockwell is supposed to have a fast bunch but always gives them a close game despite the fact we play all home men while at least half of the Rockwell players are salaried men.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings the Pitman Stock Company held forth here in a tented theater and despite the fact that the Sweet Show was here on Friday and Saturday drew fair crowds. On Monday evening they presented the political play "The Boss" and on Tuesday evening a rural comedy drama, "A Country Romance." Mr. Pitman has played the town before and his company are local favorites. Every member of the company is a lady or gentleman and if they return again next season, which they expect to do they will undoubtedly be greeted with a packed house. They have a good band and a fine orchestra and one of the best show outfits that ever hit Klemme. Here's hoping they return again under more favorable conditions, especially when we have not been showed to death as they are deserving of better business.

Up at Fairmont on the Fourth the car space was so crowded that an enterprising citizen began charging $1 far parking space for cars. When space began to be at a premium he raised the price to $1.50 and later to $2.00. It happened that the first car to approach after the second raise was a Ford, and as a warning to the driver, the man shouted out, "Two dollars." The driver, mistaking this for a bid, quickly replied "It's yours."

A letter written from California by John Hammil to his father in Britt indicates that times are very hard in the west and that Iowa is still the banner state of the union. Mr. Hammil states that from what he has seen that people out in the west are only holding their own, that many are not doing that and that there is a longing for Iowa on the countenances of many former residents of the Hawkeye state This ought to be encouraging to our citizens who are discouraged at the crop outlook.—Britt News.

William Fillenwarth is foreman of a gang which have begun the construction of a show barn 134x36 feet in dimensions at the fair grounds. The Farmers Industrial Union were successful bdders to furnish the lumber for the improvements which will be many besides the new barn. An ampitheater 150x38 containing 8 sections and capable of seating 1,500 people, a new steel judges stand and ohter improvements will be made The farmers will have a good place to exhibit their fine animals and should not hesitate to bring them in. A fine stock parade is to be held each day of the fair in order to show all the people on the ground the animals in the open. This will also furnish some exercise to these animals. The fair will be held in August 31 to Sept. 1, 2, and 3. Come on now, everybody and be a booster; if you want to use a hammer, go to the grounds and use it driving nails before the affair begins—Britt News.

What might have been quite a serious accident occurred in Garner Friday about noon when Walt Blackwell lost control of his auto and ran into the Becker Delivery wagon throwing John Griewe out on the side walk and bruising him quite a little about the head and shoulders. He then turned his car up on the side walk near the First National Bank Building running on the side walk until he came to the alley at the Kenyon Livery Stable, then running across the road he ran into a telephone pole breaking the pole and moving it about three inches. The right front wheel of the car was all smashed to pieces, the lamp was twisted way around and the fender was badly bent. Mr. Blackwell managed to keep his seat behind the steering wheel while all of this was going on and did not get hurt Fortunately it was no worse. Accidents will happen when they are least expected and sometimes when no one is to blame.—Demcoart.

There was a meeting at Corwith a few evenings ago at which the city councils from Livermore, Luverne, Kanawha and Corwith were represented. Luverne has disposed of her city electric light bonds and is now ready to put in a line conducting the fluid from Livermore to that point. Corwith is just waiting to hear from her corporation attorney in order to extend the line from Luverne to this point. Our town council hopes to start the publication next week. In the meantime the city dads can proceed as if the election had been held as every body will vote for lights. Kanawha will extend the line from Corwith to that point and rumors say that Wesley will also conduct the current from Corwith. This will be much more satisfactory all around than municipal plants as the people will now get twenty-four service and have the conveniences of a first-class city so far as lights are concerned . Just as soon as we can get a sewer system in, our people can put on city airs.—Corwith Hustler.

DANCING COMPLICATIONS

A DANCER'S STORY.

"Well," began the father of the family as he shook out his dinner napkin, "how is the dancing class going? Are you learning all the new steps?"

"I guess so," Caroline admitted gingerly. "It's swell!"

"Gee!" said her brother. I just hate the old class!"

"What's the trouble?" their father inquired.

"Oh," Caroline piped up happily, "he's mad because Bunny danced with his girl all last time, and——"

"No such thing, tattletale!" protested that young man. "I guess I don't care anything about that stuck-up Hallie Bliss! I guess I wouldn't notice her if there wasn't hardly any other girl on earth! And she can dance with Bunny a million times for all I care! You needn't be so smart!"

"Tut, tutt!" reproved his father. "If she isn't your girl how did you know which one Caroline meant? Appearances are against you, Edward! Though I would say that at your tender age I should regret knowing that your affections were becoming entangled——"

"Aw," his son burst out, red faced, "Caroline needn't talk! She has an awful case on Larry Jones, and he don't give two cents for her!"

"He danced with me more'n with anyone else," Caroline came back calmly. "If he'll dance with me I don't care whether he gives two cents for me or not, do I?"

"There!" cried her father to the abashed Edward. "I trust this glimpse of feminine reasoning will teach you something, my son! It may keep you from big-headedness when some fair lady smiles on you!"

"I don't know whachu talking about!" protested Edward huffily. "Anyhow, I don't see what Caroline likes about Larry, for he's a punk dancer!"

"He isn't!" Caroline defended. "Not when you get used to him, as I have! It's just his legs are queer! They wabble below the knees and lag behind the upper part of him! You can't help dancing a little queer if your feet are two or three steps behind you!"

"Huh!" jeered her brother. "I'd pick out someone else to have a case on then if I was a girl! Why don't you take Pinhead Warble? All the girls are crazy about him, because he looks like a picture in a magazine—but, anyhow, he wouldn't look at you!"

"Pinhead!" hissed Caroline. "Him! He doesn't dance a bit better than Larry! His legs wabble, too, only they cave in at the knees something awful, and he's so tall you're afraid he's going to shut up like a jackknife! I know, because Susy told me it made her so nervous she never could have stuck it out, only she knew the new girl was jealous of her and she couldn't let her get a chance at Pinhead!"

"These social complications are distracting!" their father mourned. "I can't seem to get them straight. Aren't there any young gentlemen in the class with full command of their limbs?"

"Gee! You oughta see Bill do the high jump!" cried his son. "He's athletic, all right! We piled up all the girls' cloaks on a chair in the dressing room when they were dancing the Ta-Tao and Bill he jumped clear over the whole lot!"

"Then that's where my vanity box got smashed!" shrieked his sister in a fury. "And Susie's white fur was all mussed up and grimy! I'll tell the teacher on you!"

"She'd take your powder box away from you!" reminded her brother. "You don't dare. You're just mad because I told you you were stuck on Larry!"

"I have got a dreadful case on him," said Caroline, surprisingly complacent. She preened herself. "He asked me for four dances at the next party—so there, smarty!"

"Aw-w-w-w!" Edward was momentarily breathless. Then he rallied. "Betcha Pinhead won't ask you or anyone else!"

"Hallie Bliss told me something," his sister said absently to the atmosphere. Edward wriggled in his chair.

"Say," he offered beguilingly. "Honest, I didn't mean anything—what I said about Larry. His legs don't wabble so awful bad. Wh-what did Hallie say?"

"Said she was saving three dances for you." Caroline told him between spoonfuls.

"Gee!" Edward gasped ecstatically. "Did she, honest?"

"I take it," their father remarked, "that the dancing class, as a dancing class, leaves nothing whatever to be desired in the way of progress!"

"I guess so," said Caroline and her brother agreeably.—Chicago Daily News.

He Got the Number.

An amusing incident took place the other day in a large railroad goods-yard. A new man was sent to unload a wagon and to check the list of goods. He did the work, but forgot to fill in the number of the wagon in its place on the form.

On this being pointed out to him he departed, and returned after an absence of half an hour, and banged down the castiron number, wrenched from the side of the wagon, remarking:

"Shure, the next toime yez want the number of a wagon, ye can go for it yersilf."—London Tit-Bits.

THE BOY AVIATOR AT THE IOWA STATE FAIR

That youth and courage are practically synonymous terms is simply demonstrated in the person of "Art" Smith, the young man that is starting the civilized world by his fearless and extraordinaery work in the world of aerial navigation. There have been some remarkable men before the public of recent years, but none to compare with young Smith. He is the wonder of the times. Last year visitors to the Iowa State Fair and Exposition were thrilled and delighted beyond expression by the work of the late Lincoln Beachey, and while his evolutions high in air were of the most signal and unusual character they were almost tame alongside the stunts that Smith is turning. He does all that have ever been done by other men and then contributes a few extras by way of good measure.

He will be seen at his best at the Iowa State Fair and Exposition. That portion of humanity that loves the sensational in show stunts—will certainly be able to get their fill, for a time at least, of the unusual. For Smith's contract with the fair managers calls for a long list of sensational performances that no other aviator before the public today dares to attempt. For instance, he agrees to fly straight up to the height of 5,000 feet, looping the loop ten times in succession on the way up, he also agrees to do what he calls a roll over, finishing within 300 feet of the ground. In this act the machine is turned over sidewise, a sort of sidewise somersault. He will do a vertical drop of anywhere from 1,000 to 3,000 feet, he will fly with the machine upside down, hands free of the steering wheel and arms outstretched, he plans to fly at night, looping the loop more less than three times in succession with a fireworks display of fifty rockets attached to the aeroplane.

Iowa leads the procession of agricultural fairs and will prove it to you. More than 25,000 entries in the various departments of agriculture, livestock, machinery, horticulture, arts, education, etc., etc.

TURNING TO HOLSTEINS

During the year 1911, a present member of the Klemme Cow Testing Association, realized that he could double the production of his cows, by the use of a pure bred Holstein sire. At that time he was milking 32 head of Shorthorn cows, the best of which made 9,160 pounds of milk per year, as the milk was weighed daily, and the poorest made 6,000. At this rate the cows were bringing in a small profit, but to continue raising this kind one could not expect to climb very high in the dairy world. The Holstein bull, "Sir Pontiac Grace," was purchased from Julian at Algona for a price of $100, at 15 months old. 16 heifers were saved the first year and these were the foundation stock of J. S. Galford and daughters herd.

The Shorthorn cows were disposed of through a sale, as soon as the first bunch of Holsteins began to freshen. Weighing the milk was continued on the Holsteins the same as with the Shorthorns, and in every instance the heifers gave as much or more at 2 years old than their mothers did when mature cows, and if the old saynig is true that "a heifer will double her production when mature, that she gives during the first Lactation period, then these heifers will certainly be record breakers. Here a re a few examples, Gr. Sh. mature cows best day 28 lb. Gr. H. at 20 months, daughter best day 30 lb.

Gr. Sh. 2 yr old best day 16 lb.

Gr. H. 2 yr old daughter's best day 35 lb.

Gr. Sh. mature cow best day 30 lb.

Gr. H. 2 yrs old daughters best day 33 lb.

One can not say that it was the feed that made this difference because the Shorthorns all freshened in the spring on fine blue grass pasture, while the Holsteins freshened in the fall receiving dry feed. Of course after becoming interested in Holsteins, naturally they made more of a study of feeds, and an alfalfa patch was planted, which furnished the best hay available for dairy cows. Then, too, consentrates were purchased for the first time because the Galfords realized the value of these feeds, in the production of milk. The one big thing that has made the herd what it is to-day, is the proper feed and care, and management of the calves. They take two full months to get a calf on to skim milk, feeding one whole month of straight whole milk, three time per day, then gradually working into skim milk, by substituting it by degrees at noon feeding, after which the night and morning milk is gone through the same process, until at the end of two months the calves are on skim milk entirely. This skim milk is fed in connection with ½ oats, ½ bran, and ¼ oil meal, until the calves are three months old, when they are fed all they can eat of three parts corn, oats and bran, and 1 part of oil meal, with plenty of good clover hay. A pure bred Holstein cow was purchased a few years ago, and the aim of these breeds is to work into Pure Breeds as fast as possible, as they have now obtained the knowledge of raising this kind. They are now milking 19 heifers, all under three years old, and their cream checks range around $125 per month, which means $250 when they are mature cows. Ten of these are being tested, and the first months test showed that six were good enough to make the advertising list which required 35 lb. of butter fat and 350 lb. of milk per month, but since then the requirements have been raised which bars them out. What the Galfords have done, is only an example of what you can do, if you use the same method of procedure, and take the interest in it, that they have taken.

J. H. Sinnett, Tester.

Patrons Who Received $30. or More for June

The following are the patrons of the Klemme creamery who have received cream checks of $30.00 or more for the month of June. The list contains the names of nearly 100 patrons and the total amount of business transacted by the local creamery during the month will compare favorably with the largest creameries in the state. Klemme and vicinity have just reason to feel proud of our creamery and speak a good word for it whenever the opportunity presents itself.

FIGHTS ARMED MEN WHO WOULD KIDNAP HER YOUNG DAUGHTER

Mother Struggles on Brink of River For Possession of Heiress.

Dubuque, Ia., July 24.—A bold attempt was made Wednesday afternoon by Louis O'Connel, of Chicago, to kidnap little 10-year-old Clara Viola Stumpf from her mother's back yard on the banks of the Mississippi river

Mrs. Elizabeth Stumpf-Shierman, divorced wife of the late John Stumpf formerly an alderman in this city, ran to the aid of her child, who was screaming at the top of her voice as O'Connell and another man, claiming to be an attorney from Lancaster, Wis., dragged the child toward the river where their launch lay ready to bear them away

The girl's mother reached the girl just as the water's edge had been gained and threw herself upon the kidnapers. Both men let her have their fists in the face and head, nearly knocking her out

With a supreme effort she dealt O'Connell a blow between the eyes which staggered him He immediately pulled a revolver from his pocket and forcing it against her head cried "Let go of the child or I'll blow your brains out"

"Shoot me if you will," the mother answered but when you take my child it will be over my dead body"

They lurched to one side and she grabbed the gun from O'Connell's hand and threw it into the river The men then renewed their fistic attack on the brave little woman, and had just about won when help in the form of a dozen burly mill workers, who had been attracted by the screaming came to the woman The kidnapers tried to get away and succeeded but not before O'Connell's back was nearly broken from a blow of a huge hunk of iron in the hands of a miller The two jumped into their waiting launch and made their escape amid flying hunks of iron wood and rock.

O'Connell is the child's uncle and at one time was her guardian The little girl is heir to an island in the Mississippi river just below Dubuque which is worth upwards of $15,000 and to secure control of this property on which is located a dozen summer cottages bringing in a handsome revenue each month is thought to have been O'Connell's purpose in attempting to kidnap the girl

Warrants have been issued for O'Connell and a local young man named Stumpf who ran the launch and a John Doe warrant for O'Connell's companion whose name is not known The Sherman family have engaged an attorney and state they will fight O'Connell and the others to the end and make them pay dear for the outrage

SHOWERS DELAY IOWA GRAIN HARVEST, BUT BOOST GROWING CORN

Rain Fell In State Every Day Except Saturday Last Week.

Des Moines, Ia., July 24.—Showers nearly every day of last week delayed haying and harvesting and did some damage to grain but hot weather boosted the corn along, according to the report issued yesterday by George M. Chappel, director of the crop bulletin service.

The report follows:

"While the week was slightly warmer than the normal, and favorable for corn, the rainfall was heavy to excessive and further delayed haying and harvesting and caused much damage to grain in shock. Showers occurred in the state on every day of the week except Saturday, and many of them were accompanied by high winds and some of them by hail, which did great damage to standing grain. Oats are badly lodged, and in the southern part of the state low, flat land is still too wet and soft for binders to work. In many localities the conditions were critical both for standing and shocked grain, but the week closes with better conditions and prospects of fair weather for several days at least. Corn made very rapid growth and a few fields are beginning to show tassels. Much of it, however, will be laid by with only two cultivations. Some reports indicate potatoes rotting in the ground, but truck of all kinds is generally in excellent condition Fruit is also in good condition and pastures were never better."

NATIONAL GUARD CAMP LARGEST IN STATE'S HISTORY

MILITARY FAILS TO THRIVE IN CAPITAL; ONE COMPANY SINKS

Thirty-three Guardsmen Are Remnant of Two Once Glorious Companies.

Des Moines, Ia., July 23.—The national guard organization in Des Moines is in a precarious condition One company has disbanded altogether, the other has barely half the strength it ought to have.

Within the [illegible] days, Capt. W. A. Graham has [illegible]ted to advertisements for trade[illegible]n to fill up the ranks of his company to the minimum strength at which the government recognizes a company, in order that the men he has can get the government pay when they go to camp early in August. The advertisements have resulted so far in enlistment of six men, which has brought the total up to 33. The full strength for a company is 65.

Captain Graham has arranged to make some 15 men who were members of the company in another city and were discharged when the guard was reorganized temporarily members of the Des Moines company, in order that he may make a showing at the encampment.

Direct opposition of the labor unions, a lukewarm attitude of the business interests toward the guard, and a lack of interest on the part of that class of young men who have the time and independence to give themselves military training, are the causes which Captain Graham claims are chiefly responsible for the condition of the militia in Des Moines

"The labor unions openly discourage men from joining the guard," he said, yesterday, "and try to induce men who are in to get out There is practically no support to offset their opposition Business men either pay no attention to the work of the militia, or hinder it. A very few are glad to have their employes undergoing the military training Others begrudge the time their employes take off for their military duty and even go so far as to discharge them."

BREDA WILL NOT LET GEORGE DO IT THIS TIME

Breda, Ia., July 23.—"We want to go the town of George one better," says F. Van Erdewyk, cashier of the Breda Savings bank, referring to George's claim to being the wealthiest town in Iowa, if not in America. "Breda had a population, according to the 1915 census, of 413 The enclosed condensed statement of our condition as per auditor's claim of July 6, shows our deposits to be $579,219 68, making an average of over $1,402 for every man, woman and child in this town.

"If there is any one bank that has a larger per capita wealth on deposit, speak up. The town of George uses the deposits of all three banks of their town to arrive at its $1,106. To quote 'Teddy,' we have George licked to a frazzle. Next"

The present status of the per capita bank deposit contest is as follows

Prescott, Ariz.	$ 500
Decorah, Ia.	689
Waukon	745
Dorchester	825

Des Moines, Ia., July 21.—In a letter to C. A. Robbins, assistant attorney general, today, Attorney W. W. Bulman, of Charlton, declares that he expects to go ahead on the Bedford murder cases. Bulman says he thinks he will be able to get sufficient evidence to reopen the cases by which four Taylor county men were accused of the murder of a cattleman in 1868 at Slam The attorney general's office will have nothing to do with the case, it was stated.

STATE TAX LEVY IS FIXED AT 4.5 MILLS; REDUCTION .4 MILL

Net Valuation of Property In Iowa After Changes Is $940,416,552.

Des Moines, Ia., July 22.—The state executive council fixed the levy for taxes collectable in 1916 at 4.5 mills for state purposes. This is a reduction of 4 mill under the levy made last year

After equalizing values of property in the state, the total net taxable value is $940,416,552. This is an increase of $8,000,000 over last year. The total of moneys and credits reported for taxation is $270,000,000.

In fixing the state tax levy, the council arranged the rates os as to produce $150,000 for capitol extension; $1,966,600 for the state educational institutions and $2,100,000 for general purposes.

The levy for capitol extension will be 17 mill; for educational institutions, 2 11 mills, for general state purposes, 2.22 mills—the total being 4.5 mills. The reduction in the total levy is mainly due to the capitol extension act, which provides for $150,000 revenue annually for the next eight years. The levy previously had been .50 mill.

The council adjusted all the assessments yesterday, but did not adjourn as a board of review, so as to give an opportunity of making corrections if the figures do not work out as expected.

The values of live stock which were fixed in 1913 were continued without change Whenever counties reported assessments under that scale, orders were issued to raise the valutions.

In equalizing the values of real estate, the council stood pat on its action of 1913 in raising values.

Forty-one counties reported assessments higher this year than they were two years ago. The council permitted these to stand without change.

Marion county was ordered to raise assessments 50 per cent The assessor in fixing the values this year had cut the 1913 values in half. The action of the council adds $7,235,925 to the Marion county assessment

Van Burean county was ordered to raise values 40 per cent In that county the assessors dropped values out of proportion to the rest of the state, the council said.

Among changes made by the executive council from returns made by the county boards were the following increases in northwestern Iowa: Monona county, 2 per cent, O'Brien county, 5 per cent, Osceola county, 5 per cent Plymouth county, 33 per cent, Wright county, 2 per cent.

CHECK BLA[illegible] TO BERL[illegible] BREAK COM[illegible]

Future Breaches of Law dangering American Li[illegible] Will Be Regarded as De[illegible] liberately Unfriendly.

CANNOT FORESEE RESU[illegible]

Grave Consequences Not probable But Administrati[illegible] Is Prepared For Possibl[illegible] Eventualities.

Washington, July 24.—No[illegible] less grave than breaking off [illegible]lomatic relations with Ger[illegible] and the calling of congress in[illegible] tra session to prepare for [illegible] tualities is foreshadowed by [illegible] tone of the new note to Germ[illegible] made public today in case [illegible] many electes to proceed with [illegible] policy at sea which resulted in [illegible] unwarned sinking of the L[illegible] tania.

Through the new docum[illegible] there runs an ominous strai[illegible] finality which has been lackin[illegible] the previous representations [illegible] the government.

The climax of the note [illegible] reached in the two conclu[illegible] words. "Deliberately unfri[illegible]ly," the German government [illegible] told, will be the view taken [illegible] this nation of further naval [illegible] in violation of American ri[illegible] when they affect American [illegible] zens.

One Significant Phase.

It is significant that the Ger[illegible] government is admonished as to "[illegible]etition of acts" affecting life a[illegible] tion of international law This amo[illegible] to saying that this government [illegible] rely for settlement of past offens[illegible] diplomatic exchanges but that [illegible] many must not transgress in th[illegible] ture.

Not less striking than the [illegible] "deliberately unfriendly as use[illegible] the president and the secretary of [illegible] is the declaration that this gover[illegible] will continue to contend for fr[illegible] of the seas "from whatever qu[illegible] violated, without compromise a[illegible] any cost."

The general view taken here t[illegible] is that, if language means anyt[illegible] if sentences are to be construe[illegible] what they mean on their face, a[illegible] as empty verbiage, then the ex[illegible]sions which have been used by [illegible] government of the United States [illegible] long and careful study and co[illegible] among the leading advisors of [illegible] White House, mean that if Ger[illegible] further infringes on the right [illegible] American life at sea talk will [illegible] and there will be a resort to [illegible] methods.

Will Not Back Down.

Furthermore, despite a view in [illegible] quarters that the administration [illegible] not back up its words there is no [illegible] reason to doubt that the president [illegible] chosen his ground with delibe[illegible] and that he has no intention of [illegible] doning it.

On the assumption that Germ[illegible] has already admitted the illegali[illegible] her practices by attempting to j[illegible] them as against Great Britain [illegible] United States, in the new note [illegible] presses the belief that Germany [illegible] no longer "refrain from disa[illegible] the wanton act of her naval [illegible] mander in sinking the Lusitani[illegible] from offering reparation for [illegible] American lives lost, so far as re[illegible] tion can be made for a needless [illegible] struction of human life by an [illegible] act."

Referring to the German go[illegible] ment's expression of hope in its [illegible] note that the freedom of the seas [illegible] be established in some measure by [illegible] the end of the present war, the U[illegible] States declares that this object [illegible] accomplished, and invites the pro[illegible] cooperation of the imperial govern[illegible] The American government adds, [illegible] over, that it "holds itself ready at [illegible] time to act as the common friend [illegible] may be privileged to suggest a way [illegible] assist in establishing the freedom of [illegible] seas. At the outset, the German [illegible] of July 8 is declared very unsat[illegible] tory, because it fails to meet the [illegible] differences between the two gov[illegible] ments and indicates no way in w[illegible] the accepted principles of law and [illegible] manity may be applied in the [illegible] matter in controversy, but propos[illegible] the contrary, arrangements for a [illegible] tial suspension of these princ[illegible] which virtually sets them aside.

An Irrelevant Proposition.

Contending that "the defense [illegible] act as retaliatory is an admi[illegible] that it is illegal," the American [illegible] ernment then argues that it cannot [illegible] cuss actions of Great Britain with [illegible] many and must regard as "irrele[illegible] in the present negotiations the co[illegible] of other belligerents.

"Illegal and inhuman acts," say[illegible] note, "however justifiable they m[illegible] though against an enemy who [illegible] lieved to have acted in contraven[illegible] law and humanity, are manifestly [illegible] fensible when they deprive neutr[illegible] their acknowledge rights, partic[illegible] when they violate the right of h[illegible] self."

Chicago, July 24.—Loaded with 2,500 excursionists employes of Western Electric company and their families, the steel steamer and capsized at her dock in the Chicago river today Six hours the accident the police had checked more than 700 bodies as vered and estimates were that 3,000 to 1 700 men, women and ren had perished. Others placed the number as even higher, but nce to substantiate such figures are lacking Scores who es- d drowning were hurt in the panic that marked the disaster

City, county, state and federal officials worked to learn the e of the disaster, to recover bodies of victims, trace missing per- and aid the injured. In this they were assisted by every agency the city could summons, hospitals, mercantile concerns physi- churches and organized charities lending their organizations experience to the work.

The crowding of passengers to one side of the boat is supposed ave caused the tragedy, but authorities, not satisfied with this nation, ordered the arrest of officers of the boat and Captain y Pedersen and Dell Fisher, first mate, were taken to police quarters.

Panic of the worst kind struck the passengers when the boat n to turn over. Best accounts of witnesses said the steamer d slightly twice, then turned further and that hundreds of ming, struggling men, women and children slid across the slop decks, fought for room on the companionways and shut bed at panions, deck chairs or any other object that came to hand

Women and children by the hundreds were caught below decks the scratched faces, torn clothing and bruised bodies of the dead mute evidence of the desperation with which they had fought chance for life.

The whole tragedy occupied less than five minutes Members of crew shouted warnings as the steamed first tilted and Captain rsen ordered lower deck ports opened and all passengers ashore. e was, however, no chance for such a measure to succeed

the first two hours attempts were to revive every person taken from wreck. Then as the hopelessness suscitating later victims became ent divers were summoned to ex- the depths of the boats, equipped ropes they groped their way into innermost recesses of the hull y other minute their assistants were signalled to "pull" and another victim was added to the number of dead. It was the results of the divers' work that caused the coroner and police estimates to mount above 1,000

Police and fire tugs organized the river craft into a rescue fleet Boats were directed to cruise down the river and watch for bodies and the sanitary canal trustees were asked to close the dam at Lockport Ill thus shutting off the current of the river in order to aid in this work

Rumors of the disaster spread rapidly Its full significance was realized when motor trucks, piled high with blanketed forms, rolled through the "loop district to morgues and undertaking establishments

Worse Than Iroquois.

"It's worse than the Iroquois," was the word that went about the streets, and immediately the city went into mourning The American and Federal league baseball games were called off, many theaters announced that their doors would be closed tonight and churches summoned their members to pray for the dead and offer comfort to the living Flags were lowered to half mast and mourning symbols were draped on many business establishments.

Gray leaden clouds that overhung the city early in the day grew heavier toward noon and a steady drizzle turned into rain. Watchers at the wreck held their places despite the hopeless conditions, and searchers for missing persons continued their wearing rounds of the morgues.

Identification of victims offered comparatively few difficulties, practically all having been drowned Measures were taken by the police and electric company to systematize the work of identification, and these were in full operation later in the lay

"Nine girls and I were in a stateroom having a little party of our own when all of a sudden we felt the boat going over" said Miss Lottie Anderson, one of the survivors.

Screams Were Maddening.

"We all fell into a heap The screams and shrieks of the women in other staterooms were maddening. I fell into the water and did not see my sister or any of the eight others after that."

Joe Brozak related how he was saved from death because his coat caught on a nail. 'I was with a party of four and they were all drowned, said Brozak "My coat caught on a nail and when the boat went over, I was held above the water If it had not been for the nail, I should now be at the bottom of the river I suppose, with the others of my party

Six government inspectors were working on the docks when the Eastland turned over. They were in charge of Inspector R H McCurry

"Two inspectors were assigned to the Eastland," McCurry said, 'to see that the boat was not overcrowded The ship had taken on all that she would hold and the two inspectors had turned many others away She was ready to sail when the accident occurred.

Text of Reply, Last Word From American Standpoint—Future Developments Rest With Germany—Proposals Are Rejected—Claim Admission of Retaliatory Measure Is Acknowledgement of Illegality.

Following is the official text of the document:

"The Secretary of State to Ambassador Gerard--Department of State, Washington, D C, Jul. 21, 1915 —You are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the minister of foreign affairs

"The note of the imperial German government dated the 8th of July, 1915 has received the careful consideration of the government of the United States, and it regrets to be obliged to say that it has found it very unsatisfactory because it fails to meet the real differences between the two governments and indicates no way in which the accepted principles of law and humanity may be applied in the grave matter in controversy, but proposes, on the contrary, arrangements for a partial suspension of those principles which virtually set them aside

"The government of the United States notes with satisfaction that the imperial German government recognizes without reservation the validity of the principles insisted on in the several communications which this government has addressed to the imperial German government with regard to its announcement of a war zone and the use of submarines against merchantmen on the high seas the principle that the high seas are free that the character and cargo of a merchantman must first be ascertained before she can lawfully be seized or destroyed and that the lives of non-combatants may in no case be put in jeopardy unless the vessel resists or seeks to escape after being summoned to submit to examination for a belligerent act of retaliation is per se an act beyond the law and the defense of an act as retaliatory is an admission that it is illegal

Beside the Question.

"The government of the United States is, however, keenly disappointed to find that the imperial German government regards itself as in large degree exempt from the obligation to observe these principles, even where neutral vessels are concerned, by what it believes the policy and practice of the government of Great Britain to be in the present war with regard to neutral commerce

"The imperial German government will readily understand that the government of the United States cannot discuss the policy of the government of Great Britain with regard to neutral trade except with that government itself, and that it must regard the conduct of other belligerent governments are irrelevant to any discussions with the imperial German government of what this government regards as grave and unjust violations of the rights of American citizens by German naval commanders. Illegal and inhuman acts, however justifiable they may be thought to be, against an enemy who is believed to have acted in contravention of law and humanity, are manifestly indefensible when they deprive neutrals of their acknowledged rights, particularly when they violate the right to life itself

If a belligerent cannot retaliate against an enemy without injuring the lives of neutrals, as well as their property humanity, as well as justice and a due regard for the dignity of neutral powers, should dictate that the practice be discontinued If persisted in it will under such circumstances constitute an unpardonable offense against the sovereignty of the neutral nation affected

The government of the United States is not unmindful of the extraordinary conditions created by this war or of the radical alterations of circumstances and method of attack produced by the use of instrumentalities of naval warfare which the nations of the world cannot have had in view when the existing rules of international law were formulated and it is ready to make every reasonable allowance for these novel and unexpected aspects of war at sea, but it cannot consent to abate any essential or fundamental right of its people because of a mere alteration of circumstances. The rights of neutrals in time of war are based upon principles, not upon expediency, and the principles are immutable. It is the duty and obligation of belligerents to find a way to adapt the new circumstances to them.

Can Observe the Law.

"The events of the past two months have clearly indicated that it is possible and practicable to conduct such submarine operations as have characterized the activity of the imperial German navy within the so-called war zone in substantial accord with the accepted practices of regulated warfare. The whole world has looked with interest and increasing satisfaction at the demonstration of that possibility by German naval commanders. It is manifestly possible, therefore, to lift the whole practice of submarine attack above the criticism which it has aroused and remove the chief causes of offense. In view of the admission of illegality made by the imperial German government when it pleaded the right of retaliation in defense of its acts in view of the manifest possibility conforming to the established rules of naval warfare, the government the United States cannot believe the imperial government will ignore refrain from disavowing the wanton act of its naval commander in sinking the Lusitania or from offering reparation for the American lives lost so far as reparation can be made for a needless destruction of human life by an illegal act.

"The government of the United States, while not indifferent to the friendly spirit in which it is made, cannot accept the suggestion of the imperial government that certain vessels be designated and agreed upon which shall be free on the seas now illegally proscribed. The very agreement would be an implication, subject other vessels to illegal attack and would be a curtailment and therefore an abandonment of the principles for which this government contends and which in times of calmer counsels every nation would concede as a matter of course.

"The government of the United States and the imperial German government are contending for the same great object and have long stood together in urging the very principles upon which the government of the United States now solemnly insists. They are both contending for the freedom of the seas. And the government of the United States will continue to contend for that freedom, from whatever quarter violated, without compromise and at any cost. It insists on the practical co-operation of the imperial German government at this time when co-operation may accomplish most, and this great common object be most strikingly and effectively achieved.

"The imperial German government expresses the hope that this object may in some manner be accomplished even after the war ends. It can be. The government of the United States not only feels obliged to insist upon it by whomsoever violated or ignored, and in the protection of its own citizens, but is also deeply interested in seeing it made practicable between the belligerents themselves, and holds itself ready at any time to act as the common friend who may be privileged to suggest a way.

"In the meantime the very value which this government has upon the long and unbroken friendship between the people and government of the United States and the people and government of the German nation impels it to impress very solemnly upon the imperial government the necessity for a scrupulous observance of neutral rights in this critical matter Friendship itself prompts it to say to the imperial German government that repetition by the commanders of the German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the government of the United States when they affect American citizens as deliberately unfriendly.

KIDNAPER CAUGHT; LYNCHERS EVADED

Cowboy Posse Rounds Up Sheepherder Bandit After His Victim Had Made Escape.

Idaho Falls Id July 26 – Lon Dean, a sheep herder, who admits that he kidnaped E A Empey a rich rancher, was lodged in the Bonneville county jail early today by cowboys after a hard ride to save their captive from would-be lynchers. Dean was captured on Sheep mountain last night after Empey had escaped

Dean a slightly built man, five feet, four inches in height, explained his crime by saying

I took this means of getting money, as I thought I could do more good with it than those who had it

Asked regarding the anxiety he had caused the family of his wealthy captive he said I hadn't thought of that"

Dean who claims Salem, Utah as his home said he had a common school education Differing from the usual run of "bad men' whose minds have been nourished on cheap 'thrillers." Dean's reading has been chiefly the works of Darwin, Huxley, Payne and Ingersoll Planned Deed Long Time.

Continuing his story of the kidnaping, Dean said that he had worked for Empey five years ago Early in the summer he was in Colorado, then went to Bailey Id He said he had planned the kidnaping for some time. After abducting Empey at the point of a gun at his ranch 40 miles from here several days ago he took his captive to a hut on Sheep mountain five miles from the ranch Empey's young son was sent to notify the family that Empey would be killed unless a ransom of $6,000 in gold was deposited at a designated spot The ransom was raised yesterday and would have been paid had not Empey escaped while his captor was asleep

Dean in recounting his exploit said "If the money had not been delivered, I would not have killed Empey, but I do not know when I would have turned him loose I treated him well and gave him the best of everything I stole food from several sheep camps, and always gave Empey the best of what I had If the money had not been delivered and Empey had not escaped, I probably would have written another letter, repeating my demands."

Empey today was at the Long Valley ranch, where he took refugee after escaping and sending cowboys to search for his captor He is in good health and said he had suffered nothing from his week's captivity, although he had had very little rest.

Tied Victim to Tree.

"Dean kept me fastened to a tree with a chain and padlock," he said. "He gave me the best of food and bedding and seemed to try to take excellent care of me I thought him demented and my captivity was more trying on that account. I was exhausted after my escape yesterday because I had run three miles down the mountain I do not care to go through such an experience again."

After Empey's escape, a posse of cowboys sarted for the place he described on Sheep mountain They found Dean at the foot of the hill, having come down, presumably, in search of his late captive Dean was surrounded and captured The sheriff was notified and went to the spot. The sheriff's automobile was halted several times by cowboys before he convinced the guards of his identity and persuaded them to turn the prisoner over to him

TWO-YEAR-OLD BOY MISSING FROM HOME

Parents of Cecil Goldthorpe Find Child's Hat In the Creek.

Mason City, Ia., July 26 —Cecil Goldthorpe, aged 2 years, is missing from home since 11 o'clock yesterday. His parents live on a farm five miles west of here Neighbors and residents of Clear Lake and Mason City are scouring the country for the child. His hat was found in a nearby creek, but the body of the child cannot be found. Waterloo bloodhounds arrived this morning to assist in the search.

SWEEPING ORDERS SENT TO FUNSTON

Told to Train Artillery on Mexican Troops If Necessary to Prevent Fighting on Border.

San Antonio, Tex., July 24 —Definite orders have been received from Washington by Maj Gen Frederick Funston, commanding the border troops, to repel any firing on American territory in fighting between Carranza and Villa forces at Nogales and Naco.

Washington, July 24.—General Funston's orders to repel any firing into American territory in fighting along the Mexican borders are the most drastic the war department has yet given for protection of Americans in Naco and Nogales or any other place where they are endangered by battles between the Mexican factions just over the line

It is understood that both Carranza and Villa have been notified that the United States will use force to prevent harm to Americans through any violation of the so-called neutrality agreement by which Brigadier General Scott, chief of staff of the army, got the factions to agree not to battle where their fire would fall over the border

General Funston's orders do not mean that he must send United States troops over the border into Mexico. Officials have previously emphasized that repelling the Mexican fire by force is in no sense an invasion of Mexico. It would really be considered as a lawful act to repel invasion from Mexico. If forced to act, General Funston probably would place his artillery in position to drive the Mexican factions so far from the border that American territory would not be threatened by their battle.

EVERS SHAKES PAWS WITH UMPS; SPAT OVER

Boston, July 24.—The trouble which developed between Umpire Quigley and Captain Evers, of the Boston Braves, yesterday, when the umpire is said to have punched Evers, claiming that the latter had stepped on his foot, was apparently smoothed over today, after President Tener, of the National league, had made a personal investigation of the incident. Before yesterday's game Quigley and Evers shook hands, settling their personal quarrels.

WESTERN PACIFIC IS SUED FOR $18,000,000

New York, July 24.—The New York Trust company as trustee under an adjustment mortgage of the Denver & Rio Grande Railway company, of Colorado and Utah today began two suits in the supreme court against the Western Pacific railway, a California corporation. The first suit is for $14,000,089,51, and the second action is for $4,375,000.

IRON RING IS DRAWING CLOSER ABOUT WARSAW

Germans Gradually Forcing Way Toward Polish Capital—Desperately Battling Russians Hope to Check Enemy When Troops Retire to Fortified Positions.

London, July 26.—From all sides except the east, Teutonic armies are continuing their concerted pressure on Warsaw, the fate of which still hangs in the balance.

Direct assaults upon the fortresses protecting the city are weakening the defenses, the Germans claim. They are hammering especially hard upon Ivangorod.

South of Lublin the battle still rages fiercely, neither side claiming advantage

Northeast of the Polish capital, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's forces are pressing hard upon the Russian bridgehead at Rosen. Petrograd is silent on the outcome.

The German campaign in Courland is admittedly progressing favorably to the invaders

There is hard fighting along the Bug near the Galician border Both Austrians and Germans declare the results so far are satisfactory. Petrograd reports indicate a desperate resistance by the Russians.

Petrograd, (via London), July 24.—Field Marshal Von Mackenzen, operating between the Bug and the Vistula, continues his wild sledge hammer blows against the Chelm-Lublin line of the Russians, directing them now particularly against the city of Lublin. His immediate objectives are Belzyce, Travniki, Vosslavitze and Grubechow. Belzyce is 12 miles southwest of Lublin.

Of only slightly less importance in this region are the battles on the Bug between Krylow and Dobrotovra. West of Warsaw the Russians have moved back to their second line of defenses at Blonie and Nadarzyn, and their positions in front of Ivangorod The latter positions are regarded the strongest in the Russian line, as is indicated by the fact that the Germans assaulted them furiously in their former campaigns against Warsaw, and were unable to breach them

To the northward, battles are raging at Novogeorgivsk and along the entire narrow line, which embraces the strong points of Pultusk and Rozan, commanding the crossing in the bend of the River Ostrolenka and Lomza.

WILSON ASKS REPORT ON STATE OF DEFENSE

Coincident With Dispatch of Near Ultimatum to Berlin President Begins Consideration of American Naval and Military Needs.

Washington, D. C., July 26.—Official announcement today that the president intends to give thorough consideration to the problem of national defense, though not admitted to have direct relation to the German and Mexican situations, is generally viewed here as related to them. That it will impress the country with the seriousness of the German situation is believed. One reason for the announcement is the sharp criticism by Roosevelt of the failure of the administration to prepare. Today's announcement is in part intended to neutralize Roosevelt's criticism.

Washington, D. C., July 24.—Formal announcement was made at the White House today that President Wilson on his return to Washington will confer with Secretaries Garrison and Daniels on a program for national defense. The president has written to the heads of the war and navy department for reports on the subject, pointing out the necessity for working out plans for increasing the efficiency of the military arms of the government.

The White House statement follows:

"The president has been considering every phase of the matter of national defense and intends immediately on his return to Washington to confer with the secretary of war and the secretary of navy, his purpose being to procure information on which he can formulate a sane, reasonable and practical program of national defense."

Although nothing was stated officially concerning the purpose of the government it was hinted officially that with the dispatch of the emphatic note to Germany the president had decided to hasten the reports and recommendations being prepared by the war and navy departments for the regular session of congress, so that all necessary information might be available if emergency arose.

As yet there are no intimations that the president has fixed any definite time for submitting the program of national defense to congress, but his purpose is said to be to map out comprehensive plans so that no time will be lost should he decide to call a special session.

GORIZIA IS TAKEN BY ITALIAN ARMY

Strategic Point Long Under Siege Reported to Have Fallen Into Hands of Invaders.

Geneva, (via Paris), July 26.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Milan, says:

"Many persons arriving at Milan state that after severe fighting the Italian troops have taken Gorizia."

Gorizia long has been an objective of the Italian army. It is one of the strategic strongholds of the Austrian chain of defenses along the Isonzo front and is the capital of the province of that name. The operations in the vicinity of Gorizia have been extremely difficult because of the mountainous nature of the surrounding territory and the strength of the defense. If this point has been captured, as reported, it marks an important gain for the Italians and doubtless will influence the conduct of the campaign on the remainder of the Isonzo battle line.

GIDEONS OFFER PEACE PRAYER AT CONVENTION

Des Moines, Ia., July 24—The Gideons in national convention here today sent a telegram to President Wilson assuring him of loyal support. Convention was halted while prayers for peace were repeated.

Senator Cummins today declared that in his opinion Germany will now change her position and respect the rights of American citizens on high seas. He stated that President Wilson's last note is logical and a "sound statement of international law"

AND ALONG CAME RUTH

"Ruth, how in the world do you keep your low shoes from coming untied at every block?" inquired Marjorie, as she bent over hers for the second or third time during their afternoon stroll, "mine are the bane of my life. Are your strings different from mine?"

"Why, no," said Ruth, looking at them, it isn't a matter of strings, my dear, it's just a matter of tying them properly in the first place. Before you put the shoes upon your feet, you should moisten the strings just at the place where you tie them. If you will do this they will never slip and will not be a nuisance by constantly coming untied. Just try it and see if I am not right."

"I surely will," asserted Marjorie gratefully, "if you will come into the shop for an instant, I will follow your advice immediately."

And she did with happy results.

COURAGE VS DECENCY

The other day an excited individual rushed into a newspaper office with a choice bit of scandal burning on his tongue. It made no difference to this person that the scandal affected the daughter of his neighbor—that the mother of the girl was seriously ill—that the brother was just entering what promised to be a successful professional career. The scandal was rich in flavor, and he wanted to see it in the paper. He told the editor about it, with every evidence of the keen relish of the scandal connoisseur, but impressed upon the newspaper man that the souce of his information must be kept inviolably secret. When the paper come out, the man returned to demand why the story hadn't been printed. Short, sharp words followed, and the visitor called the editor a coward and left, vowing that a man who was afraid to print the news had no right to be an editor. To our mind, that editor was a brave man The informer who demanded that his name be kept secret, was the coward. The editor ran a paper in a small town. So closely related were the lives of the inhabitants, that the editor knew every detail of the story before his visitor called on him But he could see no profit for himself nor glory for his paper in printing an item that would bring sorrow to the gray hairs of a father, disgrace to a brother and probably serious consequences to a sick mother. If the news appetites of his readers were so voracious, he thought, as to demand this costly food, he would refuse to pay the price. The editor was right. Many things he has to print which he would rather leave unsaid, but the scandal which has only its "spice" to recommend it should have no place in the columns of a self-respecting paper. We would rather build than tear down. We would rather print the things that help and encourage and uplift than to hold up the mistakes of some unfortunate to the scorn and contempt of his neighbors. Decency is not lack of courage. If it were, we would rather be decent than courageous.

CAN'T AFFORD IT

The other day a merchant said he couldn't afford to advertise in the home newspaper. If the man's view were not distorted, he would see that he couldn't afford not to advertise. Refusing to advertise is his most expensive extravagance. That same merchant will spend hours telling of the "unfair" competition of the mail-order houses who are his most aggressive and dangerous competitors, yet the methods employed by the mail-order houses which succeed are the very ones which the merchant refuses to use. The mail order house first of all is an ADVERTISER. Advertising is the life of its business. Every magazine that enters the small town and rural home carries the ad of the mail-order house. Expensive catalogs are printed showing the illustrations of the actual articles. Occasionally sheets are scattered, broadcast over the country as a special "come-on" for the bargain hunter. Instead of doing these things in a smaller way through the columns of his local paper, the merchant who can't afford to advertise sits down and "cusses" his tough luck and wonders why he can't get the business. He never thinks he has a better opportunity to reach the people in his neighborhood than the mail-order house has. It doesn't cost him as much as it does the outsider; he can draw the people to his store and show them the actual article he is advertising, and, when they buy, they can take their purchase home with them instead of having to wait several weeks for it. Advertising is an investment. It should be charged to your selling cost. Figure what percentage you have to pay for advertising, then base a fifty-two weeks campaign on the computation. You can't lose. You can't afford NOT to advertise!

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

SHOULD NOT HAVE MOVED

Story of a Man Who Was Making Good, but Roving Fever Got the Best of Him.

On May 4th, 1915, the St. Paul Farmer's Dispatch contained a very interesting account of the experiences of a man from Staples, Minn Realizing that he was not making much headway, he decided to look up a homestead in Canada. With $250 he and his wife took up a homestead near Outlook, Saskatchewan. After recounting his experiences of a few years, in which they had undergone hardships which were likely to be unavoidable, with a small amount of capital, he continues the story by stating that in the fall after a fair summer's work on his 100 acres cropped, he cleaned up nearly all his debts, having now four good horses, a complete set of farm machinery including two wagons and a "Swell" top buggy and eleven head of cattle He continues "However, I was not satisfied I had been reading of the splendid homesteads that were to be had in Montana Wheat was cheap and I thought it would get cheaper, so I began to think that homesteading as a moneymaking proposition was better than farming.

I did not stop to consider that wheat was not the only thing, as a matter of fact I had sold pork for 14 cents a pound. Eggs and butter had kept us in groceries and more, we had now four milch cows, two heifers coming in and more growing up. We had a cream separator, and some hogs. We had a quarter section of land that could raise an abundance of small grain, roots and grass for feed, but I could not see all that; I had the 'moving' fever and decided to sell.

I set the price on the land at $3.000 cash I could not find anyone with that much money, however, so I came down until I finally sold for $1,400

We had an auction and sold the personal property. On the sale we got just about enough cash to pay the auctioneer; the rest was all notes.

The horses brought about two-thirds what they were worth The implements sold for hardly one-third of what they had cost The cattle brought a good price

Must Make Another Start.

We now have a homestead in Montana, but we find that after moving here and getting settled, what money we had did not go far We have three horses, about all the implements we need and a little better buildings than we had on our former place. We have no cattle, though we had to build much fence to keep ranch stock out of our fields We have about $500 worth of honest debts

True, we have a half section in place of a quarter, but that is no good to us, as long as we have not the capital with which to work it

In summarizing it all up I see where I made my mistake It will take fully five years to get into as good circumstances as we were before we made the change It is five years lost

My advice to anyone contemplating a change of location is to think twice before you act, and if your present circumstances are not too bad, 'stay by your bush till you pick it clean'"—Advertisement.

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN CRIED

Suffered Everything Until Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Florence, So. Dakota.—"I used to be very sick every month with bearing down pains and backache, and had headache a good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. P. W. LANSENG, Box 8, Allyn, Wash.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Why Disrespect for Law Is Growing Among People

By Thomas Davidson, President Indiana State Bar Association.

That there is a widespread disrespect for the law is not to be denied. Whether it is growing or not, it is sufficient cause for alarm to know that it exists and it is of vital importance to inquire into its causes, and to consider any possible remedies for the evil.

Paradoxical as it may seem, one of the chief causes for the loss of respect for the law, is to be found in the making of laws. I mean statutory laws. Of making of these laws there seems to be no end. A recent count made in the library of congress, showed that for five years, ending December 1, 1913, more than 62,000 laws had been passed by congress and the state legislatures in this country, and there had been reported during the same period and published in 630 volumes of reports of the courts more than 65,000 decisions of courts of last resort.

What a mockery is that presumption that every man is presumed to know the law All the lawyers and all the judges in the land, throughout time and eternity, can hardly hope to ascend unto the top of this mountain, to say nothing of the wayfaring masses, though they be not fools.

Passing Too Many Laws.

The laws of the 12 tables were models of conciseness, and the very children, we are told, used to learn them by heart. We are passing too many laws, too many ill considered, unwise, useless and foolish laws.

We are trying to substitute the code for character, administer morality hypodermically by statute, substituting the weakling for the strong man, and to do for the individual by legislative act what he could, should and would do much better for himself.

To be respected, laws must be respectable. The blue laws of the colonies repealed themselves by reason of their foolishness and inherent weakness, and still some modern Puritans of Boston are urging the passage of of a bill limiting courtship to two years, and our own Indiana solons in 1913 have regulated the length of sheets and the laundering of pillow cases in hotels and lodging houses, all because, no doubt, a rural member slept over night in a cheap hotel. It has been well said that legislation should not keep too far in advance of public opinion.

Many persons charged with crimes escape punishment because so-called good citizens sitting as jurors, refuse to convict when they should convict. The laws, thus, are unenforced. Too many times corrupt jurors are selected by corrupt officials. These so-called good citizens have no respect for the law. Through sympathy, business relations, cowardice, or corruption they free the criminal. It is the certainty of punishment that deters the possible criminal. There is apparently more respect for federal laws than for state laws, and this is largely traceable to the feeling that there is more certainty of enforcement of the former and of punishment. Actual results seem to justify this feeling.

"Good" Citizen Partnership With Crime.

The so-called good citizen is ofttimes too timid to testify. He does not want to incur the displeasure of the offender. He does not want to lose the time from his business. He has no appreciation of the duties of citizenship. He wants the benefits without the burdens. But if his purse is stolen he wants the whole of society to come to his aid. His conduct stimulates rather than retards crime.

In most communities, gaming, prostitution and violations of the liquor laws are conceded to be pernicious and destructive of the morals of the citizens, as well as economically wrong. Again, the nonenforcement of these laws may be traced, in part, to our so-called good citizens.

These crimes against society are carried on clandestinely, under cover and not in the open. These criminals, as a rule, do not own the houses in which the unlawful business is carried on. Too often these houses and places of business are owned by our "reputable church-going citizens." Sometimes the conscience of such an one cries out, but the physical man suppresses this "mutiny in embryo" with the death-dealing logic that "if he does not rent, some one else will;" "that it is bound to go on, and taxes are so high and he must have a return on his investment."

So he goes into partnership with crime, and then the "other good citizens" do not want to make a fight against a member of the brotherhood, so they are ignorant before the grand jury and exceedingly merciful as trial jurors.

There is an inherent repugnance to crimes of the character just mentioned The majority of the people are opposed to them. They are in favor of their suppression. Why, then, is there such laxity in the enforcement of the laws forbidding them?

One direct cause is with the officers charged with the execution of the laws. Too often they themselves have no respect for the law and too often they are corrupt.

Too Much Party Politics.

While nonenforcement of the law may be traced to lawless and corrupt officials, an indirect cause, but most effective in its operations, is the present method and conditions which influence their selection.

Too much politics, too little citizenship, we are governed by political parties. This division into parties is supposed to rest on great economic principles.

Now the congress makes laws for the nation. The state and common council for the community. The laws affecting the community, the penal laws, must be executed by officers selected from the community.

No national question, so far as the execution of local laws is concerned, is involved. And yet in nearly 90 per cent of our cities and towns national politics dominates the selection of our local officers.

It is necessary, say the politicians, that that be so to maintain the solidarity of the party. So democrat, republican or progressive mayors, council, marshals and police are selected instead of citizen mayors, councilmen, marshals and police. What is the result? Criminals and law violators generally have no politics. They want protection or rather license to do as they please. The parties want power and the officers. The alliance is formed and the result is official blindness and a consequent lax or nonenforcement of law.

Abuse of Pardoning Power.

Another contributing cause to unenforced laws is the abuse or attempted abuse of the pardoning power. The criminal is brought to trial, found guilty, sentence pronounced and he enters the prison. No question of guilt. The law has been broken. Behold, "good citizens," with their ready pens, signing petitions for pardon. Jurors, too, who admit it was their duty to convict, but they can not stick to their duty.

Because others equally guilty in their opinion have not been brought to punishment, a perverted sense of what is just and right moves them to sign. How illogical, to say, the least, is their reasoning. Better for a community to have more criminals than fewer is the natural sequence of such argument.

The "suspended sentence" judge performs his part in marring the majesty of the law. He is too easily moved by the persuasive eloquence of counsel for the defense, as he extols the beauty of reform, or he is moved to compassion for unfortunate bondsmen, who may be made destitute, unless the confessed criminal be permitted to make restitution for the consideration of a "suspended sentence." The judge on the bench, no less than the man on the street, must learn that the crime is against society.

I have spoken of those who make laws, of those who are subject to the laws, and of those charged with the enforcement of the laws, and the part each contributes toward increasing or diminishing respect for the law.

Lawyers Must Change Their Ways.

Of each of these classes the lawyer is a member, for as a legislator he helps to make the laws; as citizen, he is charged with obedience to the laws, as an officer of the court, he assists in the administration of the law.

Large are his opportunities for service, and grave his responsibility of service, in educating his fellow-citizens in that due respect for the law, so vital to the preservation of government.

If our profession is to lead, as it should, in this fight for a higher respect for the law, it must be inspired somewhat with the fervor of the psalmist, "whose delight was in the law of the Lord, and in His law did he meditate day and night." Our judges must have clearness of vision to know the law and the moral courage to declare it. Lawyers must learn that the fee does not make the law, nor should it be permitted to unbalance the scales of justice.

WILSON AND GERMANS.

Said to Be Determined to Prevent His Re-election to the Presidency.

Under date of July 7 the following letter was printed in the Chicago Tribune.

Editor of the Tribune We note your editorial in regard to the Teutonic Sons of America. We ordinarily pay no attention to outbursts of this nature, considering them commonly as newspaper talk induced by the boiling of Scotch or English blood, as the case may be, or else the raving of otherwise well meaning but ill informed individuals. In this instance we feel that it is only just to make an exception on account of your spasmodic efforts to once in a while raise your voice in a true American spirit in behalf of fair play in our relations to the warring nations. We are, however, compelled to inform you that the opinions as expressed in the editorial are hasty and unjust conclusions, which we believe is due to the fact that you are incorrectly informed both as to the character and the purpose of this order. We are confident that the T. S. of A. represent correctly the general sentiment of the great Teutonic electorate of the United States of America past and present, the sons of thousands and hundreds of thousands who fought, bled and died in order to create and perpetuate the United States of America and its independence, and we, the sons of the Teutonic Americans of old, are of the same character. We are as strongly opposed to foreign alliances and entanglements and to English domination of our government today as they were in times gone by, and we are as determined to retire Woodrow Wilson next year as our forefathers were who retired James Buchanan when a condition (in 1860) similar to that of today existed, which resulted in the election of Abraham Lincoln, who was a genuine American, who knew and appreciated the character of the naturalized citizen, and who, with the unanimous support of them, straightway proceeded to forcefully instruct the greater part of American natives (the confederates, the Boston broadcloth rioters) what it meant to be a real loyal American.

The great purpose of our order is to aid and assist each other to spread the gospel of American freedom, independence, and justice, and to uphold the dignity and well being of the United States of America, which we believe can best be done at this time by making elaborate preparations to make sure of the retirement next year of our union business manager, Woodrow Wilson, together with his internal and external policies, for the simple reason that he has shown himself incompetent to run our business—the business of the United States government—in a wise, just and successful way. We as stockholders of this union enterprise object to this kind of management, and we will not tolerate such a manager any longer than what the contract of four years provides for.

We know that the Teutonic element of America can be relied upon to defend our country against any attack from any foreign country, whether we are right or wrong, but we also know that they can never be counted upon to support the dangerous, unjust, aggressive, English friendly and German hostile Wilson policy which we believe could serve no other purpose but that of trying to prevent the defeat of our traditional defamer—John Bull.

We fervently pray that the innumerable souls of those who met untimely death on our American soil on account of English perfidy will rise and inspire all through America to check this mad and unholy rush manifested by our government which leads us into such paths against which we are warned by the shades of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln and every patriotic American that ever lived, and may the Lord give you more light also.

Dr. Ernst Jentzsch.
Director on Supreme Council Teutonic Sons of America.

Troop Horses' Burdens.

From London Tit-Bits.

Cavalry is playing an unexpectedly large part in the war, and the weight carried by cavalry horses in the various armies is of interest. Our cavalry is armed with the short Lee-Enfield rifle, the magazine of which holds 10 rounds; the sword, which is carried by all ranks except signalers, and the revolver, carried by warrant officers, staff sergeants, sergeants, trumpeters and drivers. Each trooper carries 100 rounds of ammunition in a bandolier over the left shoulder. Lancer regiments carry the lance. Altogether the British troop horse carries about 20 stone.

The Cossack pony carries about 17 stone. The average weight carried by the Indian troop horse when ready for war is about 19 stone. The Austrian "troopers" carry a weight of between 21 and 22 stone, and the average in the French and German armies is about the same.

Hard Work.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"I should think you would work instead of begging for your living."

"I do, mum."

"You, do? Then why are you asking me for money?"

"That's my profession, mum. But if you knew how hard it is to pry a dime out of some folks you'd never accuse me of not working."

RELATIONS BETWEEN MAN AND WEATHER

John Burroughs, "Locusts and Wild Honey"; Boston, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1907.

I suspect that like most countrymen, I was born with a chronic anxiety about the weather. Is it going to rain or snow, be hot or cold, wet or dry? are inquiries upon which I would fain get the views of every man I meet, and I find that most men are fired with the same desire to get my views upon the same set of subjects. To a country man the weather means something—to a farmer especially. The farmer has sowed and planted, and reaped and vended, nothing but weather all his life. The weather must lift the mortgage on his farm and pay his taxes and feed and clothe his family. Of what use is his labor unless seconded by the weather? Hence there is speculation in his eye whenever he looks at the clouds or the moon, or the sunset, or the stars; for even the milky way, in his view, may point the direction of the wind tomorrow, and hence is closely related to the price of butter. He may not take the sage's advice to "hitch his wagon to a star," but he pins his hopes to the moon and plants and sows by its phases.

Then the weather is that phase of Nature in which it appears not the immutable fate we are so wont to regard it, but on the contrary something quite human and changeable, not to say womanish—a creature of moods, of caprices, of cross purposes; gloomy and downcast today, and all light and joy tomorrow, caressing and tender one moment, and severe and frigid the next; one day iron, the next day vapor; inconsistent, inconstant, incalculable; full of genius, full of folly, full of extremes; to be read and understood, not by rule, but by subtle signs and indirections—by a look, a glance, a presence, as we read and understand a man or woman. Some days are like a rare poetic mood. There is a felicity and an exhilaration about them from morning till night. They are positive and fill one with celestial fire. Other days are negative, and drain one of his electricity.

What a creature of habit, too. Nature is as she appears in the weather! If she miscarry once she will twice or thrice and a dozen times. In a wet time it rains today because it rained yesterday, and will rain tomorrow because it rained today. Are the crops in any part of the country drowning? They shall continue to drown. Are they burning up? They shall continue to burn. The elements get in a rut and can't get out without a knock. I know a farmer who in a dry time, when the clouds gather and look threatening, gets out his watering pot, because, he says, "it won't rain, and 'tis an excellent time to apply the water." Of course there comes a time when the farmer is wrong, but he is right four times out of five.

The rain means relaxation; the tension in Nature and in all her creatures is lessened. The trees droop their leaves or let go their ripened fruit. The tree itself will fall on a still damp day, when but yesterday it withstood a gale of wind. A moist south wind penetrates even the mind and makes its grasp less tenacious. It ought to take less to kill a man on a rainy day than on a clear. The direct support of the sun is withdrawn; life is under a cloud; a masculine mood gives place to something like a feminine. In this sense rain is the grief, the weeping of Nature, the relief of a burdened or agonized heart. But tears from Nature's eyelids are always remedial and prepare the way for brighter, purer skies.

I think rain is as necessary to the mind as to vegetation. Who does not suffer in his spirit in a drought and feel restless and unsatisfied. My very thoughts become thirsty and crave the moisture. It is hard work to be generous or neighborly, or patriotic in a dry time, and as for growing in any of the finer graces or virtues, who can do it? One's very manhood shrinks, and if he is ever capable of a mean act or of narrow views it is then.

From a Trolley Window.

From the Dayton News.

Artificial life has so surrounded most of us that we do not realize the sweetness of the smell of field and woods. This is a time of year when it will be good for the tired body and mind to refresh memory and revive fainting spirit by drinking in the breath of nature. It expands the lungs, clears the vision, warms the heart, renews the whole man.

The interurban car will afford the greatest number of sensations in the shortest possible time No sooner are you outside the city's soot and dust than the body is bathed within and without by the fresh air of heaven, bearing on its wings the sweet smells of earth

Through the open window there rushes the odor of new-mown hay, redolent of boyhood in the meadow, the haymow A moment later there is the heavy sweetness of clover blossoms. There is a rush down a hillside, and before the eye catches sight of the clear brook there is a whiff of spearmint, with memories of barefoot days by the spring, the swimming hole, the sapling fishpole

Past a bottom pasture you fly, the scent of the wild roses in your nostrils, reminiscent of dewy June mornings long gone. There is the dank smell of the corn field, the indefinable scent of the ripening wheat, perhaps an intoxicating breath of the zephyr that has collected fragrance from the wild grape

The suggestive power of smell is wonderful. How it sets the memory working, how it stimulates thought of other days. How it brings to mind figures of friends out of mind, whetting the recollection of those we loved, and love still, though they have been years beyond our sight.

There is inspiration, too, in the quickened emotions, urge for better work, resolution for better living A trolley trip at intervals through the summer doeth good like a medicine. Only let it be undertaken with some forethought, with some degree of seriousness and once in a while it is best to go alone. By refusing to be drawn by discussion or badinage back into the maelstrom of city activities, the mind is loosed from more sordid moorings, is free to ramble in the fields of the past, or to project itself into the realm of dreams.

Indians In the United States.

From Commerce Reports.

A much lower rate of growth for the Indian population than for the white; an increasing admixture of white blood; decreasing vitality of full-blood Indians, indicating a tendency to disappear altogether, increasing attendance at school and decreasing illiteracy; an increase in the percentage of the self-supporting; a decrease in the number of reservation Indians—these are some of the salient facts as set forth in the special report on the Indian population of the United States and Alaska, soon to be issued by the bureau of the census, department of commerce, which will send free copies on application This report brings together all the principal statistics relating to the Indian population which were collected at the last census.

The Indian population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska and the insular possessions, in 1910 was 265,683, representing an increase of 17,430, or 7 per cent, over the number reported in 1890, when the census bureau made its first enumeration of Indians. Thus at the last census the only Americans whose native ancestry extends further back than a century or two—or three at the utmost—constituted less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of the entire population of the country.

The occupations in which Indians are engaged are diversified in character, ranging all the way from unskilled labor to some of the highest proprietary, official, professional, and skilled pursuits. Among the Indian population are found manufacturers, bankers, United States officials, mechanical engineers, locomotive engineers, telegraph operators, actors, artists, clergymen, college professors, physicians, surgeons and lawyers. The great mass of the Indian workers in the United States, however, are engaged in a comparatively small number of occupations. In fact, 85.4 per cent of the total number of gainfully employed Indians were found in seven occupation groups: Agricultural laborers, 35.5 per cent; farmers and stock raisers, 29.2 per cent; lumbermen, raftsmen, and woodchoppers, 2.4 per cent; laborers in manufacturing and transportation, 6.3 per cent; basket makers and weavers, 7.4 per cent; launderers and laundresses, 1.9 per cent; and servants and waiters, 2.6 per cent.

Canada has 35 brush and broom factories, employing 637 persons. The annual output is valued at $1,731,523.

Johnny Made Good.

In instructing a youthful class in mathematics the pretty young teacher turned to Johnny Jones

"Johnny," she remarked, "please tell me what an average is?"

"Yes, ma'am," was the prompt response of Johnny, "an average is what a hen lays eggs on"

"What?" exclaimed the astonished teacher. "What on earth are you talking about?"

"That's right, Miss Mary," was the rejoinder of Johnny "Mother's lesson in our 'rithmetic states that a hen lays two eggs a day on the average!'"—Philadelphia Telegraph.

"You studied astronomy at college, did you not, Mr Saphead" asked the sweet young thing.

"Oh, yes indeed, and a very interesting study it is"

"Won't you please tell me the name of that bright star over the church above the spire of the Presbyterian church?"

"Let me see," said Saphead, "er—er—wait a minute now, I must be—the fact is, Miss I'm afraid I'm not up on the schedule."

A Great Musician.

Two Lancashire boys were boasting on the relative merits of their fathers as musicians.

"My father is the greatest musician in the town," said one.

"Oh!" the other said. "When my father starts his music everybody stops work."

"How's that?" said the other. "What does he do?"

"He blows the whistle for the men at the mill."

Family Headgear.

"Where's my last year's hat?" asked the man of the house.

"Why, I didn't think you'd want it, so I made it over for Jennie," apologized his wife.

"You did, eh? Well, what's the matter with making over Jennie's last year's leghorn for me?"

Mother's Little Joke.

The young people in their set wore flannels and white shoes when playing the tennis court, and the host of the house was in the library trying to read, but the noise was very annoying.

"What's the matter out there?" he asked his wife.

"Nothing much," she replied, "only a tennis racket."

"What are you studying now?" asked Mrs. Johnson.

"We have taken up the study of molecules," answered her son.

"I hope you will be very careful and practice constantly," said his mother. "I tried to get your father to wear one, but he could not get it in his eye."

any harm has come to Mary, I'll kill. Yes, Mr. Adam, I'll kill!" he repeated over and over again.

"I'm not saying Mary did a wise thing in running away like this," admitted Adam. "It has caused a lot of talk—you know the kind of women there are in Corinth They're bound to say nasty things. But she would do it. The only decent thing Jack Payson could do was to see her through with it. He loves her He couldn't do anything else."

Eric shut his paws with a snap. "She's got me to reckon with," he grated. "She'll come back to Corinth, or I'll know the reason why"

"She'll come back if you insist, but I wouldn't insist too vigorously, if I were you," was Adam's sententious advice.

The next morning, after having listened for an hour or more to the bitter declamations of his uncle and aunt, Eric left the breakfast table to redeem his promise to Joan He had promised to call her up on the telephone the instant he arrived in Corinth. Other distracting events had put this tender obligation out of his thoughts. A servant in the Bright home informed him that Miss Joan was out of town and would not return until the end of the following week He was annoyed and puzzled by this extraordinary piece of news Joan, in her last letter, had said she would be fairly hanging over the phone, waiting to hear his dear voice

His appointment with John Payson was for 11 o'clock Adam Carr had arranged it, apparently without consulting the New Yorker

Eric had been at once struck by the changes in his uncle and aunt They were white of hair, grey of face, and more than ordinarily smileless. Signs of deep suffering lay in their eyes. Heavy lines marked the gaunt, ascetic face of his uncle, his shoulders drooped far more than his rigid, upright figure might have suggested He looked a man of 75, instead of 63 or 64 Mrs. Blagden's hair was perfectly white. A strange, sad sweetness—the reflection of far off girlhood's gentleness—had come into her face. Her voice was soft and charged with a curiously vibrant note, altogether unfamiliar to Eric, whose strongest recollection was of sharp, incisive tones that bore no relation to love.

She moved with a certain listnessness, and yet there was ever the underlying suggestion of alertness, of eagerness. He observed that she never passed the grim old hall clock without glancing at its face, for an instant her manner suggested the attitude of one listening—just a flitting impression—as if she were trying to catch a sound not distinguishable to other ears Her somber black dress bore no touch of color save the ivory cross that hung suspended from her neck at the end of a string of heavy jet beads

He had told them that he did not hold them responsible for the step Mary had taken, and they seemed grateful. Something in the manner of these uncompromising natures gave him to understand that they had softened, at least toward him, that the steel edge had worn away, that wistful, hungry hearts were being laid bare that he might see them plainly and forget not to touch them gently

"I shall bring her back, Aunt Rena," he had said.

"She will be welcome, Eric," said his aunt, and he was surprised by the simple appeal that went with the words. "We acted as we thought best. If we were wrong—well, we cannot always be right, try as we may"

"They tell me that Joan is away from home," he said, on his return from the telephone.

His uncle was standing at the window, looking out over the wet lawn, a gaunt, frail figure, poignant with reserve.

"Sallonsby? You don't mean the Sallonsbys, of Boston?"

"Paul Sallonsby I think you knew him at Cambridge. He has come into a fortune. His father died a year and a half ago, leaving $2,000,000 and over to each of his children. Paul has been seeing a great deal of Joan, I hear He has taken a party to the West Indies."

"They left last week," added Mrs. Blagden. "His yacht was in the harbor here for two days"

Eric was dazed He could hardly believe his ears. Joan had not mentioned young Sallonsby in any of her letters, nor had she spoken of a contemplated cruise It was more than strange that she should go away at the very time he was expected home A dull pain assailed him What did it mean? Was it possible—but no! She could not be anything but constant He could swear by the pure light in her eyes. And yet, she had gone away

Vaguely dismayed—in addition to the depression that was already upon him,—he wandered up and down the hall, through the dim parlor and sitting room, torn by many emotions The prim rooms, so unlike those to which he had become accustomed in Paris and elsewhere, seemed to be narrower, more confined than before he went away They appeared to shrink in size, even as he stood in them, the walls drawing closer about him, the ceiling coming down as if driven by a great, slow-moving press. An atmosphere of oppressiveness surrounded him. All the brightness seemed to have been swept out of life. Something dead pervaded the house, from top to bottom.

The same damask sofas and chairs stood in their accustomed places in the parlor. The brussels carpet, with the big, well-remembered pattern, lay beneath his feet, as new as the day it was first put down, 25 years ago. The old portraits and oil paintings still hung suspended by silken picture cords, relics of an obsolete grandeur Over by the window which looked out upon the front yard and the street at the bottom of the knoll stood a chair that somehow was out of place in his memory. It was drawn up close to the side of the window, and faced the light though screened from outer view by the heavy, immaculate lace curtains that always had been there.

Immaculate? He crossed over, struck by an unusual aspect. One of the curtains hung straight and prim, but the other, next to the chair, was slightly crumpled, even soiled along the inner edge.

A careful hand had been drawing it aside for years! Every day someone had sat in that chair, peering between the curtains—looking for someone who never came.

The well-remembered scent of a perfume affected by his aunt in deference to her distant New York incarnation, came faintly to his nostrils as he leaned over the chair How many times had she drawn that curtain aside to look down into the winding, tree-lined street?

He turned away with a shudder, and left the room, hurrying out upon the drenched lawn, where the leaves of the preceding autumn still lay dank and brown beneath stark and leafless trees to which the breath of spring had not yet come. He stopped at the lower gate to look back at the grey house he had left

How small and insignificant it was, and how desolate! The Giant's Castle! He had a sudden feeling of pity for it. It represented all that was big in Corinth, and yet how it had shrunk since he had last looked upon it.

And it was still called the Giant's Castle by imaginative small folk, and it was a dreadful place where ogres lived'

"I don't wonder that Mary left it," he said half aloud, the bleakness of the view wringing the confession from his soul

He was half an hour ahead of time at Jabez Carr's cottage. The old man, as dry and shriveled as a butternut "hull" greeted him with great joy and a new garrulousness that proclaimed his 80 odd years in a way pitifully plain The old man was not long in getting to the subject that pleased him best to discuss—the great religious upheaval in Corinth's First Congregational church He had views on the subject and he vented them with many a joyous cackle Jabez had not been inside the doors of a church in 60 years, and he had no settled ideas as to religion aside from a vague recognition of the Holy Trinity yet to have heard him on this wet March morning as he sat close upon the little stove in his cottage you might have thought that the burden of all Christianity rested upon his shoulders

Eric sat by the tiny window watching the lane At last he started up and his eyes narrowed Adam Carr had he been present would have noted the sudden clenching of his hands and the squaring of the jaw

John Payson was coming through the gate a strong well put up figure of a man trimly dressed and brisk

Ignoring Jabez who was in the midst of an eloquent appeal to God to witness his absolute lack of prejudice in the Blagden Presbrey controversy Midthorne flung open the door and strode out into the open He wanted to meet his man where it was wide and free

Payson came on his eyes expressing recognition, but not the faintest sign of confidence.

Eric stopped short and was staring hard at the face of the newcomer, fascinated by what he saw there For weeks he had been trying to recall something he had overlooked in John Payson's features Now the thing he had always missed recognizing forced itself upon him with such a positive clearness that he was shocked beyond expression

The clean cut, aggressive face of the young man was singularly like that of Adam Carr with the distinction that it was not so coarsely moulded, and far from sinister The grey eyes were set far back in the head and the cheek bones were high and broad, as in the case of Adam Carr The lower part of the face was not so broad nor so resolute, but still there was a singular resemblance to the jaw and the chin of the detective Payson's countenance was frank and open, full of power and virility while Adam's was heavy expressionless, almost sphinxlike in its immobility The resemblance, startling as it was ended with the face The younger man was tall supple, graceful, Adam was stocky Samsonian

Eric had not seen the ex-teller in five or six years but he was able, in this instant, to call up vague, haunting impressions that had always puzzled him when he met him face to face He had never known him well. Payson was older than he by half a dozen years

Observing the peculiar look in Midthorne's eyes, Payson stopped when some six or eight paces away His own narrowed slightly

"Am I an object of curiosity to you, Mr Midthorne?" he asked quietly Eric started The tone, the absence of inflection, the very manner of putting the question was so familiar to him that he experienced the actual sensation of awe

"Yes," he replied levelly, "an object of great curiosity"

"Perhaps, animosity?"

"Yes, distinctly so."

Payson came forward I am sincerely sorry for that, Eric. I hope to overcome that feeling May I ask why this aversion?"

Eric surveyed him coldly "I don't believe it is necessary for me to answer that question"

"Permit me to disagree with you. If I have done anything to deserve your harsh opinion of me, I desire to know what it is and where I stand before taking up the question that means so much to both of us."

"We can settle that, Mr Payson, without exchanging confidences," said Eric, white to the lips. "You have acted like an infernal scoundrel in enticing my—"

"Pardon me" interrupted the other "I did not come to insult you nor to be insulted by you Scoundrel is a hard word I will not ask you to recall it now, but I'll expect you to do it some day You—"

"Has Adam Carr told you what I intend to do to you if you do not keep away from my sister?" demanded Eric hotly, ignoring the taunt.

Von Jagow Enamored of Lies.

From the Philadelphia Ledger

Having by endless repetitions of the "American shell and munitions" lie fired the German heart into a fury of rage over "perfidious America," having also added oil to this fury by using the perjuries of Stahl, the Lusitania affidavit maker, in a state paper and circulating them as gospel truth all over Germany, the German foreign office has reached the very climax of absurdity in officially protesting to Ambassador Gerard against the export of "poison shells" by the Cleveland Automatic Machine company This "poison shell" canard has been exploded again and again. Its circulation over here does no credit to the minds or the hearts of the hyphenated Americans who are still giving it currency. Yet months after the fact has been established that the Cleveland company does not manufacture shells of any kind, to say nothing of poisonous ones, that it simply exported metal turning machines before the war, its largest foreign customer being the Krupp works, and that it has not since the war began sent any of its machines abroad, the German foreign office categorically accepts the old canard as true. Evidently the motive of Von Jagow is that a lie well stuck to is just as good as the truth and, in war, more useful.

A Senator's Mail.

In the American Magazine a United States senator writes an extremely amusing article entitled "A Senator's Mail." In the course of the article he publishes a number of these remarkable letters, one of which follows:

"I need a pension, but the department won't give me one. I was engaged to be married in 1862. The man went away to war, and I married him after the war. He died in 1885, and two years later I married a man who had just come from England, and he died last winter. The department won't give me a pension on account of my first husband, because they say I wasn't his wife during the war. I was engaged to him, and considered that I belonged to him during the war just as much as though I had been his wife. If I had more pull, I know they would have given me a pension."

One Way to Lengthen Life

Late in life, when the organs begin to weaken, the hard-working kidneys often tire out first. Failing eyesight, stiff, achy joints, rheumatic pains, lame back and distressing urination are often due only to weak kidneys. Prevention is the best cure and at middle age any sign of kidney weakness should have prompt attention. Doan's Kidney Pills have made life more comfortable for thousands of old folks. It is the best recommended special kidney remedy.

Marriage Service as Conducted by Missionary Was Binding If It Was Not Lengthy.

Rev R R. Dodge is a missionary at Maui, one of the Hawaiian group of islands He is a most resourceful man in his dealings with his charges, as his part in the following incident serves to show:

Recently a Japanese couple came to Mr. Dodge with a request in sign language. They could not talk English understandingly, and Mr. Dodge could not talk Japanese, so he conducted the ceremony as follows:

"You like this wahine?"

"Yes."

"Bimeby no kickout?"

"No"

"You like this kane?" (To the woman)

"Yes"

"Bimeby no kickout?"

"No"

"Pule."

"Pau" And the ceremony ended.

"Wahine" is Hawaiian for woman, "kane" for man, "pule" for pray, and "pau" for enough.—Kohala Midget (Maui).

NOT MUCH OF A PROBLEM

Lawyer's Statement of Case That Won Immediate Acquittal for His Fortunate Client.

A famous lawyer had a client named Murphy who had been arrested for illegal sale of liquor The police had no evidence but one pint of whisky, which they found in his house when they searched it. In court this evidence was produced, and a somewhat vivid claim of prima facie evidence of guilt was made by the prosecuting attorney.

During all this, counsel for the prisoner was silent. When his turn came for the defense, he rose and said: "Patrick Murphy, stand up." And Murphy, with a big red nose, unshaven face, bleared eyes and a general appearance of dilapidation, rose.

"Patrick Murphy, look upon the jury; gentlemen of the jury, look on Patrick Murphy"

Jury and prisoner mutually complied.

The counsel gazed at Patrick for a moment, then solemnly turned to the jury

"Do you mean to say to this court and me you honorably and truly believe that Patrick Murphy, if he had a pint of whisky, would sell it?"

Murphy was acquitted

Kitty, in Her Own Language, Testified to the Generosity of the Mayo Brothers.

An Indianapolis woman who recently returned from Rochester, Minn, where she was taking treatment of the Mayo brothers, tells the following story of a farmer who was visiting in the city·

"And this park was given to the city by the Mayos!" he exclaimed.

"And the Mayos gave this library to the city, and this church was built by the Mayos, and the money for this school was contributed by the Mayos," informed his host, as they sped about the city seeing the sights.

"Well, that is wonderful," said the farmer. "They certainly have made Rochester Here comes a cat, I suppose that belongs to the Mayos, too. Let's stop and ask it."

"Say, Kitty, who do you belong to?"

"Me-ow," replied the cat.—Indianapolis News.

Hunting Trouble.

When a man just naturally wants trouble it is mighty easy to find an excuse for making it. According to Mike Hogan, Casey and O'Brien were having an argument of their own at Breckenridge street and Barrett avenue. It had progressed to the extent that each had forgotten what it was about originally, and they were wholly oblivious of the gathering crowd until an urbane and genteel person in a frock coat put in.

"Come, come, my man," he said, gently plucking Casey by the sleeve. "You don't want to fight; I can tell it by your looks. Your face is too benign—"

"Two be nine! Two be nine, is ut, ye scut?" bellowed Casey "Me face is two be nine, is ut?"

And there was where the real trouble began.—Louisville Times.

Economy.

"It pays to buy a good straw hat. Look at the one I'm wearing I paid $15 for it last summer."

"Yes?"

"And all it cost me to have it cleaned and blocked over into this year's style was five dollars."

And That's All.

"Van Lushe says he can take a drink or let it alone."

"Well, I've often seen him prove the first half of that statement."

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE STATE OF IOWA, IN AND FOR HANCOCK COUNTY, OCTOBER TERM 1915

ORIGINAL NOTICE

R. C. Plummer and R. T. Norvet, Plaintiffs,

vs

Daniel D. Mather; Geo. B. Matteson; Julia Rhodes; Henry Leamer; Mrs. Henry Leamer; Joel Matteson; Polly Ann Matteson; Harriet Hall; Egbart A. Matteson; George B. Matteson; Thomas L. Walsh; Margaret Walsh; Patrick Walsh; Eugenia Walsh; Isabella Walsh; Martin Walsh; Annie Walsh; Margaret Thyne; Johana Sheehan; and all the unknown wives, husbands, heirs, and devisees of, or claimants under the above named defendants, or any of them; and all the unknown claimants of the South-west Quarter (SW¼), of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P. M. Hancock County, Iowa, Defendants.

TO THE ABOVE NAMED DEFENDANTS, and to the unknown claimants of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼); all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P M., Hancock County, Iowa:

You and each of you are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiffs in the above entitled cause is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court in and for Hancock County, Iowa, claiming that plaintiffs are the owners in fee simple of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P M, Hancock County, Iowa.

That the plaintiffs and their grantors have been in open, notorious, adverse and undisputed possession of the above described premises for more than twenty years under color of title and claim of right. That the defendants, and unknown claimants to the said land, have no right or title in and to the said premises.

That the claims, interest or title of the defendants are based upon the following facts and derived in the following manner:

(a) Daniel D. Mather acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96) Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book D, page 603, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa. There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Daniel D Mather or from his spouse or heirs, and by virtue of which fact the said Daniel D Mather or his unknown spouse or unknown heirs would have an apparent interest in the land above described

(b) Geo B Matteson acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) and the North Half (N½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), Section Five (5) Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed dated December 15, 1875, recorded in Book 2, page 271, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Geo. B. Matteson or his wife or heirs, and because of which fact the said Geo. B. Matteson, or his unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said land

(c) Tax deeds were issued by the Treasurer of Hancock County, Iowa, to Henry Leamer covering part of the above described premises The tax deeds were recorded in Book A, page 183 and 185, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa. The land was conveyed to said Henry Leamer in trust for Julia Rhodes and children. There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Julia Rhodes or her children and because of which fact the said Julia Rhodes or her unknown spouse or unknown heirs or children would have an interest in and to the said land.

(d) A mortgage was given covering the above described premises by James M. Elder to Henry Leamer, recorded in Book A, page 322. There is no release of the above described mortgage executed by the said Henry Lemaer, and he or his unknown heirs might have some interest in and to the said premises by virtue thereof.

(e) Henry Leamer, the grantee in the tax deeds referred to in Paragraph (c), conveyed the land to James M. Elder by deed recorded in Book F, page 222, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but the wife of Henry Leamer did not join therein and because of which she or her unknown heirs might have some interest in the land.

(f) Joel Matteson acquired title to the South Half (S½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book 2, page 270, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Joel Matteson or his spouse or heirs and because of which he or his unknown wife or heirs may have an interest in and to the said land.

(g) Polly Ann Matteson, Harriet Hall, Egbart A. Matteson and George B. Matteson appear from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, to have been the heirs of Joel Matteson who had title to the South Half (S½), of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), but there is no conveyance of record either from the said Joel Matteson or from any of his heirs as above named or from their unknown heirs, and because of which they or their unknown heirs may have some interest, right, or title in and to the said premises.

(h) Thomas L. Walsh acquired title to the premises described in Paragraph (b) above, by conveyance recorded in Book A, page 295, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, and it appears from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, Will Record 2, page 41, that he died leaving Margaret Walsh, Patrick Walsh, Eugenia Walsh, Isabella Walsh, Martin Walsh, Margaret Thyne, Johana Sheehan, and Annie Walsh, as his heirs at law and that by virtue of the fact that there are no conveyances of record from them they and their unknown spouses or unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said premises.

(i) That among the said defendants there may have been or may be at this time some minor heirs or others under legal disability who may claim an interest in and to the above described premises by or through some of the defendants, known or unknown, the exact character of which claim and the names of said minor claimants these plaintiffs are unable to state.

That plaintiffs have sought diligently to learn the names and residences of all of the said defendants, and unknown claimants, without success

That the claims of said defendants create a cloud on plaintiffs' title, and plaintiffs ask that their title and estate in said premises be established against the adverse claims of all of said defendants. That the cloud created by the apparent claims be removed. That plaintiffs be decreed to be the absolute owners in fee simple of the said land That the defendants and all persons claiming by, through, or under them, or any of them, be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right, title or interest in and to the said premises. That plaintiffs' title be quieted, and that they be granted such other and further relief as may be equitable and necessary to establish their title in fee simple and for the costs of this action, and that unless you appear and defend before the second day of said term of Court, being the October term of said Court which convenes and will be held at the Court House in Garner Iowa beginning the 11th day of October, 1915, default will be entered against you and judgment and decree rendered thereon as provided by law

Dated at Forest City, Iowa, this 3rd. day of July 1915

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

Every week this paper,and every other paper in the country, has a number of errors—typographical and otherwise That's one of the reasons a good many people think the editor should have been a blacksmith. But what of the editor's viewpoint? If there's one thing better calculated to turn rosy youth to doddering old age than, for instance, to get death notices and weather predictions mixed so that the darned thing comes out in the paper "Mrs. William Williams died last night. She has gone where it is 116 degrees in the shade and with rising temperature to morrow," well—we'd like to know what it is. Maybe you think it pleasant to walk down the street and hear some grinning idiot with a head like a German pancake and a brain like an addled egg holding up the sheet to caustic criticism and the editor to consciousless scorn! Maybe you think it pleasant to hear some member of the vacum family remark that the editor must make up his paper with a shovel! Or some Pinhead Percy wonder why the editor doesn't learn how to set type! No, doubt you think it excruciatingly delicious when an item announcing that Miss Merry Merryville is to be led to the alter gets into the paper as "led by the halter!" Funny, isn't it? Yes, it is! It depends on the point of view. Some people may think a paralyzed man with the itch is the height of the ridiculous, but what does the paralyzed man think about it? We are apt to make mistakes. Don't forget that. What would think if we either put some of your adventures into the paper? Remember when ——— who shaved himself, came to church with a fine patch of whiskers on his chin which he had overlooked? And string on her switch hung down her when Miss ——— let the shoe leak? And how Elder ——— caught the tail of his long coat over the neck of the bottle in his hind pocket and went down the street showing that sometimes the strongest in faith are the weakest in flesh? But we have no intention of telling these things. As an editor we wouldn't be much of a hair pin if we were bent that way. Just remember, though, that we are all prone to errors, and the next time you see something in the paper which you regard as a sure sign of the editor's feeble mindedness, just say the devil did it, and by heck, we'll back you up.

FIFTY IOWA BOYS TO GET PRIZES FEEDING CALVES

Over $2,100.00 has been secured for prizes in the Iowa boys baby beef feeding contest now being promoted by the Iowa Beef Producers' Association in co-operation with the Extension Department of the College of Ames. The state champion in this contest will receive a $100.00 free trip to Washington, D. C. This prize is offered by the Union Stock Yards and Transit Co., of Chicago. In each of the first 50 counties where 50 or more entries are secured the first prize winner will get a free trip to the 1916 International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago. These prizes are offered by the Union Stock Yards and Transit Co., The Live Stock Exchange National Bank and the live stock commission firms of Clay Robinson & Co., Walters & Dunbar, Alexander, Ward & Conover and J M. Doud, all of Chicago. There are also two free trips to the International, offered by the Iowa Beef Producers' Association to be competed for by boys living in all the counties where less than 50 entries are secured. Any Iowa boy (or girl) over 10 and under 19 years of age, Jan. 1, 1915 may enter the contest. The contestant is to secure a calf that will be not more than 8 months old October 1, 1915 when the contest begins. It may be younger if desired. Pure bred calves intended for breeding purposes are barred; t being the purpose of this contest to include only calves fed for market beef. There are no other restrictions as to age, breed, sex, etc. The contestant will weigh the calf October 1, sending a weighing receipt signed by two disinterested parties to the State Leader. He will then feed and care for the calf until it is ready for market, keeping account of all feeds and a record of how the calf is fed. The basis of award will be rate of gain 40 per cent economy of gain 30 per cent and records kept and written report 30 per cent. The calf may be sold when ready for market and final reports submitted immediately after, but all records must be in the hands of the State Leader immediately after October 1, 1916, when the contest closes Suggestions and advice on the selection, care and feeding of the calf will be furnished all contestants, and all questions will be answered by Rex Beresford of the Iowa Beef Producers' Association, Ames, Iowa Every breeder of beef cattle should be interested in the contest and help get his own boys and the boys of the neighborhood entered with a good calf It will mean better beef production and a greater demand for good breeding cattle later Every boy interested should not only enter the contest early but should also get as many others interested in it as possible Remember that the first 50 counties sending in 50 entries get the chance at the 50 county prizes. Entries must be in by October 1, 1915.

Give your name to the county or send in entries or write for particulars to E. C. Bishop, Leader of Club Work, Ames, Iowa or to Rex Beresford, care Iowa Beef Producers' Association, Ames, Iowa.

AUTOMOBILE SHOW AT STATE FAIR

A feature of the Iowa State Fair Exposition this year which will interest pretty nearly everybody regardless of "race, color or previous condition of servitude" is the automobile show. Already space reservations have been made for exhibition purposes by every dealer in Des Moines and a number outside. This means that the show will include practically every make of auto that is manufactured in the entire country. Everything that is new or novel or late in auto building will be on exhibition. The man who is thinking of buying a car this spring or fall, possibly "after harvest or after picking," will find the show of special value in that it will afford him the kind of an opportunity to compare the various makes, one with another.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS AT STATE FAIR GROUNDS

Those of Iowa's citizens who make their pilgrimages to the State Fair Exposition this year will find many changes and improvements from year to year will find that the material progress has not been interfered with nor has it been idling by the wayside since the fair of 1914. The latest improvements that will meet the critical eye of the visitor who enters the grounds at the Rock Island gates is the new sheep pavilion, erected the past summer. It stands inside the grounds directly across Rock Island avenue from the swine pavilion and just south of the big horse barn. It is of the same general plan of architecture as the new swine pavilion and machinery hall, built of brick and steel, and is a material improvement to the southeast corner of the grounds.

A GREAT FAIR

The Iowa State Fair to be held in Des Moines Aug. 25 to Sept. 3 this year gives promise of being the greatest fair ever held in the state of Iowa. Effort has been made to increase the exhibits in the several departments and to make every department larger and thus more instructive than ever before and results are now being met with success on every hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Klucknohn and little daughter departed Thursday evening for Remington and other Indiana points for an extended visit with relatioes and friends. Miss Bieber, who has been here since last spring, trimming for Mrs. Josten and since then sewing, left with them for her home in Frankfort.

If the weather mah behaves as he should, shock threshing will commence here next week. For the benefit of our foreign readers we will say that this immediate locality at least will have one of the biggest and best oats crops ever harvested in Hancock county. A little old time summer and corn will not be so bad.

G. W. Dickinson of Wright, Minn., arrived last Thursday evening for a visit with his sister, Mrs. A. Kirkwood. Mr. Dickinson was a resident of Klemme a number of years ago but does not know the burg any more. "Dick" was the landlord of Ringsted's leading hotel practically all of the time the editor of this sheet lived there, and we have enjoyed many a chat of old times.

Don't forget to see Dr. Weber, the eye and ear doctor who cures on Thursday Aug. 12 forenoon at Hotel Victoria, in Garner. Examination free.

Marlin Croner and S. J. Kirkwood, who have been conducting the bowery will move it out to the Jerry Brennan place, three miles north and one mile west of Klemme, on account of high license and early cloring oadinance recently passed by the city council. A stand will also be run in connection so that those who wish refreshments will be able to get them. The first dance out there will be held on Friday evening, August 12th. Don't forget the date. Good order will be maintained and a good time will be in store for those who ettend.

Mr. and Mrs. William Lau went to Britt Saturday by auto for a visit at the home of their daughter, Mrs. W. H. C. Schubert, and on account of the rain were unable to return until Tuesday. "Bill" went over as just plain "Bill," but returned as grandfather, for on Sunday Mrs. Schubert became the proud mother of a baby boy. Mother and child are doing nicely and we believe that "Bill" will condescend to speak to common people in the course of a month or two. The young man promises to be well proportioned and already has arms like a blacksmith, so "Bill" says.

GOODELL

Dan Wenzel of Belmond, was a visitor here Friday.

Mrs. W. F. Beier and Mrs. George Hall were called to Garner Saturday by the serious illness of their nephew, Richard Clark. The little fellow is suffering from an attack of lung fever.

Miss Vida Houghton was a Garner visitor Friday.

John Reed returned from Wisconsin Tuesday, where he has been visiting relatives.

There will be a dance here Friday night, August 6. Music by a Clear Lake orchestra.

Mrs. John Savogue was a Belmond caller Wednesday.

EIGHTH GRADE EXAMINATIONS

August 13th and 14th

A special eighth grade examination will be held at the Court House in Garner, August 13th and 14th. This examination will be held for the benefit of those who wish to enter a high school this fall and who do not hold a certificate of admission.

Rours truly,
J. R. BAGGS;
County Superintendent.

SIGNALS FROM AIR CRAFT.

Soot Clouds, Mirror Flashes and Torch Bombs Are Used.

To an army commander the value of a military aeroplane is its power to locate hostile artillery and direct gunfire rather than its bomb dropping possibilities. Thus it is very necessary that a pilot several thousand feet in the air should be able to communicate with the headquarters staff on earth so that he may convey the necessary information for the guidance of gunners hurling shells at targets miles ahead which they cannot see.

A very ingenious method of signaling from an aeroplane is by means of soot clouds. An apparatus filled with lampblack rests near the hand of the aviator, and when he presses a lever some of this soot passes down a pipe and is discharged in a black cloud. The pipe is so delicately arranged that the clouds may be small or large. The operator can spell out the Morse telegraphic code in little clouds, and they can be read from the earth when the aviator is 4,000 feet high.

Another clever means of signaling from air craft is that carried out by means of lamps and mirrors. A lamp which has a flash of 10,000 candle power sends piercing rays of light through a tube fitted with powerful magnifying glasses. When a message is sent the operator directs his flashes in the required direction, presses a button, and a brilliant light flashes out, long or short, according to the pressure. The officers on earth receive the message and may send a reply in the same way, being provided with similar mirrors and lamps. The rays of light sent out are almost as bright as sunlight, so that they can be seen with the naked eye for a distance of four miles in the daytime and at night for a distance of eight miles.

When military aviators wish to drop a written communication to the earth without descending they utilize an ingenious bomb. This contains the document, and the projectile is weighted so that it falls sharp end first. As the end strikes the ground a trigger is released, which sets fire to a torch on top, and thus the location of the bomb is indicated day or night.—Pearson's Weekly.

The brick yard on the near future will not be dependent on clay, for it has been discovered that bricks may be made without clay. A great number of waste products are available, and a factory is being built in Illinois which will make use of the tailings of coal mines. The new process consists in chemically combining any coarse material containing silica with a binder of finely divided particles of silica, alumina, potassium, or sodium, in suitable proportions to insure a binder with a low fusing point as compared with the coarse body material. The bricks are molded under high pressure, preferably in a dry state and are fired in a manner similar to that used in making ordinary brick, but the time required is not nearly as long. Bricks made by this process have been tested and have shown very satisfactory absorption qualities, and have withstood a temperature of 2,900 degrees Fahrenheit without cracking or showing damage. They have undergone crushing tests of 20,600 pounds a square inch without failure

In the days when the buffalo was found in vast herds on the western plains there were Indians who, while riding at a gallop, could send an arrow through a buffalo's body. Remarkable as this archery was, it did not equal that reached by the archers of ancient times. It is of record that the MacRaes of Gairlock, Scotland, were such skilled archers that they could hit a man at the distance of 500 yards. In 1794 the Turkish ambassador at London shot an arrow in a field near that capital 415 yards against the wind. The secretary of the ambassador on hearing the expressions of surprise from the English gentlemen present, said the sultan had shot 500 yards. This was the greatest performance of modern days, but a pillar standing on a plain near Constantinople recorded shots ranging up to 800 yards. Sir Robert Ainslie, British ambassador to the sublime porte, records that in 1798 he was present when the sultan shot an arrow 972 yards.

In Paris the city pension fund was established in 1806, the employes contributing 5 per cent of their salaries and the city 10 per cent of its pay roll. In 1909 there were 20,515 employes, making up a total pay roll of 55,000,000 francs. There were 14,508 pensioners receiving 13,000,000 francs, or approximately 26 per cent of the pay roll. In other words, the average pension received by the city employes is 880 francs, or $176 per annum.

It is said that a French army surgeon has, with the aid of an extraordinary electro-magnet, recently performed several successful operations without the use of an anaesthetic. A casing of ferronickel surrounds the German cartridge and the electro-magnet simply draws them out of the wounded man's body, as well as splinters of shell.

The blue or sulphur bottom whale is one of the largest animals that has ever existed on earth. Although its mouth is so large that a dozen men can stand upright in it, its throat is only nine inches in diameter. Another curious thing about this enormous creature is that its diet consists chiefly of tiny crustaceans—shrimps three-quarters of an inch long.

BUSINESS KNOWLEDGE ELEMENT OF SUCCESS SAYS IOWA SENATOR

Cummins Tells Highland Park Students Avarice Is National Enemy.

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—That it is necessary for the entire citizenship of the country to have that training giving an exhaustive knowledge of industrial and commercial life, in order to grapple with the antagonistic forces of organized society of the present day, was argued by Senator Albert B. Cummins in his oration at the commencement of Highland Park college here last night.

He said that greater difficulties than ever before confront the government, which formerly was a police officer keeping the physical peace, but now is deep in problem of attempting to regulate and control business and to curb the excesses of avarice and selfishness and the power of large combinations of wealth. Then he emphasized that Americans must have, besides specialized knowledge of industrialism and commercialism, high ideals of justice and fairness, in order to properly participate in the government of this country.

The speech seemed supplemental to Senator Cummins' recent address at Pittsfield, Kan., in which he called attention to the great concentration of wealth in a small area in the far east, and the mass of population in the Mississippi valley and the west.

COUNTY PAYS TWICE FOR COURT HOUSE FURNITURE

Rockwell City, Ia., July 31.—The board of supervisors today ordered the county auditor to draw a warrant in favor of the Newton & Holt company, of Chicago, for $5,800, with interest and costs, in accordance with the judgment rendered in federal court in June. A warrant was formerly drawn for the amount and paid to an employe of the company, and the courts decided that the county was still held for the amount of the company's claim. The board also directed that suit be brought against the ex-county treasurer, who cashed the warrantand his bondsmen, to reimburse the county for the loss. The amount involved was due for furniture installed in the new court house.

ONLY TWO LEFT JAIL AT DENISON LAST NIGHT

Denison, Ia., July 31.—The two young men who robbed the store and postoffice at Astor about one week ago, and who confessed the deed, escaped from the jail at Denison this morning. They climbed the vent pipe extending from the water closet to the ceiling and through the roof. The men cut the ceiling into the attic and crossed over to a place in the roof where a chimney had once extended through, the hole being covered with sheet iron. This was torn aside and the outside gained. It was a far jump to the ground, so they brought up from the jail room below the rubber hose used in washing out the place, fastened it and slid down to liberty. The night watch was at the jail at 3:30 a. m., making an outside inspection and saw no signs of the doings of the men. There were 11 men in the jail, but only the postoffice robbers left.

CITY MAY SAY HOW LONG CAR MAY STAND AT CURB

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Police Judge Meyer upheld the validity of the Des Moines traffic ordinance in a case brought by Attorney A. D. Pugh. The question involved was as to whether or not the city could go so far as to say how long a man could leave his car standing at the curb. "The state law does not take from the cities the powers heretofore conferred in reference to the control of the streets and the free and unobstructed use thereof," says the decision.

TAKES ACID THROUGH ERROR; WOMAN IS DEAD

Council Bluffs, Ia., July 31.—Mrs. Mattie Hanson, 32, died at her home here last night as the result of accidentally swallowing carbolic acid. She had been sick, and it is stated bottles of medicine had been placed near the acid bottle. A husband and two children survive.

FARM HAND SWINDLER LEFT AUTO AT ALGONA

Mason City, Ia., July 31.—With the recovery of the automobile, it is possible that before very long the young man, giving his name as L. B. Boyd, will soon be under arrest. The automobile was located at Algona by a detective of the State Bankers' association and the same gentleman is following a clue by which he expects soon to locate the man. Boyd hired out to Peter Spillman, a wealthy farmer near Lake Mills. Working for him a little over two months, he began to lay a clever scheme to swindle his benefactor out of a large sum of money. He planned to get $8,750, but in some way he only secured $3,350. The operations of Boyd have been extensively published in Iowa and Minnesota papers. When he had secured financial assistance from Mr Spillman, he then asked to borrow his Overland car to go to Forest City. Then it was that he drew the $3,350 and lit out. Locating the automobile at Algona was the first heard of him since.

DES MOINES—Des Moines Masons will be hosts to three trainloads of Masons from Lu Lu temple at Philadelphia tomorrow. There will be 430 Shriners in the party, including the famous Lu Lu Shrine band of 75 pieces. Reservations have already been made for 5,000 Masons and their families at a picnic to be given at the state fair grounds on Friday afternoon in honor of the visitors.

MASON CITY—Today Mason City furnished 37 Italians for the Italian war. This bunch were employed at the Lehigh cement plant. They left for Des Moines, going from there to New York and then on to Naples, where they will enlist. Several companies have left this city during the past four weeks for the Italian army. The scarcity is hardly being felt as this year it has not been difficult for the companies employing large numbers of men, to get all the foreign labor they wanted.

DES MOINES—Another test of the constitutionality of the workmen's compensation act was started when Senator John T. Clarkson, attorney for the miners, brought suit against three mines for injuries to employes. All of the operators will allege that their companies were not operating under the provisions of the act at the time of the various accidentals. The amount involved is $25,000.

MAPLETON—The safes of the Green Bay Lumber company and the Bowman Lumber company were broken into last night. Thirteen dollars was taken from the Green Bay safe and $17 from the Bowman safe. No damage was done to the safes.

IOWA CITY COUNCILS HAVE RIGHT TO DIM DAZZLING AUTO RAYS

Des Moines Commission Will Regulate Powerful Headlight Nuisance.

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—The use of powerful or dazzling headlights on motor vehicles operated on the streets of Des Moines, will be regulated by an ordinance which was adopted late yesterday afternoon by the city council. The measure was presented by Safety Superintendent Mitchell and was passed by a unanimous vote after the rules had been suspended.

In accordance with the statutes, the ordinance will become effective in 10 days. Councilman Mitchell drafted it after City Solicitor Carlson had given his opinion that the council has the right to regulate headlights on automobiles.

Mr. Mitchell asserts that a majority of the automobiles in Des Moines are now equipped with dimmers, particularly the high grade cars. There are a large number of machines, however, equipped with headlights that are dazzling in the extreme, Mitchell says:

The term "motor vehicle" as used in the ordinance means any vehicle propelled by other than muscular power except traction engines, fire vehicles and engines, police patrol, vehicles and ambulances, emergency repair vehicles of public service companies, street cars and others as run only upon tracks or rails.

IOWA LAKES SHORT OF FISH, SAYS GAME WARDEN

Lake Okoboji, Ia., July 31.—The Okoboji Protective association held its annual meeting Monday afternoon at the Central pavilion. Officers were elected as follows: George McCarthy, of Emmetsburg, president; E. Herchel, of Davenport, vice president, and W. L. Mendenhall, of Hanover, N. Y., secretary and treasury. Professor Wiley, of Iowa State university, was elected editor of the Bulletin for the next year, and John Carpenter and T. Heffelfinger, of Des Moines, were chosen directors.

After the election of officers, State Game Warden Hinshaw spoke on the work that has been done by his department during the past year. He said that Iowa doesn't keep its lakes and rivers properly stocked with game fish, according to the capacity of its waters, and that gar, buffalo and bull heads should be completely exterminated, as they destroy the other fish.

ATLANTIC SOUTHERN MAN ADMITS USING SUBTERFUGE

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—How financiers who put $175,000 in actual cash into the property of the Atlantic Southern railroad within a month, issued bonds and stocks to the extent of $484,000, was related by De Boo Weber vice president of the road, in his testimony before the Iowa railroad commission here this afternoon.

When asked by Clifford Thorne chairman of the commission, whether the stock was actually issued for cash, Mr. Webber replied that legally it was but really it was not. He explained that Robert Aberles, of St. Louis owner of the property, subscribed for the stock and gave the company his check for $200,000, and that the railroad then gave him back its check for the property.

"All this was simply to comply with the law. There is no use in my telling you anything different because that is the fact of the matter," said Mr. Weber.

The state is seeking to force the owners of the line to operate it, but the owners wish to abandon it and are opposing the state's action on the ground that the line does not pay. The taking of testimony closed this evening and general arguments will be presented by the attorneys tomorrow.

START COURT FIGHT TO TEST LIQUOR STATUTE

Mason City, Ia., July 31.—A big legal battle will be staged in this city Saturday next, and the initial hearing will be before Justice Kimball. Where it will end no one knows. Proceedings were started today by Attorney A. L. Rule, of the firm of Blythe, Markley, Smith & Rule. On July 3, on warrants issued by Justice Kimball, a search was made of the Wells-Fargo and American Express companies, the Great Western and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul depots. It was a fruitful raid and 119 barrels of beer were seized and now occupy a greater part of the basement of the court house. Monday night a second raid was instituted and a large quantity secured. Now the parties to whom it was consigned want their beer. The railway companies propose they shall get it and the express companies think likewise, and behind these are the breweries and the purpose will be to test out the liquor laws of Iowa to know just how strong or faulty they may be.

SHAPE NOSE FROM FLESH OF INJURED MAN'S ARM

Council Bluffs, Ia., July 31.—After narrowly escaping dangerous infection and suffering constantly for more than three weeks, Henry Gerber, owner of the saloon at 101 South Main street, is on the streets for the first time within the period mentioned, wearing a brand new nose, replacing the one that had been bitten off by a man who had been denied a drink when he entered the saloon in an intoxicated condition. The new nose has been shaped from the flesh of Gerber's left arm above the elbow.

The skin was removed from a portion of Gerber's arm and the member was then bound firmly to the spot where the nose had been. Tubes were inserted to permit breathing and to maintain nostrils, and for three weeks the injured man was compelled to remain in that painful position. Nature responded willingly. The flesh of the mutilated nose and the tissues of the arm united firmly, and then enough of the living flesh was cut out to be shaped into a new nose.

The operation was in every way successful. The excised flesh is still livid and angry looking, but will require little more paring and carving from the surgeon's knife. New skin is forming and is being grafted upon the raw tissues, and when the job is finished there, will apparently be no disfigurement.

DES MOINES OFFICERS WAGE WAR ON BOOTLEGGERS

Des Moines, Ia., July 29.—An aggressive campaign is being waged against bootleggers by Chief of Police Crawford. His special liquor cleanup brigade has been instructed to file charges in federal court against all prisoners arrested for selling liquor, and to take steps to have the mulct tax attached to property where there have been convictions for bootlegging.

The provision of law that makes this tax possible goes out of existence January 1. Crawford wants it applied to the limit while it lasts.

GOLDTHORPE CHILD WAS DROWNED; BODY TAKEN FROM CREEK

Long Search For Missing Boy Ended When Sheriff Makes Gruesome Find.

Mason City, Ia., July 30.—The body of Cecil Goldthorpe, the lost 2-year-old boy, was found in Willow creek last night three miles below where his hat was found. He had been missing since 11 o'clock Friday.

A live pig was placed in a sack and thrown into the stream, and it was found that after it was drowned it floated rapidly down. This encouraged search further down than had been made before. Sheriff March and Deputy Knapp found the body. It was a great consolation to the parents even to find the dead body.

ROCKWELL CITY WINS STATE REFORMATORY

State Board of Control Decides on Location of Institute For Women.

Des Moines, Ia., July 30.—The state board of control yesterday voted to build the new women's reformatory authorized by the 1913 legislature, at Rockwell City, 96 miles northwest of Des Moines.

The tract of land to be used has not been determined upon. There are three pieces of property of 160 acres each which are under consideration. The selection will depend upon the getting of a switch to the property.

The Rockwell City Commercial club is behind the boosters who have been trying to land the new state institution for that city. The organization will co-operate in meeting the conditions under which the state will purchase the property in question.

The state will spend $35,000 to $40,000 in purchasing a site for the women's reformatory. The last legislature appropriated $50,000 for the construction of buildings.

PREHISTORIC QUESTION PERPLEXES LOGAN PERSONS

Logan, Ia., July 30.—"Did the prehistoric race inhabiting this section of the country play ball?" is a question in Harrison county.

A. E. Kellogg has a number of interesting geological specimens at his home near Logan—among them is a stone ball the size of a league ball. At the foot of the mound on which the Jesse Burkholder farm home was erected, a stone ball the size of a league ball was found east of Woodbine a number of years ago. A three-inch stone ball was unearthed a number of feet below the surface of the ground at the T. L. Canfield brickyard, northeast of Woodbine, and Frank Peckenpaugh found a five-inch granite ball at the limestone quarry adjoining Logan on the east.

As neither tradition nor history offers any explanation for the use of the stone balls, baseball enthusiasts are not a little puzzled as to the probable nature of the game played by the first families along the Missouri river and its tributaries.

LOGAN YOUTH WILL COMPETE IN STATE ORATORICAL MEET

Logan, Ia., July 30.—Andrew Clausen, a former Omaha boy, but of late on the farm near Logan, has just been notified by Harry Joy, county chairman, that he won in the essay contest and will have the honor of representing Harrison county at the state fair at Des Moines, all expenses paid for the round trip.

Andrew Clausen is a member of the senior class of the Logan high school and has won prizes in contests at the short course.
